The facts of the matter are these: Thirteen years ago Henry Fitzroy, eldest son of Lord Augustus Fitzroy, fell in love with a woman known as "Kate Cook." She was handsome and stylish in person, and her matured charms were quite sufficient to captivate the youth of twenty-three. Unknown to his father, who was Equerry to the Queen, he married her. Most chronicles of the peerage ignored the marriage. Others described the bride as the daughter of John Walsh and the widow of "Mr. Smith."

In 1882 the bridegroom's social position changed. Lord Augustus Fitzroy succeeded his brother as seventh Duke of Grafton. Henry Fitzroy became Earl of Euston. The widow of "Mr. Smith" became Countess Euston and the future Duchess of Grafton. But troubles had already come between her and her husband. They separated by mutual agreement. No fault being proved against the Countess since her marriage, the Earl in vain sought an excuse for divorce. The mysterious "Mr. Smith" has now appeared and the excuse is found.

If the case fails Kate Cook will be Duchess of Grafton, and the title created for a mistress of a King will be borne by a woman of the town.

The Duke of Grafton was made Knight of the Garter a little over a year ago. He succeeded his brother, who died in the spring of 1882. The late Duke was sixty-three years old and was member of Parliament for Thetford from 1847 until 1852. In 1858 he married Mary Louisa Anne, daughter of the third Lord Ashburton, and in 1863 succeeded his father as sixth duke. The first Duke of Grafton acted at the coronation of James II. as Lord High Constable of England, and commanded that monarch's forces in the action of Philip's Norton Lane. Afterward he espoused the cause of the Prince of Orange and received a fatal wound while storming the city of Cork in 1690. The third duke was an eminent statesman, who was Secretary of State and Prime Minister of England in 1771. The present duke was born in 1821

The Pleuro-Pneumonia Bill.

The United States House passed the the Pleuro-Pneumonia bill by a vote of 155 yeas to 127 nays. The bill as passed provides that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall organize a bureau of animal industry and appoint a chief thereof, whose duty it shall be to investigate and report on the number, value and condition of the domestic animals of the United States, and also the causes of contagious and communicable diseases among them, and the means for the prevention and cure of the same. He is authorized to appoint two competent agents, whose duty it shall be to report upon the best methods of treating, transporting and caring for animals, and the means to be adopted for the suppression and extirpation of contagious pleuro-pneumonia.

The bill further provides that the Commissioner of Agriculture may expend so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be required in paying for the animals it is deemed necessary to slaughter, and in such disinfection and other means as may be needed to extirpate disease. The authorities of the State shall pay one-half of the expense of the animals it is deemed necessary to slaughter, and one-half of the cost of disinfection and care of the herds of cattle. It prohibits the transportation from one State to another of any live stock affected with any contagious or infectious disease, and provides for the prosecution of any person violating this prohibition. The sum of $250,000 is appropriated to carry into effect the provisions of this bill.

FATHER:

Loss of sleep sustained in the anxiety spent in nursing the little darling so slowly and pitifully wasting away by the drainage upon its system from the effects of teething, nearly unfits you for business. We suggest that if you will try a bottle of Dr. Bigger's Southern Remedy you will have a panacea for all bowel troubles, and loss of sleep and sickness will be unknown in your house. This, with a bottle of Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein, combining the stimulating expectorant principle of the sweet gum with the healing one of the mullein, for the cure of croup, whooping cough, colds and consumption, presents a little MEDICINE CHEST no household should be without for the speedy relief of sudden and dangerous attacks of the lungs and bowels. His Son's Advice.

I have been troubled for over twelve years with a weakness of the kidneys and bladder, which the doctors said was diabetes. I could not at times stand up, and would have to continually use the urinal both day and night with intense pains in my back and sides; there was brick-d st deposits in my water. I could not rest well or lie easily in bed in any posture. I was at that time employed by the Maine Central railroad, and had to give up work for a time. Fearing that it would sooner or later turn to that dreaded Bright's disease, I called in my son in Lewiston, who is in the drug business, and after consulting with him as to my case, he advised me to use Hunt's Remedy, as he knew of so many successful cures that it had made in Lewiston and vicinity. I at once commenced using it, and began to improve. I had less pain in my back and sides, my water was passed naturally with less color and no pain, and after using several bottles found that my pains were all gone and the weakness of the kidneys and bladder were cured, and I have no trouble with them now, and can attend to my business; and for one of my years I am enjoying good health, and thanks to Hunt's Remedy for it, and I consider it a duty and pleasure to recommend so good a medicine as Hunt's Remedy, and I have taken pains to recommend it to others in this vicinity.

You are at liberty to publish this acknowledgment, hoping it may be the means of helping suffering humanity.

MARY'S LITTLE LAMB.

HOW HER OVERCOAT WAS TAKEN OFF AND WHAT WAS DONE WITH IT.

Shearing the Sheep in the Olden Time in the Green Mountain State.

[From the Century Magazine.]

Wool-growing became the leading industry of the Green Mountain State. Almost every Vermont farmer was a shepherd, and had his half hundred or hundreds or thousands of grade sheep or full bloods dotting the ferny pastures of the hill country or the broad levels of the Champlain valley, rank with English grasses. From old Fort Dummer to the Canada line one could hardly get beyond the sound of the sheep's bleat unless he took to the great woods, and even there he was likely enough to hear the intermittent jingle of a sheep bell chiming with the songs of the hermit and wood thrushes, or to meet a flock driven clattering over the pebbles of a mountain road; for a mid-wood settler had his little herd of sheep, to which he gave in summer the freedom of the woods, and which took—alas for the owner's crops—the freedom of the meadow and grain patches, and were sheltered from the chill of winter nights in a frame barn bigger than their master's log-house.

In June, when the May-yeaned lambs were skipping in the sunshine that had warmed the pools and streams till the bull-frogs had their voices in tune, the sheep were gathered from the pastures and driven over the dusty roads to the pens beside the pools on the tapped mill-flumes and washed amid a pother of of rushing waters, shouts of laughter of of men and boys, and discordant, plaintiff bleats of parted ewes and lambs.

A fortnight or so later came the great event of the shepherd's year, the shearing, for which great preparation was made within house and barn. The best the farm afforded must be provided for the furnishing of the table; for the shearers were not ordinary farm laborers, but mostly farmers and farmers' sons, and as well to do as their employer, who was likely enough to shear, in his turn, for them. Whoever possessed the skill of shearing a sheep thought it not beneath him to ply his well-paid handicraft in all the country round. For these the fatted calf was killed and the green peas and strawberries were picked. The barn floor and its overhanging scaffolds were carefully swept, the stables were littered with clean straw, the wool-bench was set up, and the reel full of twine was made ready in its place. Those were merry days in the old gray barns that were not too fine to have swallows' holes in their gables, moss on their shingles, and a fringe of hemp, mayweed, and smartweed about their jagged underpinning. There was jesting and the telling of merry tales from morning till night, and bursts of laughter that scared the swallows out of the cobwebbed roof-peak and the sitting hen from her nest in the left-over hay-mow. Neighbors called to get a taste of the fun and the cider, to see how the flock "evridged" and to engage hands for their own shearing. At noonning, after the grand dinner, while the older men napped on the floor, wool-bench or scaffold, with their heads pillowed on soft places, the young fellows had trials of strength at "pulling stick" or lifting "stiff legs." The skillful wool-tyer was rarer than the skillful shearer, and in much demand in his own and neighboring townships. He tied the fleeces quickly and compactly, showing the best on the outside, but with no clod of dirty locks in the middle; for in those days wool had its place and dirt its place, but the fleece was not their common place. The catcher was an humble but not unimportant member of the force. He must be alert and with a sheep ready for each shearer as wanted, and was never to take up a sheep by the wool, but with his left arm underneath, just behind the fore legs, and his right hand grasping a hind leg. And there was the boy to pick up locks, discarding the dirty ones, which were swept outdoors. One's back aches as he remembers this unpleasant duty of his boyhood, when he was scoffed by shearers and scolded by the wool tyer, and often had the added labor of carrying the wool to its storage. Fourteen fleeces tied up in a blanket was the load, which, if they had been of nowadays weight, would have burdened a strong man; but a five-pound fleece was a heavy one then. I have never been present at one of the modern public shearings, which comes before the swallows do, while winter is still skirmishing with spring, and are celebrated in the local papers; but I doubt if they are such hearty and enjoyable seasons as the old-fashioned shearings were.

The wool-buyers scoured the country at or after shearing time, and drove their bargains with the farmers. The small lots of wool were hauled in bulk to some central point of shipment, while the larger clips were sacked on the grower's premises. The sack was suspended through a hole of its own diameter in an upper floor and a few fleeces were thrown in, when the packer lowered himself into it and placed and trod the wool as it was passed to him till he had trod his way to the top. Then the sacks were lowered, sewed, weighed, marked, and went their way to market.

The "tag-locks" and pulled wool were mostly worked up in the neighboring small factories into stocking-yarn, flannel, and blankets for the farmer's use, and into the then somewhat famous "Vermont gray," which was the common cold-weather outer clothing of New England male farm folk. Readers of Thoreau will remember that he mentions it more than once, and thought it good enough wear for him. The Yankee farmer wore it "to mill an' to meetin'," and the young men of forty years ago were not ashamed to appear in such sheep's clothing at the paring-bee or the ball.

A VERY SAD STORY.

Showing What Rum will do to Degrade and Destroy Men.

John B. Gough tells the following: "A minister of the gospel told me one of the most thrilling incidents I have heard in my life. A member of his congregation came home for the first time in his life intoxicated, and his boy met him upon the doorstep, clapping his hands and exclaiming, 'Papa has come home!' He seized the boy by the shoulder, swung him around, staggered and fell in the hall. That minister said to me, 'I spent the night in that house. I went out, bared my brow that the night air might fall upon it and cool it. I walked up and down the hill. There was the child, dead! there was his wife in strong convulsions, and he asleep.' A man about thirty years of age asleep, with a dead child in the house, having a mark upon his temple where the corner of the marble steps had come in contact with the head as he swung him around, and a wife upon the bring of the grave! 'Mr. Gough,' said my friend, 'I cursed the drink. He had told me that I must remain until he awoke, and I did.' When he awoke he passed his hand over his face and exclaimed, 'What is the matter? where am I? where is my boy?' 'You cannot see him.' 'Stand out of my way, I will see my boy.' To prevent confusion I took him to the child's bed, and as I turned down the the sheet and showed him the corpse he uttered a wild shriek, 'Ah, my child!' That minister said further to me, 'One year after that he was brought from the lunatic asylum to lie beside his wife in the grave, and I attended his funeral.' The minister of the gospel who told me that fact is to-day a drunken hostler in a stable in Boston. Now, tell me what rum will not do. It will debase, degrade, imbrute and damn everything that is noble, bright, glorious and God-like in a human being. There is nothing drink will not do that is vile, dastardly, cowardly, sneaking or hellish. Why are we not to fight till the day of our death?"

"THE ONLY MISGIVING I HAD when I left the cutter," says Lieut. Rhodes, the Gay Head hero, "was about my baby. You didn't know that I had one, did you? He is a bright little boy about two years old. His mother died some time ago, and as I left in the boat I called out to the captain to look out for him if anything happened to me."

TWO BOWERY PRIZE-FIGHTERS MADE a match for $200 and let "Funny" Cooke, an English buffer, hold the stakes. They neglected to hold Cooke. The consequence was that he sailed for England with the money, and the loser of the fight feels a flendish satisfaction in the discomfiture of the man who whipped him.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

IT DISCUSSES THE GREAT QUESTION OF THE DAY IN AN EARNEST MANNER.

A Little Bit of Sarcasm Indulged In—What Would Make Each Man Happy.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

"Gem'len," said Brother Gardner as the triangle sounded, "ebery day o' my life I h'ar complaints about our polly-tics, our religun, our skules, our society, our amusements an' our system of gov'-m't. Suntin' mus' be wrong wid our hull systém of existence. What am it? Dat am the queshun I propose to have discussed heah to-night in all its bearin's, an' I ax Sir Isaac Walpole to take de floah and lead off."

SIR ISAAC WALPOLE TOES THE MARK.

"I has reflected a heap on dis subjick," began the well-known orator as he slid off his splint-bottomed chair, "Eber since I war' ten y'ars ole I has felt dat sunthin' was wrong wid de way dis kentry was diskivered, settled up an' run. Jist what pertickler thing it was has puzzled me for ober sixty y'ars, but I has at las' got my mind made up. As a nashun we am too aspirin' an' ambishus. We want to git ahead too fast; we want to acquire wealth and power too quickly. I see an' feel it in myself an' all aroun' me. I orter be satisfied wid a six hundred dollar house an' lot, good rag carpet on de floors, cellar full of 'taters an' cabbage, an' fifty dollars hid in an oyster can whar' I kin find it in case of sickness, but I ain't. I want to go to de State Legislachur; I want a two-story house wid bay-windows; I want an electric doah-bell; I want a heap o' things dat I'm not likely to git. In my svarice an' ambishun I am liable to cheat Samuel Shin, swindle Waydown Bebee an' borry money from Judge Cadaver an never pay it back. I sigh, an' hanker, an' plan, an' scheme, an' de fust thing any of you knows I'll have chattel mortgages on your mules an' be climbin' ober your heads into offis."

JUDGE CADAVER'S THEORY.

"What's de matter wid dis kentry?" asked Judge Cadaver as he stood up and waved his arms around. "I contend dat de hull trubble rises from a gineral want ob confidence in each odder. You may begin at de head an' cum down to de foot. I help 'lect a President, an' yet I have no confidence in him. When I go to bed at night I can't feel ashured dat he won't sell de kentry out afore mawnin'. I wote for a Congressman, an' yet I can't trust him ten feet. If I wanted to borry ten dollars I wouldn't have confidence to believe dat de Guv'nor would lend it to me. On de one hand I know dat all de groceries am adulterated, an' on he odder hand all grocers exhibit a lack of confidence in me. If I want to borry an ax from Nelson Slabs he marks de handle fur fear I will steal it, an if Giveadam Jones wants to borry my coffee-mill I alyly remove de grindin' part to prevent him from stealin' de ideah to use in his comin' cider mill. Dis want of confidence am driftin' de kentry back inter barberism. Until de day arroves when I kin walk down to de Fust National Bank and borry two hundred dollars for thirty days widout gibin a note indorsed by a man worf twenty thousand dollars, you need not look fur dis kentry to prosper or progress."

IT IS LACK OF HARMONY.

"A house divided agin itself cannot stand," said Giveadam Jones, as his opinion was called for. "What ails dis kentry am de want of harmony. We am not eben agreed on de form of guv'-ment. We am split up into three or four polytical parties, a dozen religuns, half a dozen forms of society, an' goodness knows into how many different bands on nashunal queshuns. We am pullin' at boat eands of a wagon stuck in de mud. It seems harmonious to me to drap into a butcher shop an' pick out a ham an' tell de butcher I will call an' settle nex' week, but de butcher hangs de ham back on its peg an' remarks dat he can't possibly agree on de queshun. I am in harmony wid one church; Prof. Slyback am not in harmony wid anudder. I had made up my mind dat de Dimocratic party am called upon to save dis kentry; Pickles Smith would see de kentry sunk befo' he would vote anything but de Republican ticket. I contend dat an aristocracy will sooner or later bring about de downfall of de United States; Whalebone Howker argues dat an aristocracy will presarve it, kase if it wasn't presarved dar' wouldn't be any second-hand men to buy deir wo'n-out carpets. I tell you, gem'len, to presarve dis kentry we must vote de Dimocratic ticket, accept one brand of religun, patronize de circus an' fine ebery pusson $10 who won't hurrah on holidays.

LIVING TOO FAST.

"We are runnin' away wid de kentry," said the solemn voice of Waydown Bebee, as his name was called. "We am libin' too fast. Twenty y'ars ago I was satisfied with a two-roomed cabin an' a dollar a day. Now I has to have a two-story house an' twelve shillins a day. Wives who used to go ba'rfut six days a week to save deir shoes for the seventh now wear $8 bntes to mop in. De pusson who airns $10 per week mus' lib jist as good as de one who airns $20. Twenty y'ars ago de woman wid a diamond ring could boss a hull nayburhood. Now, when she tries to eben boss de sarvant gal de gal packs up her pack of diamonds an' quits de job widout waitin' to collect any leetle matter like $40 back salary. When I was a boy de man who bought a can of oysters was supposed to have bin left a legacy of fo'teen millyun dollars. Nowadays de poo' man's back-yard am kivered wid de empty cans.

"I kin see kign arter sign dat dis gen-erashun am speedin' along without thought or ear' of whar' it will bring up. Men who am hosin' 'taters to-day am nabobs to-morrer. Men who used to believe in savin' up fur a rainy day now scatter deir cash aroun' as if de sunshine nus' allus last. Whar' I used to be satisfied wid bean soup I now want ox-tail, an' dat's what ails de hull kentry, ye has got to slow up an' simmer down or de top-rail am gwine to give way an' gives us all a drap."

BROTHER GARDNER VINDICATED.

"Gem'len," said the President after various other members had proclaimed their opinions, "it am patent to all dat de kentry has an ailment, but we am not agreed as to de natur' of de disease nor de remedy to be used as a cure. In dis embarrassin' situashun I suggest dat we have patience an' continer to hope. While it seems sartin to a man holdin' down a cracker-box in a co'ner grocery dat de kentry won't hold together mo' dan two days longer onless he am 'lected constable or draws a prize in a lottery, we has managed somehow to dodge de dangers an' pull frew de narrer channels. It am my opinyun dat we kin go home an' go to bed widout fear dat we won't find at least half de kentry hangin' 'round heah to-morrer. We will now dismember."

An Iceberg Panorama.

The officers of the steamship Abyssinia, from Europe, report a fine display of icebergs. Early on the morning of March 2d, while it was yet dark, the drop in the temperature showed that icebergs were in the neighborhood. Extra men were placed on watch and the speed of the steamer reduced. Before daylight the ice came in sight, and during the entire day the passengers were treated to a magnificent ice panorama. The sun was bright and clear from an unclouded sky, and shone on the sides of the massive bergs with fine effect. The course of the ship lay to the south of the ice-mountains, and the reflection of the sun's rays from the trickling walls of ice made a spectacle matchless in many respects. About the ship were many broken fragments of ice, small in comparison with the main bergs from which they had broken, but big enough in themselves to form floating islands, over which the steamship was carefully guided.

At one time on the forenoon on the 2d a careful count showed as many as seventy icebergs within sight. They were of every conceivable shape, and on some were great peaks rising far above the mastheads of the steamer. A great crowd of gulls and sea birds of various sorts were flying from crag to crag of the icy islands, and their cries and calls could be distinctly heard. Great swashes could be heard now and then, as some of the bergs, growing top heavy from the melting of the subaqueous portions, suddenly turned over and rearranged its centre of gravity. In doing this it would perhaps strike another berg, and fragments of ice hundreds of tons in weight were broken off and floated away among the mass of frozen debris surrounding the main cluster of bergs. These sounds were kept up during the night of the 2d, but on the 3d the vessel came out again into clear water.

What he Found Out.

We found out lots of interesting things during the storms of last week. One was that an occurrence, of low barometrical pressure and the consequent prevalence of rain and east winds produces a singular effect upon the relations of the traveling public to the horse cars. An observant and philosophical conductor pointed out the fact, illustrating it with his own somewhat wide experience. "If I didn't know in any other way that it was a wet, chilly, disagreeable day, I should know it by noticing the way the women act. On wet days ten of them come out and signal me to stop the car on the wrong side of the crossings where one would do it on a fair day, and on this trip I have had four chase the the car and get on it between Cornhill and Boylston street, and then find out that it wasn't the one way they wanted. And everybody hasn't nothing but big bills in a wet day; in the last hour I've had to make change for a quarter's worth of tickets out of six five-dollar bills, and how I'm going to change the the next one I don't know." At this juncture a young woman came to the car door. "Does this car go to Cornhill?" she asked. "No, it don't," said the conductor; "we're going away from it as fast as we can." "Why didn't you say so before?" demanded the young woman snappishly as she descended the platform. "Well, I'm blowed," said the conductor as he rang the bell; "how should I know she wanted to go to Cornhill when she didn't say anything about it? But I s'pose it's the weather," he charitably added as he went in to take up fares.—Boston Journal.

He Went Into Politics.

"Good gracious," said the groceryman to the bad boy, "I am sorry for your pa, if he has got his head set on going into politics. I was in politics one year myself, and it has taken me five to get out and pay my debts, and now every ward politician owes me for groceries. You see, they come to me and wanted me to run for supervisor. They said I was just the man they wanted, a man with a large head, one who was a business man, and who would not kick at the expenditure of a few dollars when he could make a barrel of money. They said if I was on the board of supervisors I could be placed on a committee that handled the funds, and I could make the purchase of groceries and provisions for all the county institutions, the poor house, house of correction, insane asylum, hospitals, and everything, and I could buy them at my own store at my own price, and in two years I could be rich as any man in town. Well, I never had a proposition strike me so favorably, and I went in head over appetite. For a month I went around our ward night and day, spending money, and the politicians came to the store and traded when I was out, and had it charged, and when the caucus was held I only got one vote for supervisor, and I voted that myself. Well, the politicians tried to explain to me, but I bought a revolver, and they kept away. Do you know, the next day after the caucus I didn't have twenty dollars worth of groceries in the store, and the clerk was dying of lonesomeness?"—Peck's Sun.

A LONDON SENSATION.

ANOTHER HIGH LIFE SCANDAL IN ENGLAND.

The Earl of Grafton Attempts to Put Away His Wife—A Former Husband Appears.

Mayfair, a London society magazine, publishes the following: "Another celebrated case will be that of the gallant Earl of Euston, who will be the next Duke of Grafton. The Earl seeks to get rid of his wife. His contention is that the lady's first husband was alive when she became Countess of Euston, is now alive and can be produced. His appearance in the witness box will be highly dramatic, for the lady has seen him and declares she knows nothing about him. The approaching trial will rival the Tichborne case and be the sensation of the season."

The facts of the matter are these: Thirteen years ago Henry Fitzroy, eldest son of Lord Augustus Fitzroy, fell in love with a woman known as "Kate Cook." She was handsome and stylish in person, and her matured charms were quite sufficient to captivate the youth of twenty-three. Unknown to his father, who was Equerry to the Queen, he married her. Most chronicles of the peerage ignored the marriage. Others described the bride as the daughter of John Walsh and the widow of "Mr. Smith."

In 1882 the bridegroom's social position changed. Lord Augustus Fitzroy succeeded his brother as seventh Duke of Grafton. Henry Fitzroy became Earl of Euston. The widow of "Mr. Smith" became Countess Euston and the future Duchess of Grafton. But troubles had already come between her and her husband. They separated by mutual agreement. No fault being proved against the Countess since her marriage, the Earl in vain sought an excuse for divorce. The mysterious "Mr. Smith" has now appeared and the excuse is found.

If the case fails Kate Cook will be Duchess of Grafton, and the title created for a mistress of a King will be borne by a woman of the town.

The Duke of Grafton was made Knight of the Garter a little over a year ago. He succeeded his brother, who died in the spring of 1882. The late Duke was sixty-three years old and was member of Parliament for Thetford from 1847 until 1852. In 1858 he married Mary Louisa Anne, daughter of the third Lord Ashburton, and in 1863 succeeded his father as sixth duke. The first Duke of Grafton acted at the coronation of James II. as Lord High Constable of England, and commanded that monarch's forces in the action of Philip's Norton Lane. Afterward he espoused the cause of the Prince of Orange and received a fatal wound while storming the city of Cork in 1690. The third duke was an eminent statesman, who was Secretary of State and Prime Minister of England in 1771. The present duke was born in 1821.

The Pleuro-Pneumonia Bill.

The United States House passed the the Pleuro-Pneumonia bill by a vote of 155 yeas to 127 nays. The bill as passed provides that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall organize a bureau of animal industry and appoint a chief thereof, whose duty it shall be to investigate and report on the number, value and condition of the domestic animals of the United States, and also the causes of contagious and communicable diseases among them, and the means for the prevention and cure of the same. He is authorized to appoint two competent agents, whose duty it shall be to report upon the best methods of treating, transporting and caring for animals, and the means to be adopted for the suppression and extirpation of contagious pleuro-pneumonia.

The bill further provides that the Commissioner of Agriculture may expend so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be required in paying for the animals it is deemed necessary to slaughter, and in such disinfection and other means as may be needed to extirpate disease. The authorities of the State shall pay one-half of the expense of the animals it is deemed necessary to slaughter, and one-half of the cost of disinfection and care of the herds of cattle. It prohibits the transportation from one State to another of any live stock affected with any contagious or infectious disease, and provides for the prosecution of any person violating this prohibition. The sum of $250,000 is appropriated to carry into effect the provisions of this bill.

FATHER:

Loss of sleep sustained in the anxiety spent in nursing the little darling so slowly and pitifully wasting away by the drainage upon its system from the effects of teething, nearly unfits you for business. We suggest that if you will try a bottle of Dr. Bigger's Southern Remedy you will have a panacea for all bowel troubles, and loss of sleep and sickness will be unknown in your house. This, with a bottle of Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein, combining the stimulating expectorant principle of the sweet gum with the healing one of the mullein, for the cure of croup, whooping cough, colds and consumption, presents a little MEDICINE CHEST no household should be without for the speedy relief of sudden and dangerous attacks of the lungs and bowels. Ask your druggist for them. Manufactured by Walter A. Taylor, proprietor Taylor's Premium Cologne, Atlanta, Ga.

Dr. S. B. Brittan says: "As a rule physicians do not by their professional methods build up the female constitution, and they a lmost cure the diseases to which it is always liable in our variable climate and under our imperfect civilization. Special remedies are often required to restore organic harmony and to strengthen the enfeebled powers of womanhood, and for most of these we are indebted to persons outside of the medical profession. Among the very best of these remedies I assign a prominent place to Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

His Son's Advice.

I have been troubled for over twelve years with a weakness of the kidneys and bladder, which the doctors said was diabetes. I could not at times stand up, and I would have to continually use the urinal both day and night, with intense pains in my back and sides; there was brick-dust deposits in my water. I could not rest well or lie easily in bed in any posture. I was at that time employed by the Maine Central railroad, and had to give up work for a time. Fearing that it would sooner or later turn to that dreaded Bright's disease, I called in my son in Lewiston, who is in the drug business, and after consulting with him as to my case, he advised me to use Hunt's Remedy, as he knew of so many successful cures that it had made in Lewiston and vicinity. I at once commenced using it, and began to improve. I had less pain in my back and sides, my water was passed naturally with less color and no pain, and after using several bottles found that my pains were all gone and the weakness of the kidneys and bladder were cured, and I have no trouble with them now, and can attend to my business; and for one of my years I am enjoying good health, and thanks to Hunt's Remedy for it, and I consider it a duty and pleasure to recommend so good a medicine as Hunt's Remedy, and I have taken pains to recommend it to others in this vicinity.

You are at liberty to publish this acknowledgment, hoping it may be the means of helping suffering humanity.

The Testimony of a Physician.

James Beecher, M. D., of Sigourney, Iowa, says: "For several years I have been using Cough Balsam, called Dr. Wm. Hall Balsam for the Lungs, and in almost every case through my practice I have had entire success. I have used and prescribed hundreds of bottles since the days of my army practice (1863), when I was surgeon of Hospital No. 7, Louisville, Ky."

FROM THE CRADLE TO THE GRAVE.

There lies across the mother's knee,
And gathered in her hand,
A little robe of puffs and lace,
With an embroider'd band,
I see her smile, I hear her sing
A low, sweet lullaby;
And oft I see a thought of joy
Light up her bright blue eye;
It is a robe for her dear child
To be christen'd in!

There lies across the mother's knee,
And gather'd in her hand,
A silken robe, with puffs of lace,
And an embroidered band.
'Tis white, and like a cloud at eve,
That floats across the sky.
But oh, I hear the mother grieve
And see a tear drop in.
It is a robe for her dear child,
To be wedded in.

There lies across the mother's knee,
And gathered in her hand,
A robe of softest wool—not it;
Has no christening band.
And on her cheeks, so wan and pale,
The mother's tears I see,
And hear her pray, Lord, give me strength!
Oh, give Thy strength to me!
It is a robe for her dear child.

Ethel's Husband

Ethel Vane was a young beauty of eighteen—a beauty of the most radiant blonde type, with eyes that seemed like liquid wells of blue light, wavy hair of spun gold, and a complexion like a freshly-opened oleander. She had a neat little fortune in her own right, and she had a very clear and well-defined idea of doing what she pleased with it. Miss Eudocia Eames was a middle-aged second cousin, who had more gentility than income, and who eked out the latter by acting in the capacity of chaperon and companion to the saucy beauty, giving advice which Ethel never took, and objecting on principle to every gentleman whom Ethel fancied.

But one day Miss Vane entered her relative's presence with very rosy cheeks and a deep sparkle in her eyes which Eudocia had never seen there before.

"Miss Eudocia," she said, "I am engaged to be married."

"Are you?" said Miss Eudocia, with a little gasp, as if she were swallowing castor oil.

"To Mr. Harold North."

"My goodness!" cried Miss Eudocia. "Why, it isn't three weeks since you were first introduced to him."

"Oh, that's nothing," said saucy Ethel. "I made up my mind that I liked him in three days."

"I think you are running a great risk, Ethel," said Eudocia Eames. "I should never marry a man that I didn't know all about."

"Is that what has kept you from matrimony all these years?" said Ethel Vane, mischievously.

Miss Eames tossed her head, and the tips of her cheek-bones and the end of her nose became a degree more roseate than usual.

"Well," said she, "of course you know your own business best; and I only hope you will never live to regret this precipitancy."

But Ethel married Harold North in less than six weeks more.

"I never could reconcile myself to such a rash step," said Miss Eames.

"Oh, well," said Ethel, "there seems to be no occasion that you should."

"You'll live to repent it," persisted Miss Eames, waxing venomous under the barbed sting of her pretty young cousin's words.

"Oh, no; I shall not," laughed Ethel.

But in spite of this war of words, the young people had scarcely settled down after the honeymoon, before Miss Eames came to visit them, with a fearful array of Saratoga trunks, bandboxes, and parcels strapped up in brown paper. Ethel ran to the gate to welcome her.

"I am so glad you come just now, dear Miss Eudocia," said she, brightly. "The roses are all in bloom, and Eden Villa is at its best. Wasn't it nice of Harold to engage it ready furnished for the season—servants, carriages, horses and all? And he can go in and out of the city every day, and I'm working a pair of slippers for him on the sly; and there's such a delicious little cascade down in the ravine, and a fernery among the rocks, and a little lilac-and-gold boat on the river—that I can row myself—hardly bigger than a scallop shell. Do come in, and I'll ring for some tea, and you'll have time for a nice long nap before Harold comes home."

And the bride led Miss Eudocia Eames triumphantly into a pretty little apartment, all gumbled rugs and silver, with a white velvet carpet, windows draped with muslin and pink ribbons, and a tiny conservatory opening out of it.

"And are you happy?" said Miss Eames, interrogatively.

"Oh, I am the happiest girl in all the wide world," said Ethel.

Mr. North came home to dinner presently—a dark-browed, coarse-looking man, with one of those mysteriously handsome faces which inspire all school-girls with the idea that there must be some secret chapter in his life. But he made himself very agreeable, and Miss Eudocia began to relent in her opinion of him.

The next day she found Ethel in an elaborate piece of worsted work in the pink-and-silver dressing-room, when the maid knocked at the door.

"Please, ma'am," said Phebe, in a perturbed manner, "she will come in."

And she won't send up her card! And she won't wait in the little green reception-room for me to go up to my mistress! And please, ma'am, here she is on the stairs now!"

"Phebe," said Miss Eames, "what on earth do you mean?"

At the same minute Ethel North came softly in from an opposite door, and found herself faced by a tall apparition in black, with a dusty crape veil, haggard eyes, and hair originally black as a raven's wing, but now thickly streaked with silver.

"Ah!" said she, as Ethel looked at her with surprised blue eyes, "so it's you, is it, that have married my husband?"

"Married your husband!"

Ethel could only gasp out the words after her in breathless amazement.

"Yes!" uttered the other woman, with a chuckle of malicious satisfaction. "But don't think that you are to keep him, in spite of your blue eyes, and yellow hair, and pretty pink cheeks. I was pretty once, in the days that are past. I have the first right to him, and I mean to have him. I've followed him half over the world, and I've traced him out at last. Where is he? I say, where is he?"

Ethel looked at Miss Eudocia, and shrank behind her like a frightened deer.

"He is in the city," said Miss Eudocia, bewildered and hesitating. "He has not returned yet."

"Then here I wait until he does return," said the woman, seating herself upon one of the pink damask chairs.

"Yes, you may well stare at my rags; but it is his fault. He can dress you, you pitiful doll-faced thing," with a jerk of her head toward Ethel; "in silks and jewels, while I am shabby and neglected. But never mind; we shall see what the law says to this. A man can't have two wives. I'll wait—yes, I'll wait."

She laughed derisively as she spoke.

Ethel caught at Miss Eudocia's hand.

"Oh, come away!" she faltered, with trembling voice and changing color. "I—I am afraid of that woman."

And together they took refuge in the library beyond, locking the door to bar themselves effectually from all intrusion.

"Miss Eudocia," whispered Ethel, as pale as a ghost, "what does it mean?"

"It means, my poor child, that you have been cheated and deceived!" groaned Miss Eudocia. "Didn't I tell you so? Didn't I say you would live to regret your rash precipitancy? Oh, Ethel, I never liked that man's face! I always knew that there was a dark mystery in his life."

"What shall I do? Oh, dear! what can I do?" gasped Ethel; and Miss Eudocia could feel that her hands were as cold as ice.

"Get your things!" said the old maid. "Come home with me! Leave him forever!"

"But I love him!" wailed Ethel.

"More fool, you!" cried Miss Eudocia, fairly losing patience. "What! after he has trifled with you—deceived you—blighted your whole life? Come home with me, I say! Don't let him gloat over the ruin he has wrought!"

But even as Miss Eudocia pleaded with the young wife, who sat there pale and drooping as a broken lily, the blinds of the open window back of them were cautiously raised and a rubicund face looked in.

"Ladies," said the owner of the rubicund face, in a whisper, "don't be alarmed. There ain't no occasion. But is she here?"

"Who?" exclaimed Miss Eudocia, who was the first to recover her self-possession.

"Mrs. Nokes! Escaped from the Private Lunatic Asylum, three miles down the river, this evening. Tall lady, in black. Talks about her husband, as she thinks is married to another woman!"

"Yes," cried Ethel, springing to her feet. "Oh, yes—she is here. She is in the other room."

And she fell, hysterically laughing and sobbing, into Miss Eudocia's arms.

"Mum's the word, then," said the man with the rubicund countenance, disappearing from the window as miraculously as he appeared.

And presently they saw him escorting the tall lady in black down the carriage drive, talking to her, as they went, in the most persuasive manner possible.

"Oh, yes'm," said he, "He's at Doctor Fluhing's, waitin' for you. He's been there this long time, and we couldn't think where you was gone. He's thrown all the other wives overboard and come back to you. Oh, it's all right."

Ethel North looked at Miss Eudocia. Miss Eudocia looked at Ethel.

"What geese we have been!" cried Ethel, radiantly.

"But circumstances did look rather suspicious," said Miss Eames, blankly.

"I believe you're sorry yet that you can't say, 'I told you so,'" laughed Ethel, as gleeful as a child.

"No—I'm not, indeed," said Miss Eudocia, bursting into tears.

A NATIONAL DISASTER.

THE FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE IN KANSAS.

An Interesting Sketch of the Cattle Business of the West—How the Cattle are Kept.

To appreciate the imminence of the danger that threatens the cattle-growing industry of the West, the differences in the systems of handling cattle in Kansas, and their movements must be understood. These systems are the natural outgrowth of the climate of that State. Imagine the 100th meridian to be a sinuous line, winding southward in great bends across the State, at one point approaching the 99th meridian, at another pushing west close to the 101st. That imaginary line would divide the State into two zones. To the east lies the agricultural land; westward the great plains stretch to the foot hills of the Rocky Mountains. On these plains no agriculture, unless the lands are irrigated, is successful. They lie within the arid zone. The wheat lands of Kansas begin at the eastern edge of the great plains, and extend eastward to about St. Mary's on the Kansas Pacific Railroad. From there to the Missouri river lie the corn lands of the State. The bottom lands of the wheat belt are productive corn lands, but the uplands are strictly small-grain lands. Throughout the corn lands, cattle that are generally driven from the Western cattle ranges are fattened for the Eastern markets during the winter. During the summer such cattle as are held in the corn belt are close herded or are inclosed in pastures. In the wheat-growing districts the cattle are herded in the summer. During the winter they run to straw stacks, feed on the dry grass standing on the unbroken prairie, or graze on the wheat fields when the ground is dry. West of the 100th meridian the cattle roam at will. Kansas is on the border of the great plains, known among the cattle growers as "The Range."

The movement of young cattle in the States bordering on the Range is toward the west. The native cattle move to the east. In eastern Kansas, where cultivated grasses are grown and enormous crops of corn secured, the business of breeding high grade and thoroughbred calves has been added to that of fattening the cattle coming from the Range for market. There are many breeding herds in that portion of the State. Young bulls, singly, in pairs, and in car loads, are constantly being shipped to the cattle range of the plains to replace the losses incurred during Arctic-like winters. Many men are busy during the early fall and winter, in the eastern portion of the State, gathering young females into herds preparatory to driving them to the straw stacks of central Kansas, or to the great plains. There is a ceaseless movement of cattle to and fro in Kansas—fat cattle going east, young cattle going west. In New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, in fact, everywhere on the Range, young cattle from Kansas are to be found. When spring opens in the southern portion of the cattle range, the shipment of young bulls begins. Then the drive of the young females, that have been gathered into herds, sets in.

The breaking out of the foot and mouth disease, which is a highly contagious and generally fatal disorder, in a State from which cattle are distributed broadcast throughout the cattle region, is a disaster that may become national. If the disease makes its appearance in any herd on the Range the industry of cattle growing will be well nigh ruined. There the cattle wander at will. A diseased animal might not be discovered for weeks. It would walk for miles, poisoning the earth at every step. It would infect thousands of cattle, and they, roaming at pleasure from valley to valley, from plain to plain, would communicate the disease to other thousands. These half wild, diseased, feverish cattle could not be prevented from wandering. The disease, if controlled at all, has got to be stamped out in Kansas. Once it spreads westward beyond the land of inclosed pastures and close herding, it will be beyond the control of human agency.

The alarm felt by the stock growers who hold their cattle in the great plains is plainly indicated by the meeting of the Wyoming Stock Growers' Association who will take immediate steps to quarantine their range. Many of their herds are over 1,000 miles from the center of the disease in Kansas, but they are justifiably alarmed. They realize that enormous losses would speedily follow the walking of a single diseased animal over their range.

The great danger of the spread of the disease lies in the fact that men owning cattle that are dangerously near the infected herds, and that may be diseased but have not reached the febrile stage of the disorder, will endeavor to protect their property by driving them westward or by shipping them to Eastern markets. The Kansas Legislature should take prompt and heroic action at once. There is no known cure for the disease. All infected animals should be killed and buried. The ground they have been feeding on should be burned over, and plowed. If Kansas is unable to cope with the disease through a lack of money the national aid should be extended. If this disease is not speedily stamped out in Kansas it will probably spread to the great plains, and will also be carried to the stock yards at Kansas City, and from there distributed throughout the eastern Mississippi States. This disease may easily become a national disaster, and money should not be spared in the efforts now to be made to control it. FRANK WILKERSON.

Notes of a Sermon.

"Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," (Acts, 1., 8) was Dr. Hall's text Sunday morning. Among the notable sentences of the sermon were:

"There are questions which it is wise for us to put off, as far as an answer is concerned."

"Original power belongs to God, but there are forms of power which His creatures can call into action."

"You would all agree that the minister should preach the word with all boldness, but are there not some of you who think your religion is a matter between your Maker and yourself, and the less you say about it the better? If you think this is a matter of divine teaching I say to you, No."

"The servants of God are equal to the burdens laid upon them."

"If you have been truly brought to discipleship you will always be hungry for more truth."

"We Protestants agree in stigmatizing the unscriptural opus operatum teachings of Romanists, but I put it to you if we Protestants are not in danger of falling into an opus operatum doctrine in our own line that is just as mischievous? You say you hear a sermon every Sunday, and I say to you, what of it? What have you gained?"

"Real healthy appetite does not lead a man to turn away from food because food of the same kind has been served to him before. What if you have heard a sermon of the same kind before?"

"Church fellowship has been abused and counterfeited. Men have even taken the ministry as a means of making a living and getting on in the world; but is that an argument in favor of the right use of church fellowship?"

"I wonder if there have not been church members who have taken and have been known to take downward steps one after another, and have gone to ruin? Who can say: My brethren never once spoke a kindly word of warning."

"Reactions commonly go a little too far. In the reaction against various doctrines we, as Protestants, have been apt to make too little of the sacraments."

"Most of you have been baptized. You would not rob a fellow man. Do you rob God of what you have solemnly vowed to render to Him from day to day?"

"No man can be sure that he is not in danger of morbid feeling in some direction."

"Divine power is always ready to be put into operation if we will keep the channels ready."

"You may take a sheet of paper and fill it with lines of ciphers, but they amount to nothing till you put the one at the beginning. Numbers in a church are idle unless the spirit of God leads them."

"The use of great quantities of quack medicines is proof of widespread disease or apprehension of evil."

"Ask yourselves if you have not been living below your privileges."

The Nisero's Captive Crew.

The captain of the steamer Nisero has arrived in London, and will have an audience with Earl Granville. The Rajah of Tenom asks £62,000 ransom for the crew, the banishment of the rival Rajahs, and the declaration that Tenom is free from the Dutch. The Nisero was wrecked on the west coast of Acheen, Sumatra, on Nov. 12, while on a voyage from Sourobaya to Singapore. The vessel was looted by the subjects of the Rajah of Tenom, and the crew, consisting of twenty-five men, among whom was an American, were taken captive. Late in November the British gunboat Pegasus visited the Acheen coast to give aid to the captive crew, but it withdrew when the Rajah announced that he would put all the captives to death if the gunboat fired a single shot. In December the Dutch sent out an expedition from Padang to rescue the crew. The expedition effected a landing at Tenom on Jan. 7, and the land and naval forces bombarded and burned the Rajah's capital and destroyed several villages. But the captives had been removed to the interior, and the Rajah refused all the proffers of ransom made by the Dutch. There was believed to be little prospect that the lives of the crew would be spared; but it seems the Rajah has been holding them with the hope of exacting an exorbitant ransom.

A YOUNG Indiana woman was "frightened into convulsions by going into a dimly lighted room which she thought unoccupied and there seeing a young man of the family throwing his arms wildly about in the effort to put on his overcoat." The contortions of the average Indiana man while putting on a coat would frighten a railroad train off onto the first switch it could find.

IT is stated that Mr. Herman is having a sign painted which will read: "This elephant is stuffed."

OUR GREAT WAGS.

How a European Editor Turned the Tables on Larry Jerome.

When Mr. Larry Jerome was in Nice some years ago he didn't confine himself to painting the town red and astonishing the natives. Among the Americans who were in the city at the same time were Mr. Mackey, the representative American millionaire, and the talented proprietor of a famous newspaper. While looking around for a target for one of his practical jokes Mr. Jerome's eagle eye espied a piece of cheap jewelry in a shop window. He paid a franc for it, put it into a handsome case and sent it to the newspaper editor with the compliments of Mr. Mackey.

"Here's a nice affair!" exclaimed his friend as Jerome met him an hour later.

"What's the matter?" inquired the joker. "Anybody dead?"

"Dead! No, but somebody will be, if I am to be insulted in this way. Just look at this jewel that Mackey has sent me. He wants to subsidize me by offering me bribes."

Mr. Jerome took up the jewel, and immediately uttered an exclamation of surprise.

"Goodness gracious!" said he. "That's the $15,000 gem I've been wishing I could buy! How fortunate you are, old boy. Mackey must think an awful lot of you to send you such a valuable present."

"I'll send it back to him," said his friend. "No man can purchase me, and I'll let him know it."

"My dear boy," urged Jerome, "that would never do. Mr. Mackey is a very kindly gentleman, and I am sure that he was actuated to this princely generosity by his disinterested regard for you. Don't send the jewel back, for you will only hurt his feelings."

Mr. Jerome's eloquence prevailed, and it was not until the editor met Mr. Mackey and thanked him for his magnificent gift that the joke leaked out.

The editor determined upon revenge, and the opportunity soon presented itself. A number of French naval officers had shown Mr. Jerome marked attention, and as an evidence of his appreciation he purchased a case of the finest Turkish tobacco and a number of delicately carved meerschaums and dispatched the handsome presents to the man-of-war, which lay in the harbor. The editor intercepted the box on its journey by bribing the expressman, and after removing the contents, filled it with the rankest tobacco purchasable, and threw in a number of old clay pipes.

Mr. Jerome was never able to explain the matter, and to this day is an object of intense hatred to every officer in the French navy who has been told the story of his supposed outrageous conduct.—New York Journal.

Horace Greeley's Boyhood.

Ben. P. Poore, in his Reminiscences, thus speaks of Horace Greeley: Horace Greeley's personal appearance was always a subject of remark from his boyhood. Rollin C. Mallary, a member of Congress from Vermont, who was an able champion of the American System, used to narrate a visit of his to the printing office of a country newspaper at Poultney, Vt., his place of residence. His attention was attracted to a young compositor, who was rather awkwardly "sticking types," and who, though full grown, was evidently the youngest apprentice in the office. His legs ran a good deal more than "a feet" through his pantaloons, the sleeves of his coat scarcely reached below his elbows, his hair was very white and flaxen, and he was, on the whole, in the aggregate, taken separately and together, the greenest looking specimen of humanity we ever looked at, and this is saying a good deal, for "we keeps a looking-glass." "That boy," said Mr. Mallary, "will make a remarkable man; I can't hold an argument with him on Masonry or anything else connected with politics." As Mr. Mallary was considered one of the ablest men in Congress, his remark caused me some surprise; and we not only "made a note of," but took another look at the "devil" (printer's we mean), and could not but trace in the expansive forehead "a mind formed in nature's finest mould and wrought for immortality." It was years afterward that we became aware of the fact that that boy was Horace Greeley.

A Vast Enterprise.

It is now proposed to connect the railway system of America with those of Asia and Europe by means of a ferry conveying locomotives and cars across Behring's Strait. The project is to extend the Canadian Pacific, now being constructed through Manitoba, by building a branch to Alaska until it reaches Behring's Strait. There it would meet with the railroad tracks to be constructed in Siberia, which of course have their direct relations with the railway system of Russia and Europe. A line to Pekin is talked of. This having been done it requires not much further stretch of the imagination to see with the mind's eye the long rails stretching out under the shadows of the Himalayas until they make connections with the proposed line in the Jordan Valley, and thence with the European system. This may seem wild, but stranger things have happened in this wonderful modern period of ours.—Detroit's Monthly.

LOST IN A BLIZZARD.

A Sad Tragedy of Winter Life in Dakota.

One of the saddest of this winter's storm tragedies, says a Dakota correspondent, was that which resulted in the death of the Nelson family, who lived near Sanborn. They had not been in the Territory long, and they knew comparatively little about the fierceness of the blizzards. They were poor and had made but scant provision for the winter. Running out of fuel, they had been burning straw, and as the consumption of this article was enormous during the severe weather, it was found almost impossible to keep enough of it on hand to last more than a few hours. When the last great blizzard swept over the country, the Nelsons found themselves with only a little straw near at hand and their necessities very great. The nearest stack was only half a mile from their house, but they feared to brave the storm in an effort to reach it.

Hoping that the tempest would soon spend its force, they economized the fuel they had at hand as best they could. Doling out the straw sparingly, they managed to keep their hovel tolerably warm, and to cook such food as they were supplied with. Economical as they were with the straw, however, it was spent before the storm showed any signs of abating, and as the cold grew more intense it became a question of securing more fuel or freezing to death. It is believed that they realized the desperate situation they were in and the possibility that if they once ventured out in the blinding gale they might not return. None of them wishing to remain in the cheerless home, the father and his two children started out. It is known that they reached the straw stack, and each, having secured a load, started back; but in changing their course they lost their way, and wandered aimlessly about until, exhausted and benumbed with cold, they could go no further. The father then appears to have dug a cave in a huge snow drift at a point as little exposed as possible, into which he put the children. He then started out in search of assistance, but finding none he succumbed to the snow and the cold. Becoming tired of waiting for him, and probably crazed by her suffering one of the girls left her retreat and wandered aimlessly about the prairie. All perished. A searching party found the body of one little one in the cave, and that of the other a few rods away, and that of the father about half a mile from his own door.

Almost every blizzard that sweeps over this section causes similar cases of suffering and death. They will continue until people coming here to settle understand in advance that they are braving an Arctic climate in winter, and that when the blizzard rolls about their habitations they must stay in doors and wait for clearing skies.

The Variable Wind.

One blowing day last week, when the sidewalks were as slippery as glass, a woman stood in front of a door on Clifford street, and strewed some ashes from a pan she held on the icy walk. As she did so, the wind blew the coal dust rather freely over her, and a man going past said:

"If you will turn your back to the wind it will blow the ashes from you instead of over you."

The woman thanked him with her eyes, but did not move. Indeed, she could not without losing her balance and the ashes both.

"Let me show you," said the man, kindly, as he removed a fur glove and grasped with a determined grip the well-filled ash-pan. "You can throw them over the walk in this way, and not be liable to put your eyes out. It's as easy as rolling off a log," and he braced his back against the wind and gave a generous flop to the ash-pan.

The woman went into the house to get the ashes out of her hair and eyes and recover her health. When the police had dusted the man off and identified him they took him home. The only remark he made was:

"You can't most always tell from what quarter the wind will blow when you attempt to give advice about emptying an ash-pan."

Something About Gunpowder.

As a matter of fact, says a manufacturer of powder, much more powder is burned in times of peace than in time of war. The average daily consumption of powder in the United States is 100 tons. In a battle in which 50,000 men fired 40 rounds each, less than one-quarter of an ordinary day's quota of powder would be used. In the construction of the Hoosac Tunnel more powder was exploded than in the war of the rebellion, and a single large coal mine will use almost as much. Gunpowder and the finest quality of blasting powder are made of three parts of saltpetre and one part of charcoal and brimstone in equal quantities. In the cheaper grades of blasting powder, nitrate of soda is substituted for saltpetre. The largest beds of saltpetre are in Hindostan, and for a long time the English had complete control over the saltpetre market. The principal deposits of nitrate of soda are in Chili near the boundaries of Peru. In the manufacture of powder [illegible] New York [illegible]

WHY ONE CANNOT LOVE A TOMATO.

The feminine mind early attains to the consideration of the ethics of the affections. In a city school the other day the class in English grammar was discussing the difference between the words "like" and "love." "Now," said the teacher, "we can like a tomato, but is it proper to say we can love a tomato?" "No, it is not," said a fresh young miss; "one cannot love a tomato." "Why not?" inquired the teacher. "Because, you know, you cannot—you can't—well, you can't hug a tomato."

Greeley, is a native Alabamian and was appointed to the Naval Academy by the late Congressman Hays. He is a son of Hon. R. M. Reynolds, 1st Auditor, of the treasury. Young Reynolds has been several times decorated by foreign governments for extraordinary merit and gallantry, and for the same reasons twice promoted by our own.

There is a wood pulp factory at Augusta, Ga., at which the expedition with which paper could be manufactured was recently demonstrated. A tree was cut in the forest at 6 o'clock in the morning, was made into pulp and then into paper at 6 o'clock in the evening, and distributed among the people as a newspaper by 6 o'clock the next morning. From a tree in the forest to a printed newspaper, being read by thousands in the brief round of twenty-four hours!

The Local Newspaper.

The late Peter Cooper once said: In all the towns where a newspaper is published, every man should advertise in it, even if nothing more than a card stating his name and business he is engaged in. It does not only pay the advertiser, but it lets people at a distance know that the town you reside in has a prosperous community of business men. As the seed is sown so the fruit recompenses. Never pull down your sign while you expect to do business, for it often indicates that business is poor and you are loosing your grip, commercially speaking. The judicious advertiser will receive in return ten dollars for every one invested in the columns of a good newspaper.

The Gadsden Times disclaims any sympathy with the O'Neal "party usage" plea, and adds the following, which each of the governor's friends should put in his scrap book: "It has seemed well adapted to enable a state treasurer to cover up his thefts from the prying eyes of a successor in office and to close the eyes of a second term governor to his misdeeds. It cannot be denied that it has cost the State of Alabama over $200,000, and at that price would seem to be rather dear. Will its advocates name some of its compensations?"

There was to be a butting match in Colorado between a robust Sweed and a negro. They were to start ten feet back from a scratch with their heads lowered, and rush at each other like rams, the collision to be repeated until one was disabled. At the last moment somebody whispered to the Sweed what he had never heard before—that the African skull is generally deemed invulnerable under concussion that would smash a white man's. This destroyed his courage, and he dodged the woolly head that came plunging viciously at him. The negro, missed the expected resistance, was by momentum carried a rod against a fence, on which he was dangerously punctured.

A Few Leaks.

A statistician can read over the list of appropriations made by our legislature and aptly quote from Puck, "What fools these mortals be." For real good wholesome reading commend us to the appropriation bill passed at each session of our legislature. The people as a whole take no interest in the way their taxes are disbursed and indeed half of them are culpably ignorant of the purpose for which the money of the State is paid out. For watchmen at the State capitol eighteen hundred dollars is appropriated. For keepers of the capitol one hundred and fifty dollars. Insurance on capitol eight hundred dollars. That is to say we pay a learned and skillful individual or set of individuals eighteen hundred dollars to watch a capitol that already has a keeper who is paid one hundred and fifty dollars, a capitol that is also guarded by eight hundred dollars worth of insurance and situated in a city bristling with policemen. It costs twenty-seven hundred and fifty dollars a year to keep that building. Much more than one-fifth its value. It costs us more than we pay to our circuit judge or chancellor, and is about as wise a way of spending money nonsencically as could be devised. Think of spending twenty-seven hundred dollars a year for watching, insuring and keeping a building which if sold at auction to-day would not bring ten thousand dollars. The only good use it could be put to would be for a public school building or steam gin factory. Since the erection of the capitol at Montgomery the State has paid out over three times the value of the building for the items named. And yet while the legislature would hilariously vote money out of the people's pocket to pay for such things as these, they grew very economical when they were asked to appropriate a small amount to induce emigration to Alabama and eventually flatly refused to vote one cent to the latter purpose. We pay two thousand five hundred dollars for stationary and stamps. We squander three thousand dollars a year on a State board of health, about as useless and nugatory a concern as could be imagined—a solemn farce composed of physicians who look wise, indite telegrams, puff themselves in the news papers and pocket the wherewith. As funeral and pedantic a fraud as ever was imposed on a penitent people. If by their lucubrations one pennyweight of good has been done or one case of sickness either cured or prevented no living man has ever found it out. Another five thousand dollars we pay to a geological survey. A stilted picnic—a kind of official junketing trip to the mountains during the heated term. Millions of dollars worth of minerals have been found, sold and mined in places where the alleged geological survey passed over them and never discovered a trace. The so-called geological survey is a glaring sinecure affording no information and doing no good, but it makes a very handy volumn for a member of the legislature to send to a county constituent and the letter not understanding its technical rot about old silurian and prehistoric grindstone formation soon uses it up for gun wadding. We are willing to bet our office towel that the geological survey since the first settlement of the country has never yet found a practical, tangible, useful mine, or pointed out a lead of any metal that had not previously been found by the honest granger who lived nearest to the place. The geological survey has never hinted that we had coal and iron in Etowah county and yet we have been mining both right here for years. We pay twelve thousand five hundred dollars to three railroad commissioners and one clerk, and just here it becomes a clear case of the "Apples rolling out of the wagon." We cannot do justice to the subject.—Gadsden News.

The following is published by special request, though sent in by a non-subscriber to this paper. The VIEW is committed to the support of no candidate for the position of Superintendent of Education; but as previously announced, it very much favors the nomination of Rev. Joseph Shackleford, of Morgan, for that office. However, should Mr. Pennington receive the nomination he will receive the hearty support of this press:

MR. EDITOR:—I notice with pleasure through the columns of the press the name of Thos. J. Pennington, of Coosa county, favorably spoken of as being a suitable man for State Superintendent of Education to succeed Hon. H. Clay Armstrong. A better man could not be placed in this responsible office than Mr. Pennington. It has been my great pleasure to know him from boyhood, and during my long and intimate acquaintance with him, his bearing in all the various relations of life has always been that of a true gentleman and staunch Democrat. Having been raised and spent the greater portion of his life in Tallapoosa county, he has strong claims on her people.

As to Mr. Pennington's ability to fill the office I have only this to say, he has been closely connected with the schools of his county every since the war as teacher, and county Superintendent of Education. Having been for the last 13 years County Superintendent of Education of Coosa county, and the fine condition in which the schools of that county are now in, shows in an eminent degree, how efficiently he has conducted the educational affairs of the people of his county; and if the people of Alabama should confer the office upon him, what he has done for his own county will be done for each and every county in the State. The cause of education will ever find in him a strong and enthusiastic supporter of the people, a true and faithful servant. Let old Tallapoosa join with her sister county in presenting the claims of this worthy gentleman.

STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

To Pastors, Superintendents, Teachers and Others interested in Sunday Schools:

A call for the next State Convention to meet in the city of Selma on May 20th and continue 21st and 22nd, was issued by the Executive Committee on April 1st. All pastors of Evangelical Churches, other ordained ministers, and two delegates from each Sabbath School, are cordially invited to attend and participate in the proceedings. The hearty invitation of the Christian people of Selma to hold this convention in their city, assures the committee that those who attend will be received and entertained most hospitably.

The programme of exercises and topics has been arranged with a due regard to that which is practical and important to Sunday School teachers: and for their better treatment, brethren of known ability in our State have been invited to introduce them.

Many who will receive the circular require no argument in favor of, or explanation respecting, Sunday School conventions. Yet to such as are strangers to these gatherings, we may say that the central idea is the friendly association and harmonious combination of christian teachers of various denominations for the purpose of seeking the improvement of the Sunday Schools of our State, the personal improvement of teachers, and a fresh inspiration for the blessed work of leading the young to Jesus, and for training them for his service.

Such is the diversity of thought and practice in Sunday School work, that we can not help receiving aid from the various experiences given.

To insure accommodation for the large number expected, it is required that ministers and delegates give early notice of their purpose to be present, by letter to Mr. H. H. Stewart, of Selma, who is chairman of the reception committee. This notice must be sent not later than May 15th. Delegates must provide themselves with written certificates of appointment, stating School and Denomination, and signed by the Superintendent of their respective Schools.

Delegates, immediately on arrival, will report to Mr. Stewart, in the basement of the Presbyterian church, on Broad Street, when they will be assigned to their homes.

Negotiations are being had with the various railroads looking to reduced rates, of which due notice will be given.

Previous conventions have been fraught with blessed results; and not only have they proved seasons of blessing to teachers, but occasions of reviving and refreshing to all who attended them.

Come, fellow teachers, and let us have a great consultation for christ, and make this the best of all our meetings. come with a prayerful heart, that the Holy Spirit may guide us in all we do. Make a special effort to come.

JAMES H. FRANKLIN.

Call for a County Convention.

The voters of the Democratic and Conservative party of Chilton county are requested to meet at the places of voting in their respective beats on Saturday, the 17th day of May next, to select by ballot delegates to a county convention to be held at Clanton, on Wednesday, the 21st day of May, 1884.

The business of said convention will be to select delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions, and to attend to such other business as may properly come before it.

The representation in said county convention, fixed upon the basis of the Gubernatorial vote of 1878, will entitle each beat to the following number of delegates, to-wit:

Beat 1—Mims X Roads	2
Beat 2—Providence and Jemison	6
Beat 3—Benson and Macedonia	4
Beat 4—Clanton	12
Beat 5—Verbena and Coopers	10
Beat 6—Kincheon	1
Beat 7—Maplesville	5
Beat 8—Dixie	5

The following named persons have been appointed as beat commitees in their respective beats, to-wit:

Beat 1—H. C. Young, W. H. Marcus, D. H. Mullins.

Beat 2—J. P. Vanderveer, Chas. H. Smith, R. A. Miears.

Beat 3—J. L. Williams, David White, Seaborn Jones.

Beat 4—W. E. Stewart, J. M. Bivings, J. R. Jones.

Beat 5—C. L. Zimmerman, W. R. Scott, L. Moore.

Beat 6—J. A. Hathcock, J. R. Kemp, W. H. Mills.

Beat 7—Noah W. Foshee, W. S. Lawrence, W. J. Atchinson.

Beat 8—J. W. Broadhead, Thomas Parnell, Samuel Keyser.

The beat committees are charged with conducting the elections for delegates to the county convention.

It is suggested that in beats having two places of voting elections be held at each box for one-half the delegates allowed that beat.

It is earnestly requested that the beat committees exert themselves to get the entire vote of the party to attend the beat elections and express their wishes regarding the question of nominating candidates for the House of Representatives and for county offices.

By order of the committee.

S. T. BRITTLE, Chairman.
W. H. LAWRENCE, Secretary.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county at the election in August next, and respectfully solicit the support of my friends and fellow-citizens.

EDMOND H. LOWE, JR.

We are authorized to announce

Dr. T. E. CALLIER

as a candidate for State Senator from the district composed of the counties of Chilton, Elmore and Coosa, subject to the action of the Democratic nominating convention.

We are authorized to announce

WILLIAM C. HESTER

as a candidate for the office of Tax Collector, of Chilton county, at the approaching August election.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Miss Hallie Ray has a school in the Blassingame mill neighborhood.

Mrs. F. A. Hannon has returned from a pleasant visit to Talladega, whither she went in hopes of benefitting her health by the change.

Mr. B. H. Chestnut has returned from a two weeks visit to North Alabama. He reports that section of the State on a boom all along the line.

We are in receipt of a fine bunch of wheat, raised by Mr. W. F. Claughton near Verbena. It is three feet in height and well headed out.

We received a pleasant call, on Monday evening last, from Mr. Lem Battou, of the wholesale tobacco house, of Ledbetter & Co., Lynchburg, Va. Call in again, we are always glad to see you.

We learn that Clanton will be the place of meeting, of the District Senatorial Convention, but have not yet learned the time of the meeting—as it has not yet been fixed upon, so we understand.

At the solicitation of friends Dr. Callier withdraws his name as a candidate for county representative and has decided to make the race for Senator. This was the position he was first asked to run for.

The E. T. V. & G. R. R., has agreed to furnish delegates with round tickets at 4 cents a mile and the Cin. S. & M. R. R., at five cents a mile, to all who wish to attend the S. S. Convention to be held at Selma, on the 20th inst.

Mr. Wm. Chapman Hester announces himself as a candidate for the office of tax collector of our county. We have known Mr. Hester for years, and believe that if he is elected to the office, he will faithfully discharge the duties of the position.

The match game of base ball to be played between the "Clanton Eagles" and the Verbena "Black Hawks" will come off to-morrow afternoon, at Verbena. Our boys have had but very little practice so far, but propose to give the Verbena boys the best they have. A pleasant time is anticipated.

For those who may not believe that advertising pays, we will publish an item of interest to them and to us. Since we inserted our "thirty days offer," we have averaged six new subscribers per day, and will be more than satisfied if they continue to come in at this rate for the remainder of the thirty days. May 16th is the last day.

Thanks to Mr. W. A. Howard, of Verbena, for a club of subscribers to the VIEW. If you want to make the acquaintance of a nice gentleman who can either build you a pair of shoes or repair your old ones, call on Mr. Howard, at Verbena, and you will be satisfied that he is the man to do it for you.

The press should clamor for the extension of the postal note to the county post offices. The inconvenience of sending small amounts by mail in small villages is annoying, and many a subscription is lost to the local as well as city newspaper because it is troublesome to send the small amount of the subscription. The handling of postal notes requires but little business skill or experience, and the bond would be small. Hand round this suggestion, brethren.—Gadsden Times.

Dr. Lanier made such a hit with his weather prediction that he has been prevailed upon to give us another "good thing," in the shape of an infallible remedy for cut worms. He says that a lady living near Clanton says that she is never bothered with cut worms among her cabbages. She catches a few of the worms when they first make their appearance, and places them in a bottle which she sits out among the cabbages. The worms invariably disappear from the cabbage bed at once. This is worth trying whether it is original with the doctor or the lady. However, the editor hopes to be in Eufaula attending the press convention when the Dr. comes around to see about it.

Verbena Views.

Weather fine the past week. Some rain needed on the early planted cotton to soften the hard crust formed over the seed.

Our ladies were busy last Friday preparing wreaths for memorial decorations in Montgomery; quite a number of ladies went down, but were disappointed in finding that a postponement until Tuesday had been ordered.

A picnic will be one of the important features of the match game next Friday. Our ladies have kindly tendered their assistance in making the event a success.

Mrs. Reid and Miss Fannie Merriwether, of Bullock county, and Mr. W. E. Shores of Shelby are among the visitors the past week.

Rev. O. R. Blue, presiding elder of this district, preached some intresting sermons during the quarterly meeting at this place.

Our editor spent a short while with us last Friday. He was around looking for candidates and was disappointed in not finding one who could muster courage enough to "announce."

The Sheriff's sale of O. J. Dollins' assets realized some twenty dollars.

Mr. J. R. Crawford, of the Pratt saw mill, removes this week to Southwest Georgia.

A large lot of cross-ties have been taken up at this place by the rail road.

The next debate of our society is expected to be very interesting.

The favorable weather has placed farmers up with their work. They are busy plowing the early corn.

BIJOU.

Mr. Pratt at Work.

Mobile Register.]

Mr. E. Spencer Pratt, State commissioner, is telegraphed to from Washington by Major E. A. Burke, Director-General World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, that a bill is to be introduced in Congress, asking that an appropriation be made to the New Orleans Exposition in the shape of a loan to be hereafter reimbursed out of the company's stock, as was done in the case of the Centennial at Philadelphia. That on the passage of this bill the Board of Management will advance to each State and Territory the sum of five thousand dollars, to assist its special exhibit. Mr. Pratt is requested to bring this matter before the people, and obtain for the measure such an expression of popular approval as will induce Alabama's representatives at Washington to give it their unanimous support. It is understood that both the Chamber of Commerce and Cotton Exchange will meet to-morrow and take action in the matter. Mr. Pratt will probably be called to appear before these bodies and propose measures to be adopted, after which the commission will proceed to Montgomery and confer with the Governor.

Jemison Jottings.

It is with deep regret that we learn of the extreme illness of Mr. Jesse Smitherman, but must hope the worst is over, and that he may soon be on foot again.

Dr. J. A. McNeill and wife are on a visit to Goodwater, in Coosa county.

Messrs. R. H. Knox and W. E. Johnson, of Clanton, were in town on Saturday looking after professional business.

We were treated to two good sermons in the Jemison church, on last Sunday. Rev. George Lee, of Helena, preached at 11 A. M., on the subject of faith, and while delineating the wonderful results and grand achieyments of this faith, received the best of attention. In the evening, Rev. A. E. Burns, of Pine Hill, gave us an interesting sermon on the importance of self-denial. Mr. Burns has just entered the pulpit. He is a young man of rare talents, and ability, and bids fair to be a power in advancing the cause he has espoused, and to which the best energies of his future life, will doubtless be directed.

The moral aspect of Jemison, is not easily excelled. It is a rare thing indeed to hear an oath or any other vulgar language on the streets, and none of our young men are ever intoxicated.

Let us all work to drive whiskey from our borders, and thus make Chilton the best county in the State. OXO.

The Sheffield Boom.

The Mobile Register says: The Atlanta office of the new city of Sheffield, Alabama, is quite busy sending out maps of the projected city, and answering letters of enquiry concerning the sale of lots to take place on May 8th. Extra clerks have been engaged, and the enterprise is assuming much larger proportions than was anticipated. The advantages of the new site for manufacturing iron and distributing goods by cheap river transportation naturally assures success to the undertaking. Many of those who will attend the sale come from long distances.

An article from the Gadsden Times published this week is worthy of consideration. It shows that the people do not have such complete control of the affairs of government as they should have, and that we have several bad laws that should be got rid of as soon as possible.

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them un il all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

A TRAGEDY RECALLED.

HOW WILKES BOOTH CROSSED THE POTOMAC RIVER.

A Broken Link in the Story of the Great Lincoln Assassination now Recovered.

An interesting feature of the April Century is George Alfred Townsend's account of "How Wilkes Booth crossed the Potomac." There is a gap in the history of Wilkes Booth's crime, between his disappearance in the pines of south-eastern Maryland and his re-appearance in Virginia, where he was killed, and this article (the information of which was supplied by Thomas A Jones, an actor in the escape), it is believed closes this gap. Jones's first encounter with the fugitives is described as follows: "Booth and Herold were sent into the short pines, and there Jones found them. He says that as he was advancing into the pines he came upon a bay mare, with black legs, mane, and tale, and a white star on the forehead; she was saddled, and roving around in a little cleared place as if trying to nibble something to eat. Jones took the mare and tied her to a tree or stump. He then advanced and gave what he calls the countersign, or whistle, which he does not precisely remember now, though he thinks it was two whistles in a peculiar way, and a whistle after an interval. The first person he saw was Herold, fully armed, with a carbine in his hand, coming out to see who it was. Jones explained that he had been sent to see them, and was then taken to Booth, who was but a few rods further along.

"Booth was lying on the ground, wrapped up in blankets, with his foot supported and bandaged, and a crutch beside him. His rumpled dress looked respectable for that country, and Jones says it was of black cloth. His face was pale at all times, and never ceased to be so during the several days that Jones saw him. He was in great pain from his broken ankle, which had suffered a fracture of one or two bones in the leg, down close to the foot. It would not have given him any great pain but for the exertion of his escape, which irritated it by scraping the ends of the broken bone perhaps in the flesh; it was now highly irritated, and whichever way the man moved he expressed by a twitch or a groan the pain he felt. Jones says that this pain was more or less continuous, and was greatly aggravated by the peril of Booth's situation—unable to cross the river without assistance, and unable to walk any distance whatever. Jones believes that Booth did not rise from the ground at any time until he was finally put on Jones's horse to be taken to the water-side some days afterward.

"Booth's first solicitude seemed to be to learn what mankind thought of the crime. That question he put almost immediately to Jones, and continued to ask what different classes of people thought about it. Jones told him that it was gratifying news to most of the men of Southern sympathies. He frankly said that he himself at first regarded it as good news; but somewhat later, when he saw the injurious consequences of the crime to the South, he changed his mind. Booth desired newspapers if they could be had, which would convey to him an idea of public feeling. Jones soon obtained newspapers for him, and continued to send them in; and Booth lay there, where the pines were so thick that one could not see more than thirty or forty feet into them, reading what the world had to say about his case. He seemed never tired of information on this one subject, and the only thing besides he was solicitous about was to get across the river to Virginia.

"Jones says Booth admitted that he was the man who killed Lincoln, and expressed no regret for the act, knowing all the consequences it involved. He said if he could only get to Virginia he could have medical attendance. Jones told him frankly that he would receive no medical attendance in Maryland. Said he: 'The country is full of soldiers, and all that I can do for you is to get you off, if I can, for Cox's protection and my own, and for your own safety. That I will do for you, if there is any way in the world to do it.'

"When I received this account from Mr. Jones, I asked him question after question to see if I could extract any information as to what Booth inquired about while in that wilderness. I asked if he spoke of his mother, of where he was going when he reached Virginia, of whether he meant to act on the stage again; whether he blamed himself for jumping from the theatre box; whether he expressed any apprehension for Mrs. Surratt or any of his friends in Washington. To these and to many other questions Jones uniformly replied: 'No, he did not speak about any of those things. He wanted food, and to cross the river, and to know what was said about the deed.' Booth, he thinks, wore a slouched hat. At first meeting Booth in the pines, he proved himself to be the assassin by showing upon his wrist, in India ink, the initials J. W. B. He showed the same to Captain Jett in Virginia. Jones says Booth was a determined man—not boasting, but one who would have sold his life dear. He said he would not be taken alive."

Living on the Border.—The El Paso Herald says:—At El Paso, Texas, Mexican dollars are worth eighty-five cents in American coin. At Paso del Norte, just across the river, American dollars are worth eighty-five cents in Mexican coin. One morning a car driver started from the American side with a Mexican dollar. On his arrival at the Mexican town he took a drink of chain lightning, which was fifteen cents, and thus left him a American dollar in change for his Mexican. On his return to the American side he took a drink of equally hard liquor and received a Mexican dollar for his change, and so repeated the drinks at several during the day, and at night he came up to Juarez with the Mexican dollar with which he started in the morning.

A NAVAL HERO.

Dr. Ambler, the Surgeon of the Jeannette A Brave Officer who Did His Whole Duty

Among the dead of the Jeannette, brought home to find a resting place, was Dr. James M. Ambler. Melville, when asked by the court whom of the expedition he would specially commend for his behavior, promptly replied: "Dr. Ambler," and he was unstinted in his praise of him. During the famous retreat over the ice Ambler was one of the leading spirits. He harnessed two half-starved Esquimaux dogs to a sled of his own contriving, on which were lashed the surgical instruments, medical stores and scientific records; and leaving them to follow in the rear with the sick, the doctor took his place in advance day after day, as chief of the roadmakers. He wielded a heavy sledge hammer like a Hercules, breaking down ice hummocks to level a road for the boats. It was related of him that he invariably, when the day's work began, took up the heaviest of the sledges, thus setting an encouraging example to the men. We see him laying this down for a moment to perform an iridectomy, one of the most delicate operations in eye surgery. After De Long's boats had reached the Lena Delta, and failing to find succor for three weeks or longer, the commander decided to send two of the strongest of his party in advance to seek aid. The main body traveled very slowly, most of them being scarcely able to walk at all, and having to transport the sick. De Long was able to walk only for five minutes at a time. Ambler was the strongest of the party, and the commanding officer selected him and Nindeman to go on ahead for succor and to save their own lives, if possible, both of them being able for a long march. When this was communicated to the doctor he told his commander that he thought he ought not to leave his sick, as he preferred to share their fortunes to the end, and his going away would look like abandoning them. This doubtless touched the gallant De Long, whose first thought seems ever to have been his high duty to those under his command. Noros was then sent in Ambler's stead and his life was saved. Ambler remained with his sick comrades to the last and died with them. It is doubtful if the medical profession affords anywhere a finer example of heroism than this. Imprisoned on board an ice-bound ship for twenty-two months, a painful retreat over weary miles of rough ice, with half-frozen hands and feet, then wandering about on unknown shore for three weeks, reduced to a mere struggle for existence yet not for a moment was blunted his keen sense of professional duty. Melville, who found the bodies, is of the opinion that Ambler was the last one to die. His frozen body was found in a sitting attitude, clothed in many suits of extra clothing, seizing in his right hand De Long's pistol, taken from his dead commander's pocket; in solemn and faithful guard over his dead comrades. None will ever know the dreadful extent of his sufferings during those last hours, or possibly days, of his life, alone with his dead, starving, exhausted and hopeless. Faithful messengers sent by his grateful country have brought home the mortal remains of this noble son to an aged mother, to lie at rest in his own village churchyard in Fauquier county, Va. Peace to him and her, and honor to the memory of this noble surgeon whose life was given to his country and his duty!

With no Drop of Negro Blood.

The Selma (Ala.) Times tells the following singular story:—Mr. Isaac Frank, a white man, was indicted by the last Grand Jury under the charge of living in unlawful wedlock with a negro woman. Mrs. Mary Ann Frank, wife of the accused, was present; also her alleged mother, Lucinda Weaver, colored. Lucinda was sworn, and put upon the witness-stand. Her testimony threw new light upon the case and caused a little flutter of excitement and surprise among those present. She spoke in a straightforward manner. Notwithstanding Lucinda has always been known as the mother of Mary, it turns out that the young woman's parentage is purely white. Lucinda testified that she was not the mother of Mrs. Mary Frank and that Mrs. Frank was given to her when an infant three days old; that a prominent gentleman in South Carolina brought the young child and presented it to Lucinda, requesting that she raise it as her own. She stated further that the child was the illegitimate offspring of an aristocratic woman, and it was her brother who gave the infant to the old negress to shield his sister's reputation and conceal her shame. The old negress brought her charge to Alabama, claiming her as a daughter, and the real truth of matters very probably never would have been uncovered to the world but for Mary's marriage to the white man and the indictment issued against him. Mrs. Frank, now grown into mature womanhood, has light, straight hair, a fair complexion, and clear, blue eyes, and doesn't bear the remotest trace of African blood. A number of gentlemen visited her recently, conversed with her, and decided that she was beyond doubt a white woman. After Lucinda's testimony was heard, Solicitor Pitts agreed to a verdict of not guilty, and the happy twain departed in peace.

Blown Up.

A passenger on the train on the Colorado Central which was blown bodily from the track by the wind thus describes the event: "We had gone but a short distance—say four or five blocks—when the wind bore down on us with tremendous force. The cars began to rock and I told the conductor, who was standing beside me, that we were going over. I then grasped the seat, when I felt the car rise in the air and then turn over. We came down so hard that I lost my grip and I found myself somewhere in the scrambling with several others. The car took fire, but all made their escape by scrambling out of windows and doors, and the flames were speedily extinguished." There were fifteen passengers on the train and all were hurt, but none very badly.

FENIANS IN PARIS.

The French Capital Selected as the Headquarters of the Dynamiters.

A dispatch from Paris says:—The police here are convinced that the advanced Irish party have made Paris their headquarters in Europe for the preparation of their dynamite schemes. Inspector Moser, acting under instructions from the British Home Secretary and aided by a French commissary of police, is watching the movements of suspected Irishmen. The nationalist colony includes representatives of the three centres of the Irish Republican Brotherhood.

The first section comprises the former Fenians, James Stephens, John O'Leary and Gederal MacAdaras. The last named gentleman, in an interview, disavowed belonging to the society. His mission was to counsel friends of extreme violent views, but it was not his duty to reveal their attempts, however nefarious or mistaken they might be. He was certain that other nationalists shared this view. Captain MacCafferty said the weak were justified in using terrorism against the strong. He repudiated affiliation with Continental secret societies. He sympathized with revolutionary propagandism in Europe because Ireland was benefited thereby; but nationalism, even the most extreme, was not necessarily linked with nihilism or anarchy. He denied that he was conspiring actively, but added that experience was valuable to prevent a repetition of former mistakes.

The police have traced the arrival of five transfers, or men belonging to the third or active section, the dynamiters, who have been told off for the next attempts. They are all from America, and come from the following places:—

One from Buffalo, N. Y.
One from Paterson, N. J.
One from Brooklyn, N. Y.
Two from Texas.

They are believed to be pupils of Mezeroff. The other Irishmen under watch are Cornelius Cullimore, Eugene Davis and Casey. It is believed that the dynamite is made at Montrouge. The supposed manufacturer is registered as an authorized chemical student. The measure under which authorization is necessary is confined to the making of dynamite. The instructor is believed to be a man named Brady, under the alias of "King." The Brotherhood meet in the Rue Corneille, Rue Saint-Honore and Avenue Victor Hugo.

Power of an Avalanche.

The Denver (Col.) News says: One of the grandest snow-slides that ever occurred in Colorado took place a few days ago, just back of the Upper Twin Lakes. Judge Harlan, an eye-witness, says it was the most sublime sight he ever witnessed. Just back of Twin Lakes are Pomeroy, Gordon and Francis gulches, on each side of which the mountains rise thousands of feet. The sides of these giants of the Rockies had been covered during the heavy and protracted storms with an enormous depth of snow, until the weight had become such that it could be sustained no longer. The Judge says that, as it happened, he was standing where he could see the avalanche perfectly. All at once his ears were greeted with a low, rumbling sound that seemed like the roar of a distant storm, and almost simultaneously an immense volume of snow began to move down the mountain side in one of the gulches toward the road. The agitation seemed to break loose the snow from its moorings in the other two gulches, and almost before one had time to think hundreds of acres of snow were coming down the mountain with a roar like thunder, and filling the air with spray as they tore through the trees and carried everything before them. As they descended their velocity increased, until the rapidity with which the great field of snow and debris came down was something terrific. The distance, he says, must have been a mile from where the avalanche started to the valley where it stopped. So deep was the snow that a grove of quaking asp, whose trees were from 20 to 40 feet high, was completely buried from sight. Logs a foot and a half in thickness, that lay in the way of the slide, were snapped in two like straws; trees that were too tall to be covered up were torn up from their rooted places in the mountain sides and carried like leaves with the avalanche. The velocity of air produced by the avalanche blew down trees that were clear out-side of the track of the slide. Fortunately no one was in the way and no lives were lost.

Being a Boy.

There is a great comfort to be a boy in the amount of work he can get rid of doing. It is sometimes astonishing how slow he can go on an errand; perhaps he couldn't explain himself why, when he is sent to the neighbors' for yeast, he stops to stone the frogs. He is not exactly cruel, but he wants to see if he can't hit 'em. It is a curious fact about boys, that two will be a great deal slower about doing anything than one. Boys have a power of helping each other do nothing. But say what you will about the general usefulness of boys, a farm without a boy would very soon come to grief. He is always in demand. In the first place, he is to do all the errands, go to the store, post office, and carry all sorts of messages. He would like to have as many legs as a wheel has spokes, and rotate in about the same way. This he sometimes tries to do, and people who have seen him "turning cart wheels" along the side of the road have supposed he was amusing himself and hiding his time. He was only trying to invent a new mode of locomotion, so that he could economize legs, and do his errands with greater dispatch. Leaping is one of the methods of getting over the ground quickly. He has a natural genius for combining pleasure with business.

THE SHEFFIELD BOOM.

What is Being Done at Sheffield, Ala.—Making Avenues, Streets and Railroads—The Coming Sale.

There never was an enterprise begun under more favorable auspices than the projected city of Sheffield. Its location on the south bank of the Tennessee river between Tuscumbia and Florence, situated on high bluffs that command a view for miles of the surrounding country, the healthfulness of the place, its fertility and proximity to the immense coal and iron fields and its many other advantages have attracted the attention of capitalists and manufacturers, while the newspapers in nearly all the states, with hardly an exception, have commented favorably on the flattering prospects of the new city.

A reporter, wishing to obtain the latest information about Sheffield, called at the office of Captain J. F. Burke, one of the executive committee of the Sheffield company, and who has just returned from the north, where he has been absent a month on business connected with the new enterprise.

In response to an inquiry about Sheffield, Capt. Burk said:

"We shall have to take advantage of the columns of the press in answering the questions that have accumulated in regard to Sheffield, the new north Alabama city. We have headquarters for information in Atlanta, Nashville, Memphis, Tuscumbia, Montgomery, Mobile and Selma, but it is impossible to answer each man separately, so great is the interest taken in the matter. So we will answer through the press."

"When does the sale take place?"

"It begins on May 8th."

"How will it be conducted?"

"In the fairest and most open way. Not a single lot will be sold at private sale. The lots, as platted, will be put up at auction and sold without preference or prejudice. Each bidder will stand on the same basis exactly."

"What will be the terms?"

"We will ask only one-fourth cash and the balance in one, two and three years. Our object in selling for so little cash is to allow the buyers to keep the bulk of their money for building. Where a man with a thousand or so dollars cannot afford to pay cash for his land and at the same time build a house, we take only one-fourth for the land and let him put the rest of his money in improvements."

"Will there be large attendance at the sale?"

"The outlook is that it will be the largest crowd at a land sale ever seen in the south. We have aimed specially to avoid making it anything of a frolic, or attracting the crowd that usually go on excursions. We will have a big crowd but it will be a crowd of earnest and quiet business men looking for homes and investment.

"And why should it be a big crowd? The site of Sheffield, is in my opinion—and in the opinion of everyone who has seen it, an ideal site for a city. It is the most beautiful spot I ever saw. The bluff is from 25 to 125 feet above the Tennessee river, which is half a mile wide at that point. The ground is rolling, with noble fresh growth, the climate is delightful, without the possibility of malaria or epidemics. Besides being incomparably healthier and handsomer in locality than Birmingham or Chattanooga, its nearest rivals, it is as near the coal and iron fields as they are—is nearer St. Louis, the great iron market, and has the advantage of river transportation direct to that city. A considerable trade is already done by the river. When Sheffield is at work and the new railroad is finished, the river trade will be immense. Iron, lumber and other products will be sent by water to St. Louis and the products of the west brought back by boat to be distributed by Sheffield merchants throughout the south. As a manufacturing and commercial point it will have no superiors in the south. As a beautiful and healthy home, I do not think it will have an equal."

"Is the road finished to the coal and iron fields?"

"It is graded about 20 miles which carries it to the coal and iron field, and the track is laid about 8 miles. More than 1,000 hands are now at work and the end is being pushed rapidly towards Birmingham. The company that builds this road own largely of the stock in Sheffield—the personelle of the two companies being virtually identical. The men who control the Memphis and Charleston road and the East Tennessee and Virginia system are heavily interested in Sheffield. This secured to the new city a railroad of its own, penetrating the coal and iron fields, the good will, certainly, of a system of nearly 4,000 miles of road, and a river which leads from its wharves to the water ways of the world."

"Where will the largest number of purchasers come from? Purchasers will come from every quarter. There are already at Tuscumbia families from Dakota and San Francisco waiting to purchase ground and begin business. Large numbers will go from Birmingham and Annist mposed of those who failed to get in early in the speculations of these places, and are determined not to miss the Sheffield opportunity. As an instance, one of our stockholders bought a lot at Birmingham three years ago for $2,600. After holding it one year he sould half of it for what he gave for the whole. Sometime ago he directed his agent to close out his real estate in Birmingham, in order to invest in Sheffield, and he was informed that the remaining half of his lot was now worth $30,000. Now there will probably be but one auction sale of lots by the Sheffield company, and those who purchase then will get the "undersold." Three or four hundred dollars invested at the beginning bids fair to be three or four thousand dollars in a very few years. We have the history of Birmingham, Roanoke, Anniston and other places before us. Here is a package of letters from persons in Texas, Iowa, Arkansas, New Hampshire and other places who have limited means and youthful families. These persons desire to move to the new city, invest their means, in order that their children may become identified with the place, and increase their store as the general property increases, the population and the value of property. There is a good deal of foresight in all this."

"There is no disputing the fact that Sheffield has the advantage in iron manufacture. Here is a New York paper that contains a long article about Sheffield, and it truthfully says that the new city will rival Pittsburg. Birmingham is now selling iron in Pittsburg at a lower price than it has ever been sold for there, and Sheffield can do better than that by river transportation, for Sheffield can sell iron in Pittsburg for less money than it can be made for by the Pittsburg furnaces. Here is enough of itself to build a large city. The reporter thanked Captain Burke for the interview and packing up one of the handsome lithographed maps of Sheffield took his departure, promising to call again.

Maps and other information cheerfully furnished free upon application to Captain J. F. Burke, Atlanta; Major A. H. Moses, Montgomery, and Col. W. S. Gordon, Tuscumbia, Ala

A Beautiful Death.

"Doctor, is I got to go?"

"Aunt 'Liza, there is no hope for you."

"Bress the Great Master for His goodness, Ise ready."

The doctor gave a few directions to the colored women that sat around 'Liza's bed, and started to leave, when he was recalled by the old woman, who was drifting out with the tide.

"Marse John, stay wid me till it's ober. I wants to talk ob de old times. I knowed you when a boy, long 'fore you went and been a doctor. I called you Marse John den; I call you de same now. Take yo' ole mammy's hand, honey, and hold it. Ise lived a long, long time. Ole marster and ole missus hab gone before, and de chillun from de old place is scattered ober de world. I'd like to see 'em 'fore I start on de journey to-night. My ole man's gone, and all de chillun I nussed at dis brest has gone to. Dey's waitin' for dere mudder on de golden shore. I bress de Lord, Marse John, for de good fight, and Ise not afraid to met de Saviour. No mo' work for poor mammy, no mo' trials and tribulations—hold my hand tighter, Marse John—ladder, mudder—marster—missus—chillun—Ise going home."

Our Best Families.

I have been troubled for over six years with a severe kidney complaint, also a weakness of the urinary organs, with its attendant troubles. My water needed constant attention, some days as many as twenty times, with severe pains in the bladder, as well as in the back and loins. At times I passed a limited quantity of urine, highly colored with unnatural heat and sediment; frequently evacuations would be very painful. I concluded that I must do something for it, fearing that more serious trouble would follow. I went to the druggist and was recommended to use Hunt's Remedy, as it had been used with wonderful success in several severe cases of dropsy and kidney and bladder affections here in Bangor. I concluded to try it, and before I had used one bottle found it was helping me beyond my expectations. My water became more natural, less color and sediment, the pains in back and that heavy feeling gone, with a general toning up of the system; and I continued to use it until I used six bottles, and it has completely cured me.

Others of my family have used Hunt's Remedy with equally as good success, and we do not hesitate to recommend it far and near, believing it a duty as well as a pleasure to recommend so good a medicine as Hunt's Remedy. You are at liberty to give my testimony to the public.

NAMING THE BABY.

What shall we name her, little wife?
What shall we call this feather of life?
Little new-comer to Lilliput-land,
Lying as light as a kiss on my hand,
Whose quaint wee face with its rosy skin
But measures a finger from brow to chin,
While a span from the point of her button nose
Will reach the tip of her tiny toes.
What shall we call her? She's too small,
I think, to have any name at all.
Could we peer down on the vale of tears,
Draw the curtain that hides the years!
Could we just for a moment see
What in our darling's destiny!
Is she heiress to high estate?
Will she be taking a king for mate?
King of the people—she their queen?
Royal is the name of Josephine.
Will she, meek, with a sorrowful heart,
Choose, like Mary, the better part?
Will she be gentle, tender, true—
A copy, dear little wife, of you?
Will she be dauntless, brave and strong?
Will her spirit escape in song,
Carolling gayly in golden words
All the joy of the sun-loved birds?
Will her hands give erst unknown
Voice to canvas or life to stone?
Shall we christen her Florence, Fan,
Constance, Dorothy, Margery, Anne?
Watch the weirdly flickering flame;
Read her fortune, choose her name.

What shall be? Ah, p'r'aps 'tis well
None of us can the future tell.
But there's pleasure in painting yet
Fancy portraits of our pet.
At two, a tiny queen we see,
Ruling the world from papa's knee;
Then, when risen to five or six,
Instilling tease with her saucy tricks;
Ten years more, and a full-grown miss,
A bit coquettish and coy to kiss;
Then young Love, with his sweet alarms,
Will add a grace to her woman's charms;
Then a wife, and the by-and-by
P'r'aps may bring us another tie,
And baby's baby may crow, "Hurrah
For dear old granny and grandpapa!"

Strange by your bedside 'tis to sit,
In this room by the fire-flames lit,
Picturing thus, in colors bold,
Life for our baby three days old.
What shall we call her? We've not yet
Chosen a name for our sleeping pet.

After the Storm.

BY ADELAIDE E. STELLE.

"Hark! what is that?"

Leyton grasped the arm of his friend as he spoke, and both paused to listen. From the low-walled hut before which they were standing the sound was repeated.

The speaker loosened his grasp with a sigh of relief.

"Why, bless you! it's Lita," he said. "What music the little organ is making to-night."

"Poor little blind girl! How much comfort she takes with it," remarked his companion.

"Yes. When these miners bought that little music box they made a good investment. Listen!"

The music had begun again. At first it came stealing out with such a low, plaintive sound, one might easily have fancied that it was only the night wind creeping softly round the walls of the little cabin; then it swelled into something louder, deeper and more solemn; but there was a subtle, yet indefinable something in its nature which caused the listeners to thrill with exultation and grow cold with dread. It seemed as though a spirit more than mortal, had taken possession of the little instrument, and through its deep voice was breathing out a prophecy of approaching disaster.

Leyton felt a sudden breeze against his cheek and noticed, with alarm, that a dark storm-cloud had arisen in the west. There had been one storm since his arrival from the East, and he dreaded to see another. A heavy sigh at his elbow caused both men to turn in that direction. Lame Joe had come up noiselessly behind them and stood leaning against a rock. He, too, was listening and wiping an occasional tear from his eye; for the music had grown sad and dirge-like as a funeral hymn, with a lingering, a quivering anguish echoing through it which betokened that the soul of the musician was speaking through her music.

But, even as they listened, the character of the melody slowly underwent a complete transformation, and from the depths of sorrow and despair it burst forth in a glad, exultant strain—a wild, free flood of music. It was like the triumphant song of some captive bird which has beaten long its weary wings against the iron bars of a cruel prison house, but, finding itself at liberty again, breaks forth into song as it wings its way toward Heaven, above the clouds and storms.

That was the end.

Leyton and Mark Spencer passed on. The little girl's present mood seemed too sacred for intrusion; but lame Joe stopped for the good-night kiss which the child was accustomed to bestow upon him.

Poor old Joe! he was very lame. One leg had been left upon the battlefield of Fredericksburg, and its substitute was a rude wooden stump; but such as it was, he would gladly have worn it to splinters if Lita Cohen's service, had the child permitted it.

In spite of his affliction Joe Minion was a genial old man, with a kind word and helping hand for everybody; yet half the miners in that little camp could have told of a time when there was not a more unapproachable and hateful character among them all than he. That was before the death of his wife, things of which had been a terrible blow. Like a thunderbolt, it had sundered the barriers of pride and selfishness and penetrated his iron heart.

Lita was comforter then. It was she who took him in hand, and petted and talked with him until his companions began to notice with wonder that he was growing into a very different man; for sorrow had made the child sympathetic, and her strong influence over Joe was in a great measure due to this fact.

When John Cohen was killed by the falling of a bowlder, Lita, little more than a babe then, had become an adopted child of the camp. Later, when an accident shut out forever the light from her beautiful eyes, she seemed suddenly to have grown nearer and dearer to each one and to become the object of especial care; yet, in spite of their kindness, there were times when she grew sad and lonesome. She used then to fly for consolation to her dear friend, the little organ, and draw from its bosom a melodious response to her mood.

In strong contrast with the gray and faded old woman who was her attendant, or the bronzed, weather-beaten men about her, was this child of seven years. Like a rare, sweet blossom she was growing up in that wild place with a halo of beauty and purity about her young life that commanded almost adoration from the few rough, yet kind-hearted people.

Nature was kindly, too. The sun never kissed her soft little cheeks too roughly, and its most scorching ray only added a brighter tint to the long, fair hair which hung in waves below her waist, the pride and admiration of her friends.

Yet it was hard, even for a stranger, to look unmoved upon the great blue eyes, so pathetic in their blindness, and know that Lita Cohen could never see again.

I think Lita herself minded it most after Warren, the poet of the camp, had been telling her of the rugged grandeur of the country about them, and described the singular beauty of the flowers which he brought her day after day, or when one of her big, burly friends laid in her hand the pictures of the children—the children whom she had learned to love as brothers and sisters. She had known about them all a long time, ever since she could remember, and they often sent her friendly messages and little presents which she used to sit holding in her hands, a strange wistfulness in the big blue eyes, a great ache in the little tender heart, at thought that she must always feel but could never see.

The little girl cared a great deal about all her friends; but lame Joe was her prime favorite, perhaps because he was lame. He had grown lamer than ever of late, and was failing very fast; yet nobody had told Lita of it; nobody could bear to break the news to her. She used to sit at his side by the hour, listening to him or repeating the childish stories which Warren had read to her. One day while she was sitting thus, patting his wrinkled cheeks with her soft hands, she stopped suddenly, with a puzzled look in her face, as though a new thought had struck her.

"The men say that the mines of this district don't pay well enough, and they will shortly break up and go into another country. What will you and I do then, Uncle Joe?"

A tear trickled down the old man's wan cheek. He, too, was thinking of a journey into another country, and it wrenched his heart-strings to think of leaving Lita behind, but he wiped away the bright drops with the ragged sleeve of his coat, and choking down the sob in his throat made answer:

"You will go with them, Lita, my child."

"And you, too, Uncle Joe. What would you do here without me?" she asked, laughingly, as she clung tighter to his hand.

"Not much, to be sure, little one—not much." He stroked her long, silken hair tenderly, wishing that he might be able to tell her what no one else wanted to; but he had not the courage, and presently the little girl said:

"It is getting chilly, Uncle Joe; let's go in."

But the old man went away and did not see her again until evening. He bade her "good night," and slowly followed the retreating forms of the two gentlemen, Leyton and Spencer, wondering why she looked so pale to-night and clung so tightly around his neck at parting.

He felt a strange chill pass over him whenever he thought of the music, but, by-and-by, he fell asleep and forgot it all.

The threatened storm came; such a tempest as had not swept the valley since its settlement, five years before. But the sun shone out brightly the next morning, and there was one, at least, who hailed its advent with a sigh of relief; that one was Joe Minion. Crushed, bruised and sorely wounded, he dragged himself from a heap of debris and looked about him. No one was stirring. Nearly all the others had chosen safer places than he and were sleeping soundly, now that the wild strife which had taken place so lately between the elements had ceased.

How was it with little Lita? With an effort poor Joe sat up and looked.

Where had stood a dwelling place last night was only a heap of ruins now!

"Lita! Lita!" called the old man piteously, but there came no answer.

On his hands, with all his remaining strength mustered into the effort, he crept to the spot. No child was there. Slowly, every breath a pain almost unendurable, he drew himself to the top of a log to look. He saw her, and was not long in gaining the spot.

Taking one limp hand in his and clasping it tightly, he sank down at her side, though there was a smile upon his face; the pain was all over. He had followed his little friend in her long, long journey, had gone into that other country.

A little later the miners, awakened by the faithful Nannon, who had just recovered sufficiently to crawl from the ruins, began a search for the missing.

Away beyond the scattered remains of the cabin they found them—the two so strangely contrasting; one so old and gray, the other like a gleam of light as she lay upon a bed of tangled grass and shining sand, the pallor of death upon her fair, young face, and the glory of the sunshine in her golden hair.

The Late Madame Anna Bishop.

Madame Anna Bishop, the singer, died at her home in New York on Tuesday night. She had been sick only three days. On Sunday she accompanied her husband, Martin Schultz, to church and upon returning home she found awaiting her in her parlor an old friend, Mrs. Laird, mother of Colonel George Laird, whom she had not seen for many years. She was overjoyed at the meeting, and the two, seating themselves upon a sofa, talked over their friendship of past years. Madame Bishop suddenly complained of a severe pain in her head, and in another moment, lifting her hands, fell back unconscious. She remained in this state till her death, which her physician said was produced by apoplexy. She leaves no children. The body will be buried in the village cemetery at Red Hook, Dutchess County, N. Y., where Mr. Schultz has a summer home. She will be laid beside her son, who was buried there some years ago. Madame Bishop's maiden name was Anna Rivere. She was born in London in 1814, and at an early age married Sir Henry Bishop, well known as a composer, conductor and as the arranger of the Sicilian air to which Payne wrote the words of "Home, Sweet Home." Madame Bishop first appeared on the concert platform in 1837 and some years later made an extended tour in the course of which she visited this country in company with the celebrated harpist Boschs. In 1850 she gave a series of concerts in New York, which were exceedingly popular. Since that time she has appeared in nearly every country in the world, and has sung in nearly every civilized language. The incidents of her life and travels were interesting in the extreme and few women were more entertaining than she as conversationalists. Her last tour around the world was begun in 1875, and since its completion she has lived in New York with her second husband, Mr. Schultz, whom she married in 1858. Her last appearance in public was at Steinway Hall in 1883.—Tribune.

Exclusion of American Products.

The bill reported to the United States Senate from the Committee on Foreign Relations, by Senator Miller, of California, in response to a resolution of the Senate of January 23 last, directing that committee to report such legislation as shall protect the United States against those governments which have prohibited or restrained the importation of meats from the United States, provides that there shall be instituted, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, a system of inspection of salted pork and bacon inteded for exportation, and to be exported within sixty days after the date upon which the same may have been salted and packed, so that the fact of the innoxious and wholesome character of the article shall be established by the best, highest and most reliable proof, this inspection to be made at the principal ports of the United States by the customs officers; also that the President of the United States be authorized at his discretion to exclude from the United States by proclamation any product of any foreign State which by unjust discrimination prohibits the importation of any product of the United States. It provides further that the importation into the United States of any adulterated or unwholesome food or vinous, spirituous or malt liquors, adulterated or mixed with any poisonous or noxious chemical, drug or other ingredient injurious to the health, shall hereafter be prohibited under penalty of fine or imprisonment, or both; the President to be authorized in his discretion to suspend the importation of articles of this character by proclamation when he becomes satisfied that they are adulterated to an extent injurious to the health of the public.

THE VEIL.—Two young ladies, well-known in South Boston circles, will shortly assume the white veil and enter the novitiate of the Order of Notre Dame. Both were in love with an actor, and both received his attentions. When they discovered that he was a married man they decided to renounce the world.

GOING ALL TO PIECES.

One of the Noted Actor Foote's Practical Jokes.

Foote, the English comic actor, made a wager that he would upset the dignity of a certain head waiter at the principal hotel in Bath, who had the name of being the most dignified man in Britain. Foote went to the hotel with three friends—an engineer who had lost an eye, a cavalry officer who had lost an arm, and an old sea Captain who had lost a leg. The precious quartet ensconced themselves in the four corners of the room and bawled for the waiter who came in with a more than ordinary assumption of dignity, as a tacit protest against their unceremonious treatment of him. "Waiter!" cried the one-eyed engineer, "come and take off my eyeglass;" adding, as the waiter swelled with indignation, "and while you're about it, just take out my eye." "Your eye, Sir?" echoed the startled dignitary. "Yes, my eye; don't you understand English? Look sharp." Eye glass and glass eye came away together, and the waiter reconnoitred them doubtfully as they lay in the palm of his hand, like a man eyeing a watch that has suddenly stopped. Just then the one-armed dragoon shouted in his turn: "Waiter, take off my glove; and now, that I think of it, take off my arm." Glove and hand gave way at the first touch, and the waiter, appalled to see his customers all tumbling to pieces like a mosaic puzzle, was turning hastily away when the one-legged sailor roared: "Waiter, pull off my starboard boot, and you may as well pull off my leg, too." The poor waiter shudderingly complied, mentally repeating every prayer he could think of. Instantly the previously loosened straps of the cork leg gave way, and down went the man of dignity on his august back with the artificial limb quivering in his clutches. It was enough. Forgetting everything in his agonized longing to escape from the chamber of horrors, the ill-starred waiter, casting a terrified glance at the fragments which strewed the carpet, sprang toward the door. But before he could reach it Foote himself—the length and flexibility of whose neck might have aroused the envy of an ostrich—twisted his head right round over his shoulder, and called out in a voice hollow and unearthly enough to frighten a Bengal tiger, "Waiter, come and take off my hat, and while you're at it, take off my head!" Human nature could bear no more. The martyred waiter gave one yell worthy of a Cherokee Indian and made but a single bound from the top of the stairs to the bottom, upsetting not only his dignity, but himself so thoroughly that to the day of his death he was never was quite his own self again.

Reading That Ruins.

SENSATIONAL AND TRASHY LITERATURE WHICH DEMORALIZES THE YOUNG PEOPLE

"About half a dozen of the sensational papers of this city," said a New York stationer, "have a circulation of over 500,000 copies weekly. The circulation rises and falls like the mercury in a thermometer. When blood, murder and captured maidens fill every page the presses are kept hard at work, but if anything like sensible matter is published, which takes place only once in the history of a paper, the circulation goes down. The most blood-curdling, improbable stories are the best for the publishers. The work girls are the readers that make papers pay best.

"Millions of copies of sheets of this description are sold weekly. The boys' papers are trashy and sensational enough, I will admit, but they are eclipsed by the journals for young women. The plots of the stories are sometimes extremely offensive, the dialogue is sentimental to an idiotic degree and the description of the personal appearance of the hero and heroine often occupy half the serial. There is not a working girl in New York city who does not purchase two or three of these papers every week. Of late years the illustrated police weeklies have begun to be read by boys of a tender age. Of all evils this is the greatest. A good many newsdealers, however, refuse to sell a copy to minors."

A Dakota Blizzard.

A letter from Dakota, describing a blizzard, says that when one of these fierce storms attacks a section it grows cold very rapidly. Nothing can keep a man from losing his way in a blizzard, the snow is so blinding, and no clothing will save him from freezing unless he can find shelter. The writer says: "To live in these blizzards is almost an impossibility. No horse can be made to face the blast, and only men who have long been accustomed to the rigors of the North can breathe in them. There is something suffocating about the wind. The nostrils and tongue seem ready to congeal and the eyes ache far back in their sockets. Ten feet away may yawn a chasm, yet the driving snow will hide it from view. There is a ringing, roaring noise, such as is sometimes faintly heard under telegraph wires on a clear, cold night. At times the roar of the storm will resemble nothing so much as escaping steam, like a thousand locomotives blowing off at once. When this dies out for an instant the ringing noise will rise and fall, sometimes a shriek and sometimes a hum."

Varieties in Fashions.

A long narrow scarf made of jetted net with or without an edging of jetted lace, will be worn in the street around the neck instead of the Spanish lace scarfs so long in vogue.

Jetted net plastrons in heart shape, pointed or square, in a soft puff, are made with a standing lace band or collar to put on over any simply trimmed dress of black silk, surah, or satin. These cost from $3.50 to $7 in the shops.

A Moliere vest of jetted net laid over silk and edged with jetted lace may be made of a fourth of a yard of jetted net, and is a pretty and dressy addition to black corsages.

An entire basque of jetted net without lining will be used in the summer just as Jerseys are, with skirts of black silk or satin that may or may not have drapery of this net. Sometimes such a waist is made to fasten behind. There should be a separate lining of satin surah to be worn under this transparent waist, and this may have the sleeves only basted in, so that they may be easily removed to leave thin net sleeves; there may also be a yoke cut separate at the top of a low lining, which can be used or not, as the wearer wishes a high lining for the daytime, or only transparent net over the neck in the evening. The neck and sleeves are trimmed with full frills of jetted lace.

White pique collars for ladies are now made in all the shapes that are fashionable for linen collars, but those in the high close garrot shape are preferred; these have square pique cuffs to match.

Collar buttons of old silver, with designs of antique heads, are made to match the coin pins and bracelets now in use.

One of the novelties in millinery is a cork foundation or frame of the bonnet covered over with a thin veneering of wood. New basket straw bonnets are bronzed or gilded, and are now made so fine and pliable that they are bent into small crowns and used as the smallest capotes, with a cockade bow of coquelicot velvet ribbon for trimming.

Persian vests are added to new basques of Jersey cloth, and these are sometimes made of iridescent beads in Persian designs and colors.—Harper's Bazar.

How Beck Became a Senator.

At a meeting of the Washington Press Club the other night Col. Wintersmith told this story:

"I was a candidate for Senator from Kentucky in 1876," he said, "when I told one story that defeated me, but I can tell it now without any such danger. One day I was in the gallery of the Senate when McCreery, of Kentucky, rose to make a speech. Every Senator on the floor sought the cloak room, except his colleague, Garrett Davis, and the President. I could not help that, but when the stampede from the galleries began I felt that my opportunity had come. Jumping to my feet I shouted: 'Senator McCreery is a Kentuckian, so am I. The first man who moves out of this gallery shall die.' All took their seats under duress, and for more than five mortal hours even we sat still, listening to his address. When it was over I lowered the pistol, which I had held ready in my hands, and the crowd started. With a gesture one man stopped the rush. 'Col. Wintersmith,' he said, 'we have staid here under duress at your request. Now let me ask you a favor.' 'It is granted before it is asked,' I said, not to be outdone in courtesy. He went on: 'Col. Wintersmith, we have been here nearly six hours, because we preferred to stay rather than be shot. But, if this emergency ever happens again, we ask you simply this—shoot, without any parley.' Some newspaper men got hold of it. McCreery's men were so angry with me that rather than see me elected they turned in and chose Beck."

A Home for the Poor.

Mrs. Alice M. Lincoln and other charitable Boston women have been trying their hands as landlords of the worst class of tenement-houses. They took a dilapidated, disreputable building, holding 27 families, and so sub-let it as to clear above all expenses, 6 per cent. on their investment. They have been running now between four and five years, and have made it so successful that they have recently hired a second building. They made their tenants scrub up and keep their rooms clean, and they turned in what they made over 6 per cent. in the way of improvements, among other things giving tenants who hired two rooms at $1.25 two more for 75 cents, in order to discourage indiscriminate herding. In spite of their strict requirements about cleanliness and their ejecting tenants who refused to comply with them, who were habitual drunkards, or who did not pay their rent promptly, their block has been full most of the time, and their reserve fund, above the 6 per cent. interest, has never been entirely exhausted. Once it had grown unusually large, and the women distributed a pair of blankets and a hand-beam and pitcher to each family. Aside from this they have given only $1 in charity during the four years, and have not remitted a week's rent.

SOMETHING funny about a cart wheel; it cannot do much work until it gets tired.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE DEFEATED.

The Massachusetts House Opposed to It—A Majority of 94.

The Massachusetts House of Representatives disposed of, for the session, the proposition that in the conduct of municipal affairs women shall have all the political rights and privileges that now belong to men. This action grew out of an adverse report, for which a favorable bill was offered. It was the most decisive that has ever been had on this subject, the vote standing 50 yeas, 144 nays, and 11 pairs. Last year the vote was 60 yeas and 127 nays, and 20 pairs. It will be seen that this year with a total recorded vote and expressed opinion of 11 less than those of last year, the majority against the measure was increased by 17, and the minority for it was lessened 10, showing a total loss of 37. The Journal says that, so far as the records show, woman suffrage in any form was first presented to the General Court of 1867, when the House, by a vote of 44 to 67, refused to indorse it. From that time to the present, except in the years 1874 and 1875, this subject, in some shape, has been acted upon by the House, which has, without exception, rejected it by a vote that has varied materially. Last year the vote for municipal woman suffrage was proportionately smaller than it had ever been, and now it is proportionately much less than it was then. The average vote for the fifteen years of which there is record has been 71 in the affirmative and 118 in the negative. Yet with these figures and their growth staring them in the face, there is no reason to suppose that the advocates of woman suffrage will cease to urge their claims upon the next Legislature and upon many more that will follow it.

It was expected that the measure would be defeated, but the vote against it was surprisingly large. It was thus made up: Yeas—25 Republicans, 23 Democrats, 2 Greenbackers. Nays—86 Republicans, 56 Democrats, 1 Independent, 1 Independent Democrat. Of those who paired—6 Republicans, 3 Democrats, 1 Independent, and 1 Independent Democrat, favored this extension of suffrage, and 7 Republicans, 3 Democrats and 1 Independent opposed.

A Slave Dealer for Governor.

General Gordon advises the appointment of Zobehr Pacha to succeed himself as Governor of the Soudan. Dr. Schweinfurth gives a vivid description of a visit paid to Zobehr Pacha in 1871. Zobehr possesses a line of thirty fortified posts, reaching far into the heart of Africa, by means of which he had not only become the head of all the slave dealers, but was the real and sole chief of their country. The Khedive, powerless to control this formidable vassal, had sent his troops to join him in an expedition against the Sultan of Darfour. Unfortunately for himself, Zobehr went down to Cairo to assert his claim to be made Governor of that province, carrying with him, it is said, £100,000 to be used as bribes. He was detained at Cairo, and put upon the pension list with £100 a month. A message from Zobehr forwarded to his son and the officers who had sworn fidelity to him under the great tree at Shaka, as described by Colonel Gordon, produced a speedy revolt among the slave dealers. It was this revolt which was crushed by Gessi Pacha, who shot Suleiman, Zobehr's son. He also slew all his officers except one, who escaped, and is now supposed by some to be the Mahdi.

Zobehr was kept as a State prisoner at the capital. Ten years passed. Another pretender annihilated the Egyptian forces and menaced Egypt itself with invasion. Then the officials at Cairo, being manifestly without resources, applied to the distinguished captive. Would he go back to his home? Would he summon his faithful Nubians to his standard? Would he for pity's sake do something to stay the advance of this fanatical plague? Yes. He would do all this. He would lead, in the Khedive's name, the Black Contingent of the Soudan expeditionary force. Very good, said the Ministers; but leave us, pray, your wife and daughter as hostages—shall we say?—for your good behavior. Yes. By all means, said Zobehr. Keep them and welcome. But secretly he sent off his spouse to Suakim; not so secretly, however, but that the Vizier heard of it, and so Zobehr himself was arrested. However, he was afterward set free again.

A Start in Life.

"Well, son, did you get any cases to-day?" asked a father of a son who had been admitted to the bar about six months ago.

"No, father; none yet. I am very much discouraged."

"Perhaps you don't use the proper method to get cases. You should never appear upon the streets without carrying in your hand a sheet of cap paper folded up so as to look like a legal document; rush about as if you were loaded down with business. When in your office and anyone comes in, be busy writing out a deed or something, and when in court never fail to cock your feet up on the table, break up your hair and look wiser than the judge if you can. That's the way those fellows who succeed in law so well all do."

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER THIS WEEK.

KEEPING DUCKS.

An Irish gentleman visited the municipal court, and walking up to the judge on the bench, said: "Joodge, the wather pipe at the hydrant beyant me house has bursht, and it has flooded me cellar and is drowning me hins. Me name is McCarthy, joodge." The judge sympathized with him, and was sorry for the damp life his hens were leading, but told him he would have to go to the board of public works and complain. McCarthy went away, but the next morning he came back to the judge and told the same story about the "wather" and the "hins," when the judge said, "I told you to go to the board of public works and tell your story." "And I did," said McCarthy. "And what did they say?" asked the judge. McCarthy looked indignant and said, "The man axed me, 'McCarthy,' says he, 'Why in thunder don't you kape ducks?'"

HOW TO BEGIN HOUSEKEEPING.

"You say you want to marry my daughter?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are you prepared to give her a pleasant home and the luxuries to which she has always been accustomed?"

"I don t believe I am, sir; I only get seven dollars a week."

"Yes. Well, do you know that young women nowadays expect to begin house keeping in the same style their parents leave off?"

"Oh, yes; I know all about that."

"You do. Well, how can you reconcile seven dollars a week with my surroundings?"

"I—I thought," responded the intelligent young man, while his face beamed with love and hope, "that we could live right along with you, you know, until the time came for you to—to leave off, and then the matter would—would sort of regulate itself, you know."

A BADGE OF MOURNING.

"Well, Brown was a good fellow and I am sorry he is gone," said a Western editor to the proprietor of the paper. "He worked hard all his life and died poor, the way of most newspaper men."

"Yes," responded the proprietor, with considerable feeling, "Brown was a good printer and it will be hard to fill his place."

"I suppose we ought to attach something to the door in the shape of a badge of mourning for a little while," suggested the editor.

"It would be a good idea, but I don't believe there is anything about the place that would answer the purpose, and in the present feeble financial condition of the concern I don't feel like putting out any money for crape."

"No," mused the editor, "it would be better to settle up back salaries first, but now I think of it, I know just the thing."

"What is it?" asked the proprietor.

"We might hang out one of the composing-room towels."—Phila. Call.

BOUND TO COLLECT SOMETHING.

A colored man entered a grocery and asked for a cash contribution of twenty-five cents toward the erection of a new colored people's church edifice.

"Where is it to be located?" asked the grocer.

"Wall, that hasn't bin dun decided on yet."

"What is it to cost?"

"Hain't figgered on dat, sah."

"Who is the pastor?"

"Dun forgit; but I reckon we can find one."

"Who is the head man of this enterprise?"

"De head man! Wall, Ize bout de head man, I reckon."

"I am not satisfied with your explanations," said the grocer. "How can I be certain that you won't appropriate the money to your own purposes?"

"Am dat what bodders you?"

"I confess it is."

"Well, sah, we kin git ober dat purty easy. Instead of making a cash contribution just weigh me out two pounds of crackers wid instrukshuns to turn 'em ober to de Buildin' Committee. Ise cheerman ob dat committee if I ain't nobody else!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE AMENDE HONORABLE.

A stranger traveling on horseback through the backwoods of Arkansas was very much impressed with the familiarity that existed between the pigs and the natives. The swine had a free pass to the privileges of the house, and seemed to make liberal use of it. Riding up to a shanty, the stranger asked a tall, unkempt specimen of humanity:

"Why don't you keep your pigs out of your house?"

"Look here, stranger," responded the Arkansas man, putting his hands in his pockets, "ef you mean to say that my family ain't fitten for hogs to associate with, just come out like a man and say it."

The stranger immediately appeased the native by conceding that the former was a fit associate for a hog, and the usual greeting of: "Light, stranger, and have some stummons beer. Roll a pumpkin out from under the bed, and make yourself at hum. When you first spoke, I thought you was getting some sarcastic on me, and I don't propose to take any of that on."—Arkansaw Traveler.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., MAY 8, 1884.

The Alabama Press Association met yesterday at Eufaula, and will continue in session until Friday next.

A single cattle ranch, in Texas, at the head of Red River, is said to contain nearly 25,000 acres more than the entire State of Rhode Island contains in territory.

The Circuit Court of the United States convened at Montgomery on last Monday. Under an order of Court no criminal case will be called for trial before Monday the 19th inst.

The Mobile Rifles and the Montgomery Greys, have gone to Houston, Texas, this week, to take part in the competitive drill at that place. We hope one of the Alabama companies may win.

Col. John H. Parker, of Coosa, chairman of the Executive Committee of the 5th Congressional district, announces that the committee will meet in Montgomery during the session of the State Convention and select a time and place for holding the Congressional Convention for this district.

The memorial corner-stone of the new building of the State University was placed in position on the 5th inst. A number of documents pertaining to the history of the University, and a number of rare coins were deposited in the stone. Gov. O'Neal was present, and made an address to the students.

We find the following in last week's Abbeville (Ala.) Times:

"The contest for Auditor will likely be between Col. John G. Bass, ex-warden of the penitentiary, and Col. Robt. McKee, who has made a very poor record as Governor for the past two terms, while acting as private secretary to the Governor.

There is postively no limit to the assortment of alibis Frank James can prove. In the case of any crime charged to him in the last fifteen years he can bring witnesses by the dozen to prove that the very hour the crime was committed he was engaged in honorable and peaceful pursuits hundreds of miles from the scene.—Ex.

New Haven is said to have 617 more inhabitants than the whole State of Nevada, with its Representative and two Senators. A Connecticut paper adds that the town of union, in that State, with 600 persons, sends two representatives to the Legislature, and has as much voice in the body as New Haven, with a population of over 70,000.

Col. Preston Johnston, a son of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, is reported by the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Field as saying of the battle of Shiloh: "When my father was shot, and fell from his horse, he had gained a great victory; and if he had not been killed at that critical moment, in two hours more he would have captured Gen. Grant and his whole army."

John Thomas, well known to the citizens of your village as pupil of Six Mile Academy, has secured a good situation as teacher, in the neighborhood of Macedonia church, in Chilton. We congratulate the neighborhood in having been so fortunate as to secure the services of so deservedly popular and well qualified a young man as Mr. Thomas.—Bibb Blade.

Old Dan had used his neighbors' fence as fire-wood, and was accordingly brought before the court to answer for the same.

"Have you any lawyer for defense?" asked the judge, as Dan took his place.

"No, sar, I hab not," replied the negro. "Kase yo' know, judge, 'taint de fence what needs a lawyer, bit am dis po' niggah, dat am in fer it; I spec' yer better pint one for him.

While Antonio Morie, an Italian bootblack, was shining a pair of boots belonging to a marketman in the market corner of Broome and Centre streets yesterday, he found a roll of bills amounting to $700 in the leg of one of the boots. The money had fallen through a hole in the mans pocket into his boot, and the man did not discover his loss when he took the boot off. The boy returned the money to the owner, who gave him as a reward five cents for the shine.

Horrible Death.

Last Friday evening Mrs. Bob Brasher, of the Waxahatchie neighborhood, was out fishing. She sat in one place a long time, and when she arose to leave, a snake, supposed to be a hoop snake, struck her on the ankle. She was immediately given whiskey and other remidies, but to no purpose. She died last Saturday morning from the effect. This snake is said to be the most poisonous in the world, but we were not aware before that any of them were in this country. We extend our heartfelt sympathies to the bereaved husband and relatives.—Shelby Chronicle.

Congressional Convention.

Inasmuch as our county has no axe to grind we insist that the Congressional convention of the 5th district be held in this place. Our county has never had the convention, and as before stated, this being neutral ground it is certainly the place for the fight. Our hotel room is amply sufficient for the accommodation of all the delegates and visitors, and our entire citizenship will extend them a hearty greeting. Give us the convention and let us see the tussle for the nomination and we will pledge a full vote for the nominee, matters not who he may be. We think this much courtesy, at least, is due our country, and we claim it.—Lafayette Sun.

If nominations are in order and we can have the floor for a few moments, we will present the name of Clanton, Chilton county. Clanton has all the advantages set forth by the Sun, besides it is easy of access by railroad, and our end of the district has never had the convention. What says the congressional committee?—Bibb Blade.

We will of course second the motion of the Blade. Clanton is located on the principal railroad line of the State and is easily accessible from all parts of the district.

The Exposition.

This press has repeatedly called attention to the grandeur and great work now being inaugurated in New Orleans—the perfecting of arrangements for holding, in that city, a World's Exposition, to be opened December 1st, 1884. It is truly a great work, every citizen of the Southern States has cause to feel a pride in the success of this enterprise. Foreign countries are preparing to exhibit, and with the necessary funds already in hand, it is evident that the managers of the exposition intend to make it a work of grandeur and magnificence unsurpassed. It is to be called the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Eposition.

The words "Cotton Centennial" appear in the name because the year 1884 is the Centennial anniversary of the entry of cotton as a factor in the commerce of the world, and yet "the breadth of the Exposition's scope will be unlimited." In the language of Director-General Burke—we quote from a recent editorial of his in the Times-Democrat:

"Not only in name, but in purpose, is it to be a World's Exposition. To its spacious halls will come commodities from all continents. The wonders of mechanical skill, with the remarkable productions of forest and field; the gems from the hidden depths of the earth's crust, and minerals from the mine—all will find ample room in the display. Art with her gorgeous revelations will enchant the eye and instruct the mind, and whatsoever tends to show the progress of Nations or States, their resources, products or manufactures, will be those things desirable from exhibitors. The breadth of scope is unlimited, and so far from its being confined to cotton, in the multitudinous entries it is probable cotton will be but a component part." The Times-Democrat adds that the contemplated buildings will be on a scale equal to the demands of so wide-sweeping a scope. The main hall, for instance, will be in area as large, if not larger, than that of the Centennial building at Philadelphia, and the grounds will afford more ample space for ornamental work and other structures. South America and Mexico are already preparing to exhibit there, and all other foreign lands will take a part."

It is needless to enumerate the benefits that will surely flow from such an exposition in the South, and that each Southern State should be represented with an appropriate display of its products and resources is indeed a serious question. It will not do for any one of them to fail in this respect. The interests of the people demand some action, and we believe that every Southern State will be shown up to the thousands who will visit the exposition in such a manner as to redound to a future greatness that it is now difficult to conceive of. We shall have more to say on this subject as the arrangements progress.

County Newspapers.

Under the above caption, the Philadelphia Times, a journal of unexceptionable excellence, has the following to say in reference to the value of a local newspaper to the section it represents. The article is full of sensible logic and carries with it the force of truth. The Times says:

The country newspaper is the most useful and least compensated of all the agencies which stamp the impress of progress upon villages and inland cities. Without the aid of local newspapers local towns are, as a rule thriftless and dead. It is common for small great men to speak with contempt of the local newspaper, but the village newspaper makes more great men of less material—more bricks without the straw—than any other factor in politics, and it is the one ladder on which men climb to local distinction as the beginning of wider fame. The advent of the local newspaper has always dated the increased thrift of the community. The local newspaper is the life of the locality, and the measure of its support as a rule, measures the advancement of the people. Not only subscribe but pay for your local newspapers. They are the friends and help meetes of all seasons.

Anniston.

Eleven brick stores are now in course of erection and the contractors are figuring on more.

Some of the farmers in Alexander Valley had to rent new land on which to plant their crops, as the land they had prepared bofore the flood was entirely washed away.

Last Saturday about three miles from here Mr. Millard Zuber was attacked by two highwaymen and made to deliver up the contents of his pockets. The robbers succeeded in getting from him $210. No clue as yet to the perpetrators.

The last was an eventful week in the history of Anniston. The Woodstock Iron Company have sold more lots during the week than any previous month, and to a class of citizens who will materially aid in building up Anniston.

In addition to the sale of lots, every man who could handle a spade or shove a plane has been called into requestion to assist in putting up the stores and dwellings let to contractors. Bright and early Monday morning squads of men were hurrying from one part of the city to the other, while everything that could pull a load of dirt was hitched to wagons to haul it from the excavations being made for cellars and foundations for the buildings.—Hot Blast.

MACON Co., Ala. May 1st 1884.

MR. EDITOR:

Sometime ago you had an article in your excellent paper urging Col. W. S. Thorington, of Montgomery, for the office of Attorney General. The many friends of that gentleman greatly admired and commended it, and hope that you will continue to keep his claims before the people until the nomination, which they confidently believe will result in his success. The convention is to come off soon and his friends should use every effort in his behalf. Chilton county which bears the name of one of the most distinguished lawyers, judges, and statesmen of the state, eminent alike in private and public life, and the father-in-law of Col. Thorington, should support him with enthusiasm and give him every vote she has in the convention. Here in this county, where Judge Chilton lived for many years, and Mrs. Thorington and most of his other children were born, and for whom our people had and still cherish the greatest admiration and attachment, and where Col. Thorington is himself well know, no man will receive a warmer support.

Col. Thorington is in the vigor of manhood and is mentally and physically equal to the duties of any position, and especially the one to which he aspires requiring legal attainments of the first order. The bar of Montgomery, and of the State, who know him, bear witness of his fitness and his talents. Attention to detail, thoroughness of research and preparation in his cases are admitted and admired. Coming of a family of the highest charactor in the city of Montgomery, he is eminently worthy of his heritage, a christian gentleman, with unexceptionable habits. No man can have higher claims upon the people and we sincerely hope he will receive the endorsement of their delegates and secure the nomination. MACON.

Jones—You don't mean to say you have become a free trader? Why, you are a manufacturer, and depend for existence on protection.

Smith—I was a manufacturer until a few weeks ago, when I sold out, and bought a newspaper, a political organ, in a neighboring city.

Jones—But free trade will hurt newspapers just as much as any other business.

Smith—It wont hurt me. On the contrary, free trade would make my fortune.

Jones—How in the world do you figure that?

Smith—Well, you see, my paper is going to get all the Sheriff's advertising.

Call for a County Convention.

The voters of the Democratic and Conservative party of Chilton county are requested to meet at the places of voting in their respective beats on Saturday, the 17th day of May next, to select by ballot delegates to a county convention to be held at Clanton, on Wednesday, the 21st day of May, 1884.

The business of said convention will be to select delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions, and to attend to such other business as may properly come before it.

The representation in said county convention, fixed upon the basis of the Gubernatorial vote of 1878, will entitle each beat to the following number of delegates, to-wit:

Beat 1—Minus X Roads	2
Beat 2—Providence and Jemison	6
Beat 3—Benson and Macedonia	4
Beat 4—Clanton	12
Beat 5—Verbena and Coopers	10
Beat 6—Kincheon	1
Beat 7—Maplesville	5
Beat 8—Dixie	5

The following named persons have been appointed as beat committees in their respective beats, to-wit:

Beat 1—H. C. Young, W. H. Marcus, D. H. Mullins.

Beat 2—J. P. Vanderveer, Chas. H. Smith, R. A. Miears.

Beat 3—J. L. Williams, David White, Seaborn Jones.

Beat 4—W. E. Stewart, J. M. Bivings, J. R. Jones.

Beat 5—G. L. Zimmerman, W. R. Scott, L. Moore.

Beat 6—J. A. Hathcock, J. R. Kemp, W. H. Mills.

Beat 7—Noah W. Foshee, W. S. Lawrence, W. J. Atchinson.

Beat 8—J. W. Broadhead, Thomas Parnell, Samuel Keyser.

The beat committees are charged with conducting the elections for delegates to the county convention.

It is suggested that in beats having two places of voting elections be held at each box for one-half the delegates allowed that beat.

It is earnestly requested that the beat committees exert themselves to get the entire vote of the party to attend the beat elections and express their wishes regarding the question of nominating candidates for the House of Representatives and for county offices.

By order of the committee.

S. T. BRITTLE, Chairman.
W. H. LAWRENCE, Secretary.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

—:o:—

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Chceny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county at the election in August next, and respectfully solicit the support of my friends and fellow-citizens.

EDMOND H. LOWE, JR.

We are authorized to announce

Dr. T. E. CALLIER

as a candidate for State Senator from the district composed of the counties of Chilton, Elmore and Coosa, subject to the action of the Democratic nominating convention.

We are authorized to announce

WILLIAM C. HESTER

as a candidate for the office of Tax Collector, of Chilton county, at the approaching August election.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Mrs. Anderson, of Jemison, is visiting relatives here this week.

Dr. J. S. Johnson, Jr., has removed to Clanton, where he will reside and practice his profession.

The base ball fever has about died out among our boys since the game at Verbena last Friday.

Married, in this place, on the 1st inst., by Judge H. J. Callen, Mr. George Brigants and Miss C. J. Dennis.

Rev. J. W. Shores gave a lecture on the subject, of Methodism, at the Methodist church, last Monday night.

Mrs. Geo. Bivings nee Miss Lucia Lanier, of Birmingham, is now on a visit to her father's family, near this place.

Several of our young men visited Montgomery, the latter part of last week. They report a pleasant trip.

Maj. W. P. Vanderveer, father of Mr. J. P. Vanderver, of Clear Creek, died of heart disease at his home in Montgomery last week, aged 74 years.

The beat committees have instructions to conduct the beat primary elections for delegates to the county convention just as a general election is conducted.

Rev. J. W. Shores filled his regular appointment in the Methodist church, at this place, last Sabbath morning. The pulpit was filled in the evening by Rev. Mr. Blue, presiding elder.

Mr. F. R. McCary has sent us a specimen of wheat grown on his place near Cooper's Station. It is well headed out and is five feet in height. Good for Mr. McCary and his piney woods land.

From one of Edgar A. Poe's grotesque tales, we quote this truism for the benefit of our lady readers: "Babies, like tough steaks, or the modern Greek olive trees, are invariably the better for beating."

Ben Benson, who stabbed and killed Morgan Glascock in the Jumbo settlement some weeks since was arrested by Sheriff Garner on last Friday. Benson was found at the house of his father. He is now in jail.

We would like to say to "Bijou" that he is mistaken about the Verbena boys playing against a picked nine, as there was only one boy in the Clanton nine who does not reside here, and he is a member of the club, having joined some months ago.

The editor is absent this week, attending the Press Convention. The "sub" he has left in charge, has worn a hole in the floor with the southeast hind leg of his chair, scratched all the hair out of his head, and turned his wits over until he has worn all the edge off of them, and is still at a loss to know why it is he can't think of anything to write.

State S. S. Convention.

The Louisville and Nashville railroad will carry delegates from any point on this road to Selma for full fare going and one cent per mile returning. Tickets will be on sale at the depots on May 19th and 20th and will be good until 23rd. JAMES H. FRANKLIN,
Chairman Ex. Com.

We return thanks to the business managers of the Birmingham Music Festival for a complimentary season ticket. The festival takes place in O'Brien's opera house on next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, May 13th and 14th. Excursion rates will be given by all rail roads leading into Birmingham.

A Pleasant May Day.

Quite a large party of Clantonians took the early morning train on last Friday for Verbena where a pic-nic and game of ball were to be the order of the day. The day was bright and glorious and the party glad and cheerful. Being unable to get our peepers open in time for the train, we are indebted for our presence upon the grounds to Mr. J. H. Aldridge, who carried us down behind his fine and fleetfooted chestnut "Benjamin Franklin." We arrived just in time to be waited upon by a couple of Verbena's charming ladies, who considerately took charge of us and set before our hungry visions a dinner fit for high Olympus and his Gods. After dinner every body was invited to witness the game of ball between the Clanton "Eagles" and the Verbena "Black Hawks." The game interested every one, and the cheering would have done justice to a worthier cause, perhaps. A very poor game was played by both clubs. The Clanton club was this time victorious.

The days pleasures closed with a dance at the Clifton House, which we did not attend. A fine band of music, we learn, was on hand from Montgomery, and a gala time was spent by those who attended.

Such a happy day could but result in another addition to a cluster of pleasant and beautiful memories which we have gathered of Verbena and her hospitable people.

Verbena Views.

Sunday's shower has made quite a change in the weather.

Corn is growing finely and looks promising.

Pic-nic was a success and highly enjoyed by those fortunate enough to attend.

At the meeting of the board of trustees, last week, Prof. W. U. Acree was unanimously elected principle of the Verbena academy.

The score of last fridays game indicated very poor playing by both clubs. Our boys did very well in view of the fact that they played against a picked club. The next and decisive game will be played at Clanton some time this month.

A millinery store is the latest addition to Verbena's attractions.

Quite a large number of fish were obtained by letting off the mill pond last week.

Mrs. A. J. DeBardeleben will visit her old home near Montgomery this week.

Rev. J. M. McCord preached a good sermon at the Baptist church last Thursday night.

Miss Lily Browder, of Montgomery, is visiting friends here this week.

Mr. Milo Barrett and family, of Montgomery, have moved here and will remain during the Summer.

The Baptist Sunday school re-organized last Sunday. Slight changes were made in the old management. Both schools of this place are in a prosperous condition.

Verbena academy closes on the 20th of June. A large number of pupils are still on the roll.

BIJOU.

Maplesville Dots.

Farm matters are progressing finely.

Farmers are well up with their work.

One large farm of which a large portion has been out of cultivation for several years is all planted this year in corn or cotton.

In consequence of the short crops of last year the merchants have found it necessary to make large advances to farmers.

Maplesville school will close on the 15th of May. Miss Sallie Lilles, the accomplished young lady in charge, has done good work for her patrons during the two years of her stay.

Sunday schools and churches are in a flourishing condition, and, on the whole, we were impressed with the significant fact that there's life in the old place yet.

Maplesville has felt the Spring reaction and has roused herself from the Winter sleep. Every body, from the ponderous citizen to the diminutive darkey, wears the pleasant smile of peace and contentment.

The noisy candidates have not yet put in their appearance. They will come when the hot days of Summer drives the farmer to the cooling shade of some paternal oak where he can enjoy a good nap while the said candidates are trying to rouse him by heroic but unsuccessful efforts in portraying the evils of the jury system, the worthlessness of our ancient road laws, the wrongs of the long abused school teacher, and who knows all of the whole category of legislative legislation.

Mountain Creek Locals.

Pleasant showery weather.

Potatoes, peas and straw-berries are plentiful in our market.

Among our recent visitors were Capt. Bush, Mrs. Blakey, of Montgomery, and Mrs. Scott, of Birmingham.

Mr. John Pryon has been quite ill, with pneumonia, for several days. We extend our sympathy to his family and hope soon to see him well.

Miss Lizzie Cameron is visiting relatives in Birmingham.

Mr. Hazard Thomason, of this place, and Miss Mary Enslen, of Wetumpka, were married on April 29th. We congratulate Mr. Thomason on winning this fair young lady for his bride. May pleasant breezes waft them o'er life's stream, and at last bring them into the haven of rest, is our prayer.

AILEEN.

"I say," said a railroad brakeman, running into a depot restaurant, "the forward trucks of my car have slipped off the rails.—Have you got a piece of iron anywhere about that we could use for a lever?"

"I don't believe I have," replied the propritor.

"What's this?" asked the brakeman, trying to lift something from the counter.

"That's sponge cake."

"Well, I guess it will do if it isn't too brittle. I will bring it back in a minute."—Philadelphia Call.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

HE FEELS LIKE A NEW MAN.—"I have had Dyspepsia, with Constipation, two years, and have tried ten old kinds of pills, and TUTT'S are the only ones that have done me any good. ERRORS OF A SNOW SLIDE.

A GALLANT RESCUE.

Family Buried Under an Avalanche in Woodford—In Darkness and Terror.

[From the Carson Appeal.]

John Engelbright, who reached the city, brought the news of a gallant rescue of a family of six persons found under a snow slide in Woodford's Canyon. The scene of the snow slide was on old deserted shingle mill. Woodford's canyon is a deep and picturesque gorge in the mountains, five or six miles long, and leads into Hope valley. In the fall of last year a family, consisting of a man and his wife and four children, came over the mountains and camped at the old shingle mill in the canyon. The season was very late, and though repeatedly warned, the family, deceived by the pleasant weather, continued to remain. After the first snow the man, whose name was Maxwell, came down to Woodford's and made arrangements to have two horses taken care of during the winter. He said he had no money to pay for the feed at the time, but would redeem them in the spring. He also said that he made up his mind to winter in the canyon, as he had provisions, and game was abundant. He was advised not to take the risks, but he said the place he was in was a strong structure, and as it had given evidence of standing a good many winters he would risk it.

On Thursday there was a heavy fall of snow in the canyon, followed by a sunny day on Friday. During the day there were several large slides of snow from the rocks which rise on the sides of the canyon, in some instances as high as 300 feet. Heavy bodies of snow toppled over from these heights, and in their descent carried away large masses of rock, which felled the pines at the bottom of the gorge. During the night Mr. Mark, the toll-gate keeper, heard several of these slides, and the next day the road up to the canyon was choked with snow. On Sunday he went up to the shingle mill on snow shoes, and found that the place occupied by the family had been buried under the snow. The slide had commenced on the steep mountain side, about 200 yards up the slope, and started a number of boulders in its course. The track of the avalanche was marked with prostrate pines, and the mass of snow upon the log structure lay packed hard to the depth of ten or fifteen feet. Seeing he could do nothing, Mark returned to Woodford's and soon raised a force of a dozen or twenty men, who went up with shovels and picks and other appliances to effect a rescue.

The snow was packed so hard that it was almost like solid rock, and required picks wielded by stout hands to loosen it. By night they had reached the logs which formed part of the stable, and found that the roof had been crushed in by a boulder. By this time the force had been augmented, and, building a rousing fire in the snow, they worked in four shifts of six men each, each shift working an hour. Woodford's Station was drawn on for supplies, and with plenty of food and stimulants, the men kept to their work. During a portion of the time two shifts worked at separate places.

At a little before 11 o'clock the workmen cleared away a place where they reached one of the logs which formed a portion of the wall of the stable. They hammered on this with an axe and waited for an answering knock. While they waited and listened with intense interest, one of them vowed that he could hear faint taps from within, but the others doubted. The log was again struck with an axe, and this time there came several distinct knocks, and the outsiders broke into a cheer that made the old canyon ring. By midnight they had cut through the log, but it was hard work, as the snow was packed hard about it, and the hole made was not over a few inches wide at the lower end. When the edge of the axe went through they called at the aperture, and were answered by a voice: "For God's sake push in something to eat; my children are dying." In a moment bread, meat and a small flask of brandy were passed through the aperture, and the wearied toilers in the snow turned to the work and made a fresh attack upon the log which imprisoned six people. They cleared away the snow several feet above and it was 3 o'clock in the morning before they cut through the log, about six feet above the first cut. Then came a fear that the place between the two cuts would fall inward and crush the family. The second hole, however, gave a better chance of communication, and Maxwell said that if they would get a candle in to him he would tell where the log would fall. A candle was taken from a lantern and given to him with matches tied to it. In a few moments the glow of a light was seen from the outside, and this light must have been very welcome to the Maxwell family, as they had been in total darkness since Friday night, when the avalanche struck the stable. He soon called out to push the log forward, but it was fast and required considerable prying with crowbars before it yielded.

Those nearest the aperture followed the log, and climbed through the opening with lanterns. There, in a space about ten feet square, was Maxwell and his family. His wife was lying on a mattress and some blankets, with a baby child in her arms, and three children clinging to her and crying bitterly. When the lantern shone on their faces they put their hands to their eyes and turned away in fear. The woman was hardly able to move, and Maxwell, who had kept a stout heart through all the long days and nights of darkness, broke out at this point, and cried like a child.

Chester, the eldest boy, who is but 8 years of age, had worked with his father to get out, and was worn out with hunger and exhaustion. There were two loaves of bread within reach after the roof of the stable [illegible] the little fellow refused to touch a morsel, giving all to his mother and sister. This was all the mother, the baby, and the two daughters—Mary and Callie—aged 4 and 6 years, respectively, had to live on since Friday afternoon, when they took dinner, until about midnight on Sunday. There was plenty of flour and some game on the place, but the logs of the roof, which were crushed in, cut off all communication from these, although Maxwell and his son had vainly endeavored to cut away through a three-foot log with a jack-knife. The inmates of the terrible prison were taken in sleighs to Woodford's, where they were soon as comfortable as warm fires, good provisions, and kind attention could make them. When Mr. Engelbright left for Woodford's on Monday afternoon they were all doing well, and were the recipients of all the attention that the little camp could bestow. Mr. Merk, the honest old German who keeps the toll gate, and who first found the Maxwell family, is now the biggest man in the canyon.

Rents in New York.

For houses in fifth avenue between Tenth street and Fifty-sixth street says the Sun, the rents are all the way from $1,500 to $15,000 a year. The ordinary Fifth avenue house rents for $5,000 or $6,000, while $7,000 and $8,000 rents are common, but Madison avenue has taken the place of Fifth avenue as a residence street, and four-story high-stoop brownstone houses there rent for from $3,000 to $5,000, according to locality and finish, and even at those rates there are not many houses to rent. In the quiet cross streets between Madison and Park avenues and between Madison and Fifth avenues four-story high-stoop brownstone houses rent for from $2,000 to $4,500. Even in Lexington avenue, from Twenty-ninth to Seventy-sixth street, three-story high-stoop brown-stone houses rent for from $1,800 to $2,000 a year. Throughout the city, where separate houses are to be hired, the rents range about the figures given. For instance, a four-story high-stoop brownstone house in West Washington-square rents for $4,000; a three story high-stoop brick house in East Tenth street, near University place, for $2,000 or $2,500; a four-story high-stoop brick house in West Seventeenth street, near Fifth avenue, for $2,500; a four-story high-stoop brick house in East Twenty-first street, between Lexington and Fourth avenues, for $4,000; a four-story high-stoop brown-stone house in West Twenty-ninth street, between Broadway and Fifth avenue, for $5,000; a four-story high-stoop brown-stone house in East Thirty-second street, between Fifth and Madison avenues, for $4,000; the same kind of a house in West Thirty-fourth street, near Fifth avenue, for $4,500; in east Fifty-seventh street, with a little better finish, $5,000. In short, for the money that is required as rent for a first-class dwelling house for one year a man can buy ground and a house in the suburbs, within an hour's ride of the City Hall in various directions. All the prices thus far given are for unfurnished houses. For similar houses furnished the prices range from $300 to $700 a month, and no house can be had except on the best references and good security.

Do Crows Know When Sunday Comes?

A large number of crows were foraging for food quite close to the house of a farmer residing in a town near Hartford, Ct. They were unusually bold, as though hunger had driven them to forget their usual shyness and distrust of their natural enemies—man. Two of them lit close to the back door and picked up the crumbs with a seeming assurance of their safety not easily accounted for. The farmer was telling a neighbor about the tameness of the birds and the latter remarked, "You won't see them so foolhardy to-morrow." "Why not to-morrow as well as to-day?" was the answer. "Because to-day is Sunday, and those crows know it. They know that one day in every seven they are not popped at by boys and men. They can count, crows can, and they know that on the seventh day they are exempt from persecution." "Do you believe such stuff as that?" "Of course I do. I used to live near a swamp, where thousands of crows made their roosting place, and early in the morning they used to start for the mountains for their food. And I was often out with my gun trying to get a shot at them. Week-days they beat shy of me, and I could seldom get a shot at them; but on Sunday morning it was different. Then they would fly low down and close to my house, their wings almost flapping the ridge-boards of house and barns. Do crows know when it is Sunday? Of course they do."

The Wealthiest Man.

At the beginning of every year, says a newspaper correspondent, Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt, of New York, makes it an invariable custom to take a careful inventory of his immense property. His strong-boxes are then opened, their contents counted, and from the total the profit for the year is reckoned. In January, 1883, he told an intimate friend, who had dined with him that day, that he was worth $194,000,000.

"I believe I am," said Mr. Vanderbilt, "the richest man in the world. In England, the Duke of Westminster is said to be worth $200,000,000 but it is mostly in lands and houses. It does not yield him two per cent. A year from now I shall be worth more than $200,000,000, and will have an income equal to six per cent. on that amount."

Little Frank, aged five, was not awake when the rest of the family went down to breakfast the other morning. Just as the meal was finished, he made his appearance at the dining-room door. His mother rallied him upon his tardiness, and he replied, rather shamefacedly, "I guess I slept myself over."

A Woman Soldier's Pension Claim.

A singular story is announced with two bills offered in the House by Representative Cutcheon, of Michigan. One provides for the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of Franklin Thompson, of a Michigan regiment, and the other grants a pension to Sarah Emma E. Seelye, alias Franklin Thompson, of the same regiment. At the outbreak of the war Miss Seelye, as she saw regiment after regiment hurrying Southward, had a growing desire to go to the front herself. She wanted to go as a nurse, but, after thinking it over, came to the conclusion that it would be better to put on a man's uniform and go to the war as a private in a Detroit regiment. So she did. She went with the regiment to Washington. She went into camp with it. She went to Bull Run with it, carrying her musket and her accoutrements like a man. After the battle of Bull Run she found herself separated from her regiment, between the Federal and Confederate lines. Through the night she trudged toward Washington, where she arrived twenty-four hours' behind her friends. She then went with them to Fredericksburg, and afterward through the Peninsula campaign. Everywhere she marched and fought and lived like a man. It began to tell upon her health, however, so she had herself transferred to one of the Western armies. Here, after a time, she became a mail carrier, first for the regiment, then for the brigade, and then for the division. While performing the duties she fell ill, and was ordered to the hospital. There she felt sure her sex would be discovered. Accordingly she determined not to go to the hospital. The only way out was to desert. Afterward, in her own clothes and under her own name, she returned to the army as a nurse and cared for her late comrades to the end of the war. Now she is married, and lives in Iowa. Of course, the charge of desertion still stands against her. She wants it removed, and then she wants a pension for physical disabilities, which she says she incurred in the army.

Five Cents a Day.

The cumulative power of money is a fact very generally known, but not generally appreciated. There are few men living at the age of 75, hanging on to existence by some slender employment, or pensioners, it may be, on the bounty of kindred or friends, but might, by exercising the smallest particle of thrift, rigidly adhered to in the past, have set aside a respectable sum which would materially help them to maintain their independence in their old age. Let us take the small and insignificant sum of 5 cents, which we daily pay to have our boots blackened, to ride in a car the distance we are able to walk, or to procure a bad cigar we are better without, and see what its value is in the course of years. We will suppose a boy of 15, by blackening his own boots, or saving his car-fare, or going without his cherished cigarette, puts by 5 cents a day; in one year he saves $18.25, which being banked bears interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, compounded biyearly. On this basis, when our thrifty youth reaches the age of 65, having set his 5 cents per day religiously aside during 50 years, the result is surprising. He has accumulated no less a sum than $3,893.17. A scrutiny of the process of this result is interesting. At the age of 30 our hero had $395; at 40, $877; at 50, $1,667; at 60, $2,962. After 15 years saving, his annual interest more than equals his original principal; in 25 years it is more than double; in 35 years it is four times as much; in 45 years it is eight times as much, and the last year's interest is $86, or ten and a half times as much as the annual amount he puts by. The actual cash amount saved in 50 years is $912.50, the difference between that and the grand total of $3,893.17—viz., $2,980.67, is accumulated interest. What a magnificent premium for the minimum of thrift that can be well represented in figures!

Reveries of a Bachelor.

The true "Reveries of a Bachelor" is yet to be written. The scene will not be laid in a country house, but in the top story of a boarding-house, or may be in a room just about large enough to enable one good-sized person to turn around in it, there will be no wood fire there, with dying embers to glow and pale, there will be no fire at all there, unless it be the steadily burning, always redolent fire of the kerosene stove; there will be no toying of the wind in rough play with the shaky bricks and loose mortar of the chimney, but the adjacent roofs near at hand will be alive with cats raising rasping shrieks one to another. In such a room, among such surroundings, the bachelor begins to think seriously of married life, as he sits clumsily trying to thread the needle with which he will more clumsily sew on the button that must be made to stay ere he can sally forth a presentable biped. Did it never strike you why the modern shirt is fastened from end to end with studs, and trousers have fancy catches in places where the buttons ought to be? It is only the process of evolution adapting garments to the environment of an age in which marriage and the wife's needle are largely passing out of fashion.—Waterbury American.

A Sunrise Account.—Lesseps has a running account with sleep, taking twenty-four hours at a time, and at another some for five or six nights. In traveling he goes into the first compartment at hand, and sits anywhere; if he finds an agreeable companion he talks, if not he folds his arms and goes to sleep, never waking until he reaches his destination. When he went down the other day to Chessey, near Bourbaux, he requested the guard to wake him lest he should go beyond. On a voyage from Marseilles to Alexandria he slept 107 hours out of the 120 of the voyage, and then not for some days.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

A Certain Number of Letters Received and the Answers Made to Them.

The Secretary announced the following communication from Memphis:

The colored people of Memphis and vicinity have heard that the Lime-Kiln Club is donating the sum of $100 to each and every colored person desirous of immigrating to Liberia. There are 120 of us here who propose to start for that country early in May. Please forward $12,000 by express at once, and be sure to direct plainly to yours, truly,

Q. G. Quiggs, M. D., D. D. S.

"If dar' am any sich movement on fut in dis club I hain't heard of it," replied the President. "Indeed, I reckoned it was purty generally understood dat we would sooner pay a premium to our people to remain at home. Liberia may be a good locality fur a cull'd gem'len who wants to go to bed out doahs ten months in de y'ar, change shirts ebery six months, an' support his family on roots, but he will have to git dar' independent of any ackshun of dis club."

West Coast Thomason sent to the Secretary's desk a letter received by him from a Mrs. Crepps, of Milwaukee, asking the Lime-Kiln Club for the sum of $25. In attending the funeral of an honorary member of the club in that city she caught cold and was reduced to her bed for three weeks, and she wanted pay or would bring a lawsuit for $200.

"Ize sorry, very sorry," said the President, as he glanced over the epistle, "but de fund sot apart fur payin' dese sort o' claims am entirely exhausted, an' de woman will have to bring de suit."—Detroit Free Press.

The Plaything of an Empress.

Some marvels of the first great ice palace built by the Empress Anna Ivanovna, on the Neva, in 1739, are given in St. Nicholas for April: The inside of this great "plaything" was more wonderful than the exterior.

One of the apartments was a royal chamber. In it was a dressing-table fully set out with a looking-glass and all sorts of powder and essence boxes, jars, bottles, watch, and a pair of candlesticks and candles, all fashioned of ice. In the evening these candles were smeared with naptha and set in a blaze without melting. A great ice-mirror was hung against the wall. On the other side of the room was the bedstead, with bed, pillows, counterpane, and curtains, deftly wrought in ice. A large fire-place was on the right, with an elegantly carved mantel, and within it, upon the curious andirons, were placed logs of ice which were occasionally smeared with naptha and ignited.

The other principal room was alternately termed the dining-room and drawing-room. An elaborately constructed ice-table extended through the apartment. On each side were settees or sofas handsomely carved. In three of the corners were large statues; in the other was a handsome time-piece provided with wheels of ice, which were visible through the transparent case. All the other parts of the palace were fitted up in a corresponding manner.—"The Plaything of an Empress."

A Change of Name.

When about eight years of age, a lad named Thomas H. Prest, of New London, Conn., had the misfortune to lose his father. His mother subsequently took to herself another husband named Sayers, who removed the family to another part of the country, and the boy gradually became known as Thomas H. Sayers, a name which he did not repudiate. Thirteen years ago he went to Kansas City, Mo., and worked at his trade as tinsmith. He at first inadvertently gave his name as Sayers, and fearing that suspicion would be excited if he assumed his true name, his stepfather's patronymic adhered to him, and he was known as Thomas H. Sayers. In time he set up in business for himself, then he took a wife. His business prospered, and he accumulated a snug property. Of late years, however, a desire to restore his proper name became stronger and stronger, especially as he had become a father, and so the other day he determined to make the change A lawyer and a clergyman were called in to assist. The former transferred the property of Thomas H. Sayers to himself and then back to Thomas H. Prest, while the latter remarried the wife to the husband by his correct name. Finally, the sign of Thomas H. Sayers has come down, and that of Thomas H. Prest takes its place. It is doubtful if the novel incident has its parallel.—Boston Journal.

A Mixed Snake Story.

In North Carolina there is a reptile known as the joint snake. When attacked it flies into pieces, each piece taking care of itself. A darkey attacked one of them the other day and to his utter amazement it broke all up, each section jumping off in a different direction. In the course of an hour he returned that way and was utterly amazed again to see it all together except the tail-piece. After waiting a few minutes he saw the tail coming up to join the body, taking sharp, quick little jerks. It came nearer and nearer, until within a few inches of the three-quarter snake, when it gave a sudden jump and hitched on in its proper place with a fuss resembling the popping of a cap. The darkey knocked it to pieces several times, and each time it came together again. He carried his amusement too far, however, in throwing the tail part of the snake across the creek, just to see, he said, "how long it would take it to catch up;" but it never caught up. The snake, with its three joints, was carried to the house, where a new tail is beginning to grow to replace the lost one. A gentleman who knows much about this singular species says a head will grow on the detached trunk, and there will be two snakes instead of one.

REMINISCENCES OF ROCHESTER.

The Flight of the Genesee Fall Seen Clearly Through the Mists of Time by the Great Magician.

The present floods, which are either devastating or threatening the country in every direction, are justly cause for apprehension. No matter whether they come suddenly or by slow degrees, they are, in either case, a great evil and much to be dreaded, and yet America will always be troubled by these spring overflows. Probably one of the most disastrous that was ever known, occurred in Rochester, N. Y., about twenty years ago. The Genesee river, just above the falls, where Sam Patch made his final and fatal leap, became completely blockaded by ice, forming an impassable dam, and the water coming down the Genesee river overflowed the principal portion of the city of Rochester. This catastrophe would have been repeated the present year had not the energy and foresight of the city authorities prevented it. The writer happened to be in Rochester at that time, and was greatly interested in the manner in which this great catastrophe was averted. Every few moments, a roar like the peals of thunder or the booming of cannon would be heard, and in order to see this ice blasting process, the writer went to the top of the new Warner building, which overlooks the Genesee river. From here he was not only enabled to see the process uninterruptedly, but also the magnificent building which has just been completed. This is unquestionably the finest building devoted to business and manufacturing purposes in America, being entirely fireproof, eight stories high, and containing over four and a quarter acres of flooring. Mr. Warner treated your correspondent very courteously, and in the course of the conversation said:

"We are doing a tremendous business and are far behind in our orders. This is the season of the year when people, no matter how strong their constitution may be, feel, more or less, the pain and indisposition, the headaches, colds, neuralgia, rheumatism, dull pains, sore throats, coughs—all the 1,001 ills that flesh is heir to come this time of the year, if at all. It is natural, therefore, that we should be very busy. This is specially true of our Safe Rheumatic Cure, and it is crowding us very sharply for a new remedy."

"Singular, but I had forgotten that you do not advertise to cure all diseases from one bottle, as is done generally by many other medicine men, but I supposed Warner's Safe Cure was for the cure of rheumatism."

"And so it has been until our remedy which was especially for rheumatism and neuralgia, was introduced. We have been three years perfecting this new remedy. Study first, taught us there were certain powerful elements in Warner's Safe Cure, better known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, that made wonderful cures in chronic and acute rheumatism, but during our investigation, we learned of a remarkable cure at a celebrated springs, and put experts to investigate and found that the springs did not contain any valuable properties, but the course of treatment that was being given there was performing all the benefit. By carefully combining the active principles of this remedy with our Safe cure, we have produced our Safe Rheumatic Cure, and the cures it is effecting are simply wonderful, and I do not doubt it will become as popular as our Safe Cure."

"You seem to talk freely in regard to your remedies and appear to have no secrets, Mr. Warner."

"None whatever. The physician with his hundred calls and one hundred diseases, is necessarily compelled to guess at a great deal. We are enabled to follow up and perfect, while physicians can only experiment with their hundred patients and hundred diseases. With the ordinary physician, the code binds him down, so that if he makes a discovery, he is bound to give it to the other physicians, which, of course, discourages investigation, to a great extent. This is why the great discoveries in medical science of late years have been made by chemists and scientists and not by physicians, and it in a measure accounts for the great value of our remedies, also for the remarkable success of all those doctors who make a specialty of one or two diseases."

"And you find that you are curing as great a number of people as ever before?"

"Yes, a far greater number. We never sold so much of our medicine as now and never knew of so many remarkable cures."

The writer departs after the above interview, but was greatly impressed, not only by the sincerity of Mr. Warner, but by the vastness of all he saw. Mr. Warner's medicines are used throughout the entire length and breadth of the land, and we doubt not the result they are effecting are really as wonderful as they are related to be.

EXCITING SPORT.

Edith—"Oh! how glad I am that summer is coming again. Soon we can go to Newport and enjoy some more grand old fox hunts just as if we were English princesses."

Mabel—"Did you go fox hunting at Newport?"

Edith—"Yes, indeed, I was in every hunt. Oh! it's glorious—the prancing steeds, the baying hounds, the exhilarating air, the delightful chase over the fields and fences, and the rush to be in at the death and get the brush. Oh! how I wish you could have been along."

Mabel—"Well, I don't. The idea of a great crowd of horses and hounds and hunters all dashing after one poor little fox and keeping up the terrible chase until the poor thing sinks away from very weakness."

Edith—"Fox! Fox! Why, I never saw a fox!"

Mabel—"But you spoke of getting 'the brush.'"

Eudora—"Oh! that is a lovely peacock brush given to the best lady rider."

Mabel—"But what is being 'in at the death?'"

Eudora—"Catching up with the aniseed bag."—Phila. Eve. Call.

Contempt.—A small trader in Berlin, who was recently summoned as a witness in court, and who asked to be excused from appearing on the day and hour (2 o'clock) appointed, on the plea of attending his wife's funeral, was told that the alleged reason could not be considered a sufficiently valid one. He presented himself; but when the case had not been called by 1 o'clock, he braved the risk of contempt of court, left, and was finally excused by the judge.

Gold in our Old Fields.

Sewing-Machine Industry.

These remarkable items pour into our office daily. Mr. H. S. Fuller, with the new Home Machine company, of Orange, Mass., writes, May 23, 1883: "I have used Hunt's Remedy in my family for over ten years. My wife was troubled with catarrh of the bladder, suffered intense pain in the kidneys and loins, and urination was accomplished with the greatest of agony. My friends thought that she could not recover. We tried doctors and medicines, and although better at times she would grow worse again. She was obliged to use the urinal as many as fifteen times in a night, and was growing worse daily. At this time my attention was called to Hunt's Remedy, and I concluded to try it; and after using one bottle she was a good deal better, the inflammation was reduced, and the water more natural. She began to gain in appetite, and felt no pain in the back and kidneys. She could attend to her household work without pain, and this had been a great burden to do, even the lightest kind of work. After using six bottles she was completely cured. Since then I have had occasion to use Hunt's Remedy for kidney and liver complaints, and found it to be just as represented, and I consider it a most wonderful medicine. I would not be without Hunt's Remedy in my family; and I have recommended it to my friends here in Orange with equally good results."

THE WAY OF THE WORLD.

There sate a crow on a lofty tree,
Watching the world go by;
He saw a throng that swept along
With laughter loud and high.
"In and out through the motley rout,"
Pale ghosts stole on unseen,
Their hearts were longing for one sweet word
Of the love that once had been.
But never a lip there spoke their names,
Never a tear was shed;
The crow looked down from his lofty tree.
"'Tis the way of the world," he said.

A singer stood in the market-place,
Singing a tender lay,
But no one heeded his sorrowful face,
No one had time to stay.
He turned away; he sang no more;
Why should he sing in vain?
And the world came to his door
Begging him sing again.
But he recked not whether they came or went
He in his garret lay dead;
The crow looked down from his lofty tree.
"'Tis the way of the world," he said.

There sate a Queen by a cottage bed,
Spoke to the widow there;
Did she not know the same hard blow
The peasant had to bear?
And she kissed that humble peasant's brow,
And then she bent her knee:
"God of the widow, help her now,
As Thou hast helped me."
"Now God be thanked," said the old, old crow,
As he sped from his lofty bough;
"The times are ill, but there's much good still In the way of the world, I trow."

Railway Heroes

[From the Youth's Companion.]

Coal-dust, cinders, oil and smoke usually make firemen on duty rather grimy-looking personages. Perhaps few among the thousands who ride in the railroad cars behind us would care for our acquaintance. But we are useful—as useful, perhaps, as any other class of men; and certainly we have our full share of the hard, disagreeable things in life, including frequent peril and much exposure to weather.

Working up from fireman to engine-driver—or "engineer" as we are usually called in this country—is often a slow process. There are men on our line—the Hudson River railroad—who have been firing eleven years, with no promotion yet; though they are no doubt fully competent to run an engine. For promotion depends almost wholly upon vacancies occurring, or some special influence at headquarters.

A man ought to become familiar with a locomotive in eleven years. I thought I knew every screw in mine after firing two years. Yet it takes a good deal of time to learn to fire well, so as to get the most steam out of the least fuel, and have the highest pressure at the grades where it is most needed. To do this a man should know the road, every rod of it, as well as the engine.

Then comes the oiling. An engine requires a great deal of oil, as well as coal and water. The fireman has to keep in mind all those scores of bearings where oil has to be applied. Between oiling, shoveling in coal, shaking and stirring up his fire—to keep it steady and hot—and looking to his stock of coal and water, he is kept busy, and must needs watch sharply. But a man gets these duties well fixed in his head in time.

It is while "firing" that the practical knowledge of running an engine is gained. A fireman is the groom, so to speak, of the "iron horse." He must, morning and evening, have the engine polished, "fired up," and ready for his superior, the engineer, to step into the cab and start off. Usually the engineer does not make his appearance till the moment of connecting with the train. Between the engineer and his fireman there generally exists an easy-going and manly sort of friendship, though I have known cases where the two men detested each other.

When I began to fire under "Doc" Simmons, I scarcely knew enough to build a good fire in a cook-stove, and could not have found a quarter of the oil-caps. I must have been a trial to him the first week or two. But he never gave a sharp word, though he often had to tell me things over and over again.

"Doc"—as the railway men all called him—was a superior engineer. He knew every pound of metal in a locomotive; just where it lay, and how much it was good for. He was one of those men who seem to feel just what there is in a locomotive the moment he takes hold of the levers and starts up. He was a good-hearted fellow, and always had a pleasant word or a joke all along the line, and it is generally the case that such men do not fail the company or the public at a critical moment.

I went home and cried like a baby the day "Doc" was killed. If it had been my own father I could not have felt half as badly. I actually wished that I had gone to the bottom of the river with him.

It was the night of the 6th of February, and fearfully cold. We had "No. 117" then, and took out the Pacific Express, as it was called, from New York city, up the line to Albany. It was a bitter night, and the line was frosty and slippery.

The express was always a heavy train. That night we had three baggage and express cars and eight passenger coaches, and we were late out of New York, to begin with—about fifteen minutes, I think.

Such cold weather is always demoralizing to a railroad. It is much harder to make time; all metal works bad, and though the fire appears to burn brighter, it takes more coal to make steam. The train seems to hang to the line. Then, too, the cutting wind is enough to freeze the marrow in a man's bones.

It might have been mostly fancy on my part, but I thought "Doc" had an odd look in his face that night, as he got into the cab. He was more serious than usual, for we both knew we had a hard run before us, and a cold one. Both of us were muffled up in fur caps and old overcoats.

"Shove in the coal, Nick, and shake her down smart. We want every ounce of steam to-night," says Doc. "Fifteen minutes behind and eleven cars on! Those sleeping-coaches are as heavy as a whole block, too. I'm glad this is a double-track line, and all clear ahead."

We pulled out, and from the way Doc handled her, I knew that he meant to pick up that fifteen minutes, if it was in the old machine to do it. I suppose we made thirty miles an hour—perhaps forty—on the level stretches.

On we went, reeling off the dark, bleak miles, with the sharp wind cutting into the cab, till near New Hamburg station, where the line then crossed Wappinger creek on a trestle bridge which had a "draw" in it. It was a comfort to think that the draw would certainly be open on such a night, for the creek was frozen up.

Ah, if it were only permitted to trainmen to know just what is ahead on the tracks on these black, bitter nights! But we can only see what the head-light shows us; and often the signals seem strangely obscure in fog, or in the driving rain and snow.

One of those always possible "breaks," which may not occur for years, but are yet constantly liable to happen, had occurred that night. One of the South-bound night freight-trains, running down to New York, broke an axle and got one of its middle cars off the rails, before reaching the bridge.

How far they dragged the car in that condition, no one knows; for it was so cold that the conductor and all the brakemen were huddled in the caboose behind. But they found it out after a time, and slowed down as the train got on to the bridge.

As they came to a stand-still, two or three other cars jumped the track; and one of these, an oil-car, with a long tank on it, broke its couplings and was shoved over on to the up-line of track—our line—where it stood sidewise across the rails.

The accident made great confusion with the men on the freight; but they claimed that they got out their signal-lanterns as soon as they could, and that it was not a minute before we came up.

As we shot along past the dark station and out toward the bridge, I saw the white steam of the freight-train.

"We shall pass No. 19 right by the bridge," Doc said.

Both of us were looking, Doc on his side and I on mine.

Suddenly, right ahead, we saw a red lantern swinging on our track, at the head of the bridge.

"God save us, Doc!" I shouted, "the draw's open!"

"Spring the patent brake!" he said to me—that was what we called the air-brake, then—and in a moment we had shut off, reversed and whistled for the hand-brakes.

But we were going at a great speed. In a moment more we had come alongside the freight engine, and out on the bridge we saw the oil-car right across our rails! It had a look of death in it I swung out on the step.

"Shan't you jump, Doc?" I cried.

He stood with his back to me, looking ahead, but turned when I called out. I shall never forget that last look he gave me. He did not speak, but his look seemed to say, "Yes, you may as well jump, but I must stick to my post."

He barely looked round to me, but made no answer, then looked ahead again.

Then I jumped—went heels over head along the side of the embankment leading to the bridge, rolled over and over, and landed down on the ice of the creek, near the abutment, which I had scarce touched when I heard the crash, as our engine struck the oil-car.

With the collision came a sudden, brilliant flash of light! Everything above me, the whole bridge and the cars on it, seemed wrapped in a blaze of fire!

At the same instant, too, there was a dull, long, tearing crash! The trestle had given way beneath the strain.

Down came our engine, the three baggage cars, a passenger car, and I don't know how many freight cars of the other train, on to the ice. The whole wreck, as it fell down, seemed enveloped in flames; for the oil had splashed over everything, and the blazing coals from the fire-box exploded it on the instant.

When the engine struck the ice, it broke through, and with a hiss went to the bottom of the deep water there; and on top of it came tumbling down all the other cars.

For a moment following the crash there was an almost complete silence; then agonizing screams, and prayerful cries for help from the imprisoned passengers.

We who were not disabled did what we could. The seven rear cars did not run into the chasm, but two of them burned on the track, along with a number of freight cars. Twenty-one of the passengers were killed outright, and a still greater number were injured.

As we worked there in the noise, heat and awful confusion of that night, I cast many an anxious glance round for Doc, hoping and half expecting that he had got clear and would be at work with us trying to get out the passengers. But I saw nothing of him, and by daybreak I felt sure that he had gone down with his engine.

The locomotive was not hauled up out of the water till the next week. Then we found his body jammed down under the engine on the bed of the creek. His hands, face and clothes had been scorched; but whether he was drowned, or burned to death, we could not tell.

He had met his death at his post of duty; gone out of the world with his hand on the lever; giving his own life that the lives of others might be saved—a man of whom any people may be proud.

The Greely Expedition.

Besides the Alert, the steamers Thetis, Bear and Hope will take part in the Greely search. Former expeditions have shown the propriety of sending so many vessels and furnishing the expedition for two years' absence. It is proposed to send an advance ship to the Danish settlements previous to the time fixed for the assembling of the expedition at Uppernavik. Should a favorable opportunity present itself, the vessel will push northward and rescue the Greely party. The relief ships will arrive at Uppernavik not later than May 15, and will push northward as soon as the ice permits toward Littleton Island. The natives will be cummnicated with and all possible information obtained as to the whereabouts of the expedition. When the ice is reached, one of the vessels will push its way through it while the other will maintain such a position in the rear as to rescue the party on No. 1, should that ship come to grief. Should neither vessel be crushed, and should neither succeed in communicating with Lady Franklin Sound, one, it is recommended, should winter in Franklyn Pierce Bay and the other in the vicinity of Littleton Island. On the route northward various points are to be examined and depots of provisions left at certain specified quarters. The fullest equipment as to boats, sleds, clothing, tents, wooden houses and provisions has been recommended, and every precaution is to be taken to secure success. The addition of the Alert to the rescue fleet will undoubtedly greatly enhance the chances of accomplishing the objects of the expedition. It is recommended that the personnel of each vessel to be kept down to a minimum, so as to give ample space should the expedition be absent two years and diminish the risk of shortness of provisions. It is calculated that the total expense will be about $420,000

High Life in England.

The Earl of Euston, the future Duke of Grafton, is about to begin the much talked of suit for divorce from his wife, on the plea that the lady's first husband was living at the time of her second marriage. The Countess will submit in defence that when she married her first husband she supposed him a widower, but he proved to have another wife, and when she learned this she abandoned him. The case promises to be exceedingly interesting.

Thirteen years ago Henry Fitzroy, eldest son of Lord Augustus Fitzroy, fell in love with a woman known as "Kate Cook." She was handsome and stylish in person, and her matured charms were quite sufficient to captivate the youth of twenty-three. Unknown to his father, who was Equerry to the Queen, he married her. Most chronicles of the peerage ignored the marriage. Others described the bride as the daughter of John Walsh and the widow of "Mr. Smith." In 1882 the bridegroom's social position changed. Lord Augustus Fitzroy succeeded his brother as seventh Duke of Grafton. Henry Fitzroy became Earl of Euston. The widow of "Mr. Smith" became Countess Euston and the future Duchess of Grafton. But troubles had already come between her and her husband. They separated by mutual agreement. No fault being proved against the Countess since her marriage, the Earl in vain sought an excuse for divorce. The mysterious "Mr. Smith" has now appeared and the excuse is found.

THE CANAL.—There is, says an exchange, a likelihood that the Cape Cod Canal really will be built. The distance to be dug is eight miles and the present estimate of the cost is a million dollars a mile. The company already has expended $450,000. The charter compels the building of a railroad bridge and there will be some expensive locks. The shortest route from Boston to New York through Vineyard Sound is 390 miles and by the outside course 380 miles. Through the canal it will be 240 miles, saving 96 miles in one case and 140 in the other. But there is another saving to be considered, and that is an occasional shipwreck which the shorter and safer passage by the canal may avoid.

HOW HICKS WAS LOST.

A Singular Account of the Battle of Kashgil from French Sources.

The following account of the defeat of Hicks Pacha is published in the Paris Journal des Debats: The latest information which has reached Cairo regarding the disaster of Hicks Pacha's army is so singular and so very tragic that it could at first be hardly believed as possible. But it is now confirmed by so large a number of trustworthy witnesses that it is no longer possible to doubt the fact. It was not the Mahdi who conquered Hicks Pacha; the latter and his men perished in an intestine struggle, victims of an error which threw Egyptians against Egyptians. The Mahdi and his bands only took a secondary part in the battle. They only arrived in time to increase the butchery and reap the fruits of victory. This is what happened. You know what a conflict had arisen between General Hicks and his Egyptian colleague, Alaidin Pacha. The first wanted to march directly on El Obeid, the second proposed to follow the hilly route, a more difficult road, but a safer one, and which offered the best advantage of allowing the troops to rest during the day near the Melbass wells before attacking El Obeid. The rumor was spread that in consequence of this rupture Alaidin Pacha had abandoned Gen. Hicks with part of the army, and hopes were long entertained that he had been saved. Alas! this separation was destined, on the contrary, to become the cause of the ruin of the Egyptians and of the loss of the Soudan. The two generals having found it impossible to come to an understanding, it was resolved that each should take the road he considered best and that in the event of one of the corps being attacked by the enemy the other would hasten to its rescue. This plan was carried out.

Alaidin Pacha reached the mountain, while Hicks Pacha marched straight toward El Obeid. Both corps were passed by soldiers of the Mahdi, who, without giving battle harassed them incessantly on the flanks. The troops had left toward midday. At midnight sharp firing was heard in the direction of the mountains. Hicks Pacha at once ordered his men to advance and support Alaidin Pacha. It was pitch dark. The sharpshooters fired without knowing what they were about. After an hour's hurried march the troops reached the middle of the mountain. The vanguard announced that all the heights were occupied by the enemy. Suddenly a shower of bullets fell on the army. A part took to flight, while the other stood firm. The fighting continued desperately until daylight appeared, when a horrible spectacle presented itself. Hicks Pacha's troops were almost annihilated, and at the top of the hill the Egyptian uniforms were in sight. Alaidin Pacha and Hicks Pacha's troops had been butchering each other ever since midnight. The central column, commanded by General Hicks, had suffered the most. A small plateau where it had halted was strewn with dead and dying. The bodies of three Europeans lay where the staff had taken position.

Sturgeon Don't Bite.

There were four or five of us on the long wharf running out into the Gulf at Mississippi City, and we had been fishing away for half an hour without any luck when a big fat man named Blake, from Ohio, suddenly called out:

"Say, boys, let's have a swim."

It was too hot, and we were too lazy, but Blake declared that he'd have a swim by himself. He off with his clothes, backed down into the water, and for a quarter of an hour hung to a spile and splashed the water, not being able to swim a stroke. By and by he climbed out, but scarcely had his feet touched the plank when one of the men sang out:

"By the great horn spoon! but see there!"

Ten feet away from the end of the wharf were two sharks at least seven feet long, and the water was so clear that every wink of their eye could be seen.

"Yes, a couple of sturgeon!" observed Blake as he waddled forward. "I saw 'em hanging around when I went down, but sturgeon don't bite!"

When he came to fully realize what an escape he had had he sat down on the head of a spile and blubbered like a boy who had stubbed his toe.—M. QUAD.

Gas from Sawdust

The village of Deseronto, Ontario, is said to be lighted with gas made from sawdust. The lumber company, to which the settlement owes its life, cuts fifty million feet of lumber annually, and what to do with the huge heaps of sawdust has been a vexatious problem. Before introduction into the retorts, the sawdust is thoroughly dried, after which from twenty to thirty thousand feet of gas are obtained from a ton. In illuminating power it is said to be equal to that made of coal, and is entirely free from sulphur.

DR. OTTO KRUMMEL, OF GOTTINGEN, who has been investigating the area of oceans, estimates the superficies of the Atlantic, Pacific, and Indian oceans at 124,787,425 square miles, and the total superficies of all the seas on the globe at 231,915,005, while the total superficies of the continents and islands he puts at 54,854,950 square miles.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

The Trouble that Arose With the Green Bay Branch.

"It am my solemn dooty to inform dis club," said Brother Gardner, "dat de branch club at Green Bay, known as de 'White Swan Branch, No. 32,' has been disbanded. I returned from dat place las' nite arter an offishul visit of inspeckshun axed fur by de Mayor, Common Council an' various odder pussons. De results of dat inspeckshun am an 18x24 warnin' fur us to go slow in de matter of grantin' charter to branch lodges.

"In makin' applicashun fur a charter it was understood dat de White Swans would start off wid three jedges, two elders, six colonels, two trustees, fo' purfessors an' two co'n doctors. I diskibered dat onter de sixteen charter members dar' was only one single pusson wid a title. He claimed to be a purfessor, an' he am now in jail on charge of stealin'. Our constitushun says dat no fee shall be charged for initiatin' members. Dis branch lodge took in sixty-four members at a fee of two dollars per head, an' de money was used to play policy an' buy lottery tickets. Under pretense ob bein' a chartered society, organized fur de good ob mankind in gineral, it heaped up a debt of ninety dollars in three months; it stole twenty-two hams; it got away wid six hundred chickens; it gin cull'd society sich a twist dat de wife of a man airnin' seventy-five cents a day wanted a twenty-two-dollar bonnet or death.

"When I arrove at Green Bay an' called upon de President of de White Swans he almos' convinced me dat all derogatory reports had bin started by jealous-minded white pussons. I happened, however, to fall in wid a butcher who had lost six hams an' had sot a trap in his smoke-house to cotch stragglers. I sot up wid him till midnight, at which hour we went out an' found de President of de branch lodge in de trap, wid de Secretary and Treasurer disappearin' in de distance.

"Gem'len, we has rushed too fast. In de fuchur, when a branch axes dis club fur a charter, nuffin' of de sort mus' be granted until arter a moas' rigid inwestigashun has bin made. We mus' not be satisfied wid weekly reports, but some member of dis club mus' be sent out on a scout. Our cause has received a blow in Green Bay from which it may be y'ars in recoverin', an' it am all our own fault. Let us now purceed to routine business."—Detroit Free Press.

The Texas Terror.

"The Texas Terror" is found in almost every town—the bad, bold man who spills blood, hot blood, and eats tenderfeet for breakfast every morning, but he stays around the bar-room fire generally, and awaits invitations to drink from strangers for whose benefit he "shoots off his mouth." He is usually from Bitter Creek or Rattlesnake Run, where they raise bad men; the "farther up you git the wuss they be, and I'm from the headwaters," is his autobiography. Sometimes he is the "Red-headed-Terror-of-Tom-Green-County," and sometimes "Apache Bill." He slips up to the bar when asked to "irrigate," and says to the barkeeper: "Give me suthin' powerful, pard; suthin' as will warm up the cockles of me heart; I'm the toughest man in Tom Green County, but I'm sort o' low down this mornin', an' ain't smelt blood; I'm a reckless devil when I get started, and I feed on devastation and turmoil, but I'm kinder quiet now and mean no mischief. Times is changed sence I came to Texas fust, and the people is as quiet as kittens—gimme suthin' that'll make me feel as if the tornado of the prairies brought the smell o' blood. They used to call me the king of the cow-boys down on the Pecos, but they've no use for fightin' men that now." And he will go on in this strain as long as anyone will listen to him, but while his words are fierce, his acts are mild, and he takes the place of the yarn-spinner who is generally found in the village saloon of the North.

The Arabs at El Teb

It is stated in English reports of the battle of El Teb that "the Arabs charged repeatedly, under cover of a fire from their works, which killed and wounded a few of the British; but they never could get through the formation, the bullets mowing them down as they advanced. The British at last reached the works and carried them with the bayonet, the Arabs resisting fiercely, and leaving 900 men dead on the ground. A brick building used as a mill was next carried, and then the cavalry swept down on the enemy, who met the charge without flinching, and struck at the horses as they passed through them. At length, after three hours' fighting, the Soudanese who had, as it was afterward ascertained, lost 2,300 men, certainly a fifth of their whole number, and probably a fourth, fled, most of them going to Dubba, their storehouse, which was occupied on the following day. The British loss was only 32 killed and 142 wounded; but the action was, nevertheless, severe. All witnesses, including the general in command, testify to the splendid valor of the Arabs, who met death with a kind of pleasure, and to the steadiness of the British soldiers, who never once broke their order, or flinched under the push of his superior numbers."

Interesting Temperance Statistics.

Startling Facts Relative to Consumption of Liquor in Maine.

Hon. Thomas W. Pittman, of New York, has created a great interest in Maine by his series of lectures on intemperance and crime, and has given some startling statistics. He shows that there are 48,000 criminals in the prisons of the United States; in county jails, 134,000; in the houses of refuge, 10,000; floating criminal population, exclusive of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, 400,000; total, 592,000 criminals. From latest returns of the Police Department of New York and Brooklyn there is one arrest, including drunkenness and disorderly conduct, to every 18 of the population; in New York 10,000 liquor saloons, which, allowing 25 feet front to each, would make an avenue 25 miles long; eighteen hundred inmates of the lunatic asylum on Ward's Island, two-thirds of whom are insane drunkards; and fifteen hundred convicts in Sing Sing State Prison, 1,300 of whom became criminals through intemperance. Thirty per cent. of the prison population of Massachusetts is between twenty and twenty-five years of age. In Pennsylvania the convicts in the penitentiaries under sixteen years of age are 17 per cent.; 35 per cent. under twenty-one, and 20 per cent. between twenty-one and twenty-five years; 80 per cent. never learned any trade or occupation; 82 per cent. were against property and 32 per cent. were habitual drunkards. One-fifth of the criminal population lives in cities, as follows:—One-eighth in cities over 100,000 inhabitants; one-twelfth in cities of over 75,000 and nearly one million in cities of over 40,000, mostly manufacturing towns. Crime and drunkenness are on the increase in manufacturing towns. Maine has a bad showing, there being in Portland last year 2,250 arrests, 1,426 of which were for drunkenness and drunken brawls. The lecturer exposed the private clubs of Portland, Bangor and other large towns in the State, and the easy manner in which liquor can be procured in Maine, both privately and publicly, and emphatically proclaimed that Prohibition does not prohibit unless indorsed and sustained by public sentiment of the majority, who must compel the public authorities to enforce the law. He advocated moral methods for the drunkard and kindness and humanity for the reformation of criminals and the abolition of prison contract labor and cruel punishments. His statements relative to the open violation of the Maine liquor law and increased drunkenness in the State have created a profound sensation among all classes, especially among Prohibitionists

Depopulated Ireland

The Irish papers are discussing the recent census returns in a bitter spirit. The Dublin Nation has an article entitled "Bleeding-to Death," in which it says: "The life blood of Ireland is being drained by vampires. Every one who has an interest in the country must gird his loins against this murderous union. The extermination of the Irish people has long been the traditional aim of the English rulers. The present Executive's will is set on actively promoting the murderous system which has already robbed the country of five or six millions of people."

The United Ireland devotes an article to the same subject, which it entitles "Killing a Nation by Inches." It says: "For all practical purposes Ireland is suffering a more awful drain of manhood than if engaged in a deadly conflict with a first class European power. She has lost since the Union more men than France lost in all the sanguinary wars of Napoleon. At least eight millions of people have been immolated in eighty years to the demon of English supremacy. Three millions of people whose brawny frames supplied the physical force of the repeal meetings were missing in 1852 when the census enumerators came to count them. Two million nine hundred and thirteen thousand of the population who were spared by famine have been starved or transported since. The waste goes on faster and more furiously. Within the last year alone Ireland lost 108,000 emigrants, 71,000 of whom were single adults. She lost in mere thews and muscles more valued sons than were slain in any of the greatest battles of the world."

An Arkansas Jail.

The county jail of Hot Springs, Arkansas, is a miserable two-story log hut, about fourteen feet square. The upper story is occupied by the jailer, who will, for a consideration, yield it to a prisoner of means. A small, rickety balcony, with a sofa on it, and a creaking flight of wooden steps give access to the room. The pen below, or jail proper, is a regular "black hole;" the floor is covered with filth, straw and vermin; light filters through two glass cubby holes a few inches square and admittance is only gained by means of an iron grating in the floor above, through which the unhappy captives are lowered down the ladder—as many as a dozen, of all ages, sexes and colors, are sometimes confined here at once. The clothes-hook stands in the room above and is strong enough to brace a lever. In case of fire there would be no possibility of ...much can be written and will be ...itten of the meeting of the Ala...ma Press Association in Eufaula ...t week. So much will be said ...at it will be superfluous for us to ...o into details or to attempt to ...dilate upon the many enjoyments there experienced by the representative of this press and others who attended. That we spent the time most pleasantly as well as profitably goes without saying when it is made known that we were so fortunate as to fall into the hands of that prince of Southern gentleman, Capt. J. M. McKleroy, who, assisted by his charming wife, entertained most royally. The entire people of Eufaula met the press with extended hands and open hearts, and round after round of pleasurable experiences are stored up in the memories of each and every one of the pencil pushers so fortunate as to be in attendance upon the meeting in the queenly and beautiful "Bluff City." Eufaula is a progressive city, and a growing city. It has two excellent newspapers, and some of the best brains of the State control their columns. Its people realize that to "strike when the iron is hot" is the motto for all workers—and the city is laggard in nothing. With all the necessary vim, energy and spirit of progress among its people, Eufaula is looking ahead to a high ambition, as she majestically sits above the ripples of the beautiful Chattahoochee, her grand highway to the Gulf.

We have not said enough, but we are unable to do justice to Eufaula and her hospitable people, and we must leave our brother scribes to tell the story more in detail. However, the meeting in Eufaula will always be one of our most pleasant recollections.

Major M. C. Burke.

Editor Advertiser:—Major Burke has many friends in Montgomery who wish the following published in your paper. They heartily endorse it and esteem it not only a duty but a pleasure to support him in his candidacy for State Auditor:

DEMOCRAT.

MT. PLEASANT, MONROE COUNTY, April 24th, 1884.

To the Editor of the Register:

Major M. C. Burke, of Marengo, has a host of friends at Mobile who are glad to see that the Democratic Convention of noble old Marengo has placed him in nomination for State Auditor. There could be no better selection for that office. Major Burke is a gentleman of the purest private character, and of unsullied integrity in all business matters. He is sober, industrious, attentive and affable—the kind of man who would occupy the responsible position of Auditor with the highest credit to the State. He is fearless in the discharge of duty, modest and unassuming, but clear-headed and positive. He has "a hand of velvet in a glove of steel." Major Burke was a gallant soldier. He is a man of liberal education, a graduate, I think, of our State University. He has done yeoman service for the Democratic party as editor of the Marengo News, and has never been rewarded with office. Indeed, he has never asked for office. It should be a pleasure to honor such men, as their sterling worth is an honor to the State. I think that Major Burke, as a representative of West Alabama, should receive the nomination. He has been a true friend of Mobile and the people of Mobile should take pride in returning the kindness he has ever extended to us. He has many friends here in Monroe.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

Sheffield.

TUSCUMBIA, ALA., May 10.—The sale of Sheffield lots has closed. The last lot sold for $3,400, size 25 by 120 feet. Sixty-nine residence lots were sold, the lowest for $420, and the highest for $1,110. Forty-eight business lots were sold, the highest for $3,400, and the lowest for $525. Sales were satisfactory to both buyers and sellers. Several lots changed hands at good profits. Sheffield is an established fact. Many houses will be erected at once. A number of stores are already rented. We all leave to-night for home. Total sales to-day were $90,000.

Hon. Judah P. Benjamin lawyer and statesman, died at Paris, France, a few days since. He was one of the foremost lawyers of the age, and was the author of several legal works. His name is also intimately connected with American politics, as he was a member of President Davis' cabinet. After the war he settled in England to practice his profession, and there his talents soon raised him to the position of first lawyer in the empire. At the time of his death he had retired from active practice and had moved to Paris, intending there to spend the remainder of his life.

The Federal Loan to the Exposition.

The news that the House of Representatives yesterday passed the bill lending $1,000,000 to the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition will be received with universal rejoicing, for it is known that the Senate and President are favorable, and, therefore, the passage of the bill in the House insures its becoming a law.

The glad tidings was received here last evening, and everywhere, in all circles and among all classes, there were congratulations exchanged on the auspicious event. The news from the Director General had been cheering, but even the most hopeful were fearful lest there should be some hitch or pause in the matter. The fact of the actual passage of the bill was therefore an intense relief, and elicited the most cordial compliments to Congress for its wise, liberal and patriotic act in giving this emphatic approval to an Exposition which will redound so largely to the benefit of the entire country.

The bill is similar to the one voted in favor of the Philadelphia Centennial, eight years ago, and which contributed so much to its success.—N. O. Times-Democrat.

Suicide of Charley Ford.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 6.—A dispatch was received here by Robert Ford announcing the suicide, this morning, at Richmond, Mo., of his brother Charley, the slayer of Jesse James.

The Journal's Richmond (Mo.) special says the suicide of Chas. Ford created quite a stir in this community. He was stopping temporarily at his father's house, near town. Early this afternoon he went to his room, and soon after he was found lying on the bed with a bullet wound through his heart. A forty-five calibre pistol was lying beside him. There are several theories as to the cause of the suicide; one is that it was remorse of conscience; another on account of ill health; a third, that perhaps he was apprehensive Frank James would soon be at liberty, and would take revenge for Jesse's death. The coroner's jury found that the deceased was a habitual morphine eater. He left no letter and appeared in his usual spirits this morning.

A few days ago some gentlemen from Scottsboro, were in this city in search of Dick Warner, a negro who made an assault on Mrs. Murdah, the wife of a farmer living near that place. The gentlemen stated that the negro was prevented from carrying out his brutal design by the husband and a neighbor who happened to be in the back yard at the time, and hearing the lady's screams came to her rescue. Seeing the men approaching the fiend ran, mounted the horse he had left standing at the gate and escaped. The fright left the woman in a critical condition, as she expected to be confined in a short time. The whole country was aroused; hundreds turned out to hunt the man and succeeded in capturing him. It was a difficult matter to prevent the infuriated populace from lynching him at the time, but the counsel of the more conservative men prevailed, and he was put in jail to await the action of the courts. Yesterday, as a result of the woman's fright, a dead baby was born, which had turned black. This circumstance again aroused the citizens. A mob collected, who went to the jail and demanded the prisoner. The intentions of the mob had reached the ears of the officers of the law, who removed the prisoner, otherwise he would have been lynched. At the latest advice the mob had not been able to find him, but from what has been reported they will make short work with him if his whereabouts can be ascertained.—Chattanooga Paper.

Call for a County Convention.

The voters of the Democratic and Conservative party of Chilton county are requested to meet at the places of voting in their respective beats on Saturday, the 17th day of May next, to select by ballot delegates to a county convention to be held at Clanton, on Wednesday, the 21st day of May, 1884.

The business of said convention will be to select delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions, and to attend to such other business as may properly come before it.

The representation in said county convention, fixed upon the basis of the Gubernatorial vote of 1878, will entitle each beat to the following number of delegates, to-wit:

Beat 1—Mims X Roads	2
Beat 2—Providence and Jemison	6
Beat 3—Benson and Macedonia	4
Beat 4—Clanton	12
Beat 5—Verbena and Coopers	10
Beat 6—Kincheon	1
Beat 7—Maplesville	5
Beat 8—Dixie	5

The following named persons have been appointed as beat committees in their respective beats, to-wit:

Beat 1—H. C. Young, W. H. Marcus, D. H. Mullins.

Beat 2—J. P. Vanderveer, Chas. H. Smith, R. A. Miears.

Beat 3—J. L. Williams, David White, Seaborn Jones.

Beat 4—W. E. Stewart, J. M. Bivings, J. R. Jones.

Beat 5—G. L. Zimmerman, W. R. Scott, L. Moore.

Beat 6—J. A. Hathcock, J. R. Kemp, W. H. Mills.

Beat 7—Noah W. Foshee, W. S. Lawrence, W. J. Atchinson.

Beat 8—J. W. Broadhead, Thomas Parnell, Samuel Keyser.

The beat committees are charged with conducting the elections for delegates to the county convention.

It is suggested that in beats having two places of voting elections be held at each box for one-half the delegates allowed that beat.

It is earnestly requested that the beat committees exert themselves to get the entire vote of the party to attend the beat elections and express their wishes regarding the question of nominating candidates for the House of Representatives and for county offices.

By order of the committee.

S. T. BRITTLE, Chairman.
W. H. LAWRENCE, Secretary.

Attention Voters!

Every man in Chilton county is earnestly exhorted to attend the Beat meeting, and see for himself that he is properly represented in the County Convention. Let there be no lagging behind in this matter. Do not fold your hands now and complain afterwards. It is the business of every citizen, every patriot to take a personal part in securing a representative.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and renew all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderfully restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

See Sheriff's sale of lands.

Remember the Democratic county convention next Wednesday.

A dance at the courthouse on last Monday night, was much enjoyed by our young people.

Mrs. Geo. W. Brown, of Darlington, S. C., has been on a visit to relatives at this place.

Tick-gatherings—otherwise called picnics—are now the order of the day in these regions.

Attend your beat meetings, and select good men to represent your interests in the County Convention which meets here next Wednesday.

Saturday, the 17th inst., is the day set for the selection of beat delegates to the Democratic County Convention.

A large party of our young people went out to Mim's mill pond on a picnicing and fishing frolic last Saturday. They report that the day was enjoyed hugely.

The Baptist Church of Clanton is to have a new bell to weigh three hundred pounds—a present from Mr. O. R. Bell, one of the leading members of the church.

Mr. John C. Lawrence, of Columbiana, who has been making a short stay in Clanton, left on Tuesday for Louisville, Ky., where he will enter the Southern Business College, for the purpose of taking a commercial course.

At the inter-State drill held at Houston, Texas, last week the Houston Light Guards won the first prize of $5,000. The Treadway Rifles of St. Louis won the second prize and the Columbus Guards, of Columbus Ga., won the third prize. The Mobile Rifles stood fourth, the Montgomery Greys fifth and a Galveston company sixth.

Mr. John Lawrence, who has been connected with the firm of H. S. & E. B. Nelson, as a salesman and book-keeper for some time, left last Friday evening for Clanton, where he will remain two or three weeks, and then leave for Louisville, Ky., for the purpose of taking a thorough commercial course at the Southern Business College. He is a rising young business man, and we hope he will return to this place when he finishes his course.—Columbiana Chronicle.

J. Fischer & Bro., 226 E. Fourth St, New York, have sent us a copy of a new and most charming Irish Song, entitled "Annie o' the Moy," composed by John Wiegand. This song has been sung with unprecedented success at the Academy of Music and other popular Concert rooms, and is dedicated to Madame Adeline Patti. It is quite a characteristic, sweet and pathetic composition, and admirably well adapted for public entertainments as well as for the parlor. Can be ordered through any book or music dealer, or direct from the Publishers, J. Fischer & Bro., 226 E 4th St., New York. Price 35 cts.

Verbena Views.

Such fine weather! Just the thing for our young ladies, as they can now display their Spring bonnets of every hue, shape and size to full advantage.

Arrangement are being made for a basket picnic at the "Turn Around" next Saturday. Our Prof. has heard of some big fish down there, and will take "John" along to hold his coat tail while he hauls them in.

Farmers are busy chopping cotton while the weather favors their work. Many complaints of poor stands, caused by the beating rains on the early planting.

The two Sunday Schools at this place have selected delegates to the State Sunday School Convention. Messrs. K. Wells, and A. J. Brooks, by the Baptist, and Mr. J. W Bateman and Mrs. E. Paine by the Methodist.

Miss Hattie Clisby is on a visit to Lynchburg, Va.

Our boys are beginning to think that there isn't much fun in playing ball. Broken fingers and swollen hands are not very pleasant reminders of a game.

Miss Mamie Sanders is on a visit to Montgomery.

We learn that Mr. F. P. Dunham, of this place will begin business in Clanton.

In consequence of Rev. J. W. Shores' absence, visiting relatives at Orrville, Ala., no services were held at the Methodist church last Sunday.

Mr. C. L. Watts has disposed of his property, and leaves this week for Milton, Fla.

We walked into the post-office the other day, and, when about to leave, our eyes were attracted by a rather pretentious looking poster on the walls. We stopped, and after a close inspection of this specimen of sable chirography and African orthography, we learned that there would be "a grand hop" at a certain place, on a certain occasion, "pervided dem 'freshments could be s'cured."

Two young ladies, Misses Ricks, of Eufaula, are visiting Mrs. Jackson.

Miss Olive Rushton, of Montgomery, is visiting her old classmate, Miss Abbotte Spratlen.

Our worthy townsman, Mr. A. J. Brooks, attended, the sale of lots at Sheffield, Alabama's coming city, last week. He reports the outlook of the new town to exceed anything ever heard or dreamed of in all his days. He went up there with the intention of buying up every lot on the ground and renting them out to darkeys to be planted in cotton on shares. He thought he had a good joke to get off on the Sheffield boom but came back wiser in experience with no investment made, having found that the largest bill he could show was considered small change. BIJOU.

Calliervile Dots.

Spring has played the coquet, to perfection, has become more sedate, as she reigns, with a flowery sceptre, this bright, lovely weather.

Our farms, and gardens were beginning to fire by too dry an atmosphere; but we have been blessed with copious showers, recently, and now all nature smiles and flourishes—transplanting has been briskly pushed, till not many vacant corners are to be found in our gardens, while young sweet potatoe patches are constantly being added to. "By the way" we have learned, that, if plants are drawn in the morning, to wait and wilt till evening, we need not wait for rain.

While Jemison had a "bug boom" we had the cut worms by armies. Mr. King's garden was twice destroyed until finally the virtue of borax among cabbage was tried effectually, (if the hot sun did not drive them off)—they seemed to relish onions as much as cabbage. Mrs. Crum planted half an acre in onions, for market—nearly half have been destroyed. It has been said, that there is more money in onions than in cotton; but this morning children were round, buying milk, &c. One inquired the "price of onions, tops and all," adding, "We used to buy 'em, at a nickle, for an armful."

Well, of all the oats planted in February, none are so luxuriant as the "Burt." They are already waist high. Had those planted in Autumn not been destroyed they would doubtless have been ready for harvest.

Mr. Hiram Green killed a deer last week; but that is no rare news.

A car on the switch here was broken, and about fifty weight of bacon stolen—by some stragglers of course—for our community must be exceptionally honest. Our magistrate, Mr. King, says, that only one criminal case has come before him, in two years, and that was against a negro for whipping his wife. It is said that the southwestern part of Chilton county is scarcely known, in the courts—so quiet are the inhabitants, who "live at home."

Our carpenters find plenty of work near by, as well as the farmers. While the welkin rings, with "gee" and "haw," it also echoes the sound of their tools.—Several important improvements are to be seen in our village. Messrs. King and Peoples are good workmen and are reasonable in prices.

Our merchants too, seem to be doing a brisk business.

Mr. Broadhead, sold a fine milk and butter cow, for $30. Last week he lost one as fine—or the train killed her; we presume the railroad company will pay for her.

There was a pleasant picnic and fish-fry last Saturday. Among the visitors was the associate editor of the Bibb Blade.

Rev. W. B. Crumpton, of Dallas county, made a hasty visit up this way last week. He hopes to be able to come up on our preaching day, next time.

One week ago, Mr. Augusta McGee and Miss Lottie Burns were married, by Rev, Minnafee, all of this county. On the same day, Mr. Perry Wright's infant died at Stanton and was buried at our church.

M. A. H.

Jemison Jottings.

One Mr. Logan, living a few miles east of Jemison, it is said was in ill health, becoming tired of life on the 8th inst., took a knife and disemboweled himself. He died in a day or two.

It is said that Calera's boom has gone down, and some of the parties have fled, to the consternation of a few confiding Caleraites whom said parties had cunningly duped.

The health of our vicinity is excellent since May, sweet May, has come with its animation, its breezes, birds and flowers.

A Sabbath school picnic is in anticipation. Hope to see the editor in attendance. Our wish is that he may never grow old.

OXO.

The Rockford Enterprise says: "While Coosa has several gentlemen either of whom if drafted into service would make us a good Senator, we concede as a right of rotation, that Chilton county is entitled to furnish the man. We nominate Col. B. J. Baldwin as the man for the place, and if his friends over the river will say the word, his friends on this side are ready to hoist his banner to the breeze."

SHERIFF'S SALE.

To satisfy a fi. fa. in my hands issued from the Circuit Court of Chilton county against J. O. Smith, C. H. Smith and L. J. Hand, and in favor of Mrs. Martha Cameron, I will proceed to sell, on the first Monday in July, 1884, (it being the 7th day of said month) at the courthouse door of Chilton county, between the legal hours of sale, the following described real property, levied on as the property of said J. O. Smith, viz: All of section 35, township 23, range 14, and all of section 36, township 23, range 13.

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them on it all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

"Yes, darling," was his warmly-spoken answer. "How strange that you should ask me such a question."

"If you would only tell me so now and then, Andrew, it would do me good."

Mrs. Lee arose, and leaning her face against the manly breast of her husband, stood and wept.

What a strong light broke in upon the mind of Andrew Lee; he had never given his wife even the smallest reward of praise in all the loving interest she had manifested daily, until doubt of his love had entered her soul and made the light all around her thick darkness. No wonder that her face grew clouded, nor what he considered moodishness and ill-nature took possession of his heart.

"You are good and true, Mary, my own dear wife, I am proud of you, I love you, and my first desire is for your happiness. Oh, if I always see your face in sunshine my home would be the dearest place on earth."

"How precious to me are your words of love and praise, Andrew," said Mrs. Lee, smiling through her tears into his face.

"With them in my ears my heart can never lie in shadow."

How easy had been the work for Andrew Lee. He had swept his hand across the cloudy horizon, and now the bright sunshine was streaming and flooding the home with joy and beauty. —Popular Monthly

How the Hungarians Live.

THE CAUSE OF THE OUTCRY AGAINST THE PAUPERS WHO CROWD INTO THE MINING REGIONS.

A letter from Mahanoy City, Penn., says:—The outcries of the public against the Hungarian paupers crowded into this region by New York emigrant agencies have been so loud that the Town Council at a late meeting, appointed a committee to investigate the subject, and twenty dens were visited. If the Hungarians lived like other people there would be no objection to them, but they congregate together in such numbers and filth as to breed disease. The committee found 390 persons huddled together in the twenty places visited. Most of these places were stables converted into human habitations by these people themselves. Few of them contained more than one room, and in this, men, women, and children lived—eating, sleeping, cooking, and washing.

A few of the buildings were without floors. In one room, the largest visited, 25 by 35 feet in demensions, were 13 men, a woman, and a child. The woman and one of the men kept the others as boarders. One stable was divided into four rooms and contained 18 persons. A very small building divided into nine rooms, the partitions being made of the lumber from dry goods cases, contained 43 people, 36 of whom were men, 4 women, and 3 children. In one room were 8 men, and 7 in another. Six rooms visited had at least 8 men each occupying them.

The Council last year encountered similar trouble with the Polanders, but overcame it by reducing the number in each house, and establishing and enforcing health rules for those that remained. There will be a clearing out in the Hungarian quarters during the next few days. Not more than three or four will be allowed to a house.

Trouble for Chili.

Chili is evidently going to have some trouble with the European creditors of Peru. Having taken a large part of Peruvian territory, the resources of which were pledged for foreign debts, the foreign creditors desire to have applied the maxim that the annexation of territory carries its burden with it. The Chilian view no doubt is that they and the creditors have been engaged in what is known in the classical language of the law as a "race of diligence," in which Don Patrick Lynch has by means of his army and navy clapped his lien on first, or in other words, that all foreign claims must be subordinated to those arising out of the conquest of that country. The fact is that Peru is bankrupt, and has been so for many a long year, and there are not enough assets to "go 'round." The foreign creditors cannot ask their Governments to go to war with Chili over the distribution, and no European Government could afford to insist upon the right of the bonds to be preferred to the war claims of a country which has got its security by fighting for it. The matter will no doubt be compromised in some way.

LOST IT.—George Smith, of Indiana county, Pa., put $15,000 in bills in a wooden chest in his cellar. He would not trust his money to the banks. When he brought the chest to light a few days ago to count over his treasure, he found that the rats had burrowed through and through the chest until only a small fraction of the original package of bills was in a negotiable condition.

A SERMON WORTH READING

A LESSON ON PERSONAL INFLUENCE.

Mr. Beecher Tells Us from the Pulpit How We Can Make Our Lives Sublime:

[From the New York Herald.]

There never was a city since the world began, said Henry Ward Beecher in his Sunday sermon, just preceding the taking up of the collection, that had more need of Christian sympathy and succor than this city of Brooklyn. When I came to Brooklyn, thirty-seven years ago, there was less than 50,000 people here. To-day there are more than 790,000, and I suppose before the five years' census is taken in Brooklyn the city will have very near a million inhabitants. It is the one city of the future on this continent. Manhattan is a bottle island—when it's full, it's full; but Brooklyn has all Long Island to spread out on. There are but five cities in all Europe that are equal in population to Brooklyn—London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna and St. Petersburg. Besides these, Brooklyn surpasses every city on the continent of Europe. We are giving a very close chase to New York itself. We are growing faster than New York—a good deal faster than New York—and for obvious reasons; and there is no measuring what will be the rapidity of its growth in the future. New York in 1883 issued 23,000 permits for building. Brooklyn in 1883 issued 26,088. The difference is very great on our side. In that part of the year that is now elapsed—eight or nine months—the permits issued are in still larger proportion of gain over building in New York. We are surpassing New York in the number of factories and in the importance of those that are building. We are surpassing New York in all the industries that require the water edge, having here a shore line of more than twenty-five miles. Now, while there are in this great city nearly 800,000 people, there are only 265 churches, chapels and houses of worship, which gives one church to every 2,624 inhabitants. In the outlying wards, with a population of 450,000 people, there is church seating for only about 50,000, leaving about 400,000 people in those outlying wards who have no churches, no Sabbath, no moral teaching. And yet of the 265 churches that exist in the city on the average they are not half filled, and where they are not half filled it is because there is nothing there that draws or that meets the wants of the great industrial populations lying around about them. Under these circumstances what shall we do? I am not going to make a plea for church building, although I am glad to see churches going up. But the churches are not going to educate our population. We have got to have a wandering ministry; we have got to have ministers who go from house to house, as the apostles did, and that preach to men in their sorrows, in their sicknesses. We want missionary men and women who will go into places of vice. I don't think we have half proved the power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The influences that men throw out to those around about them in the world was the subject of Mr. Beecher's sermon, his text being Romans, xv., 1-3. The following passages are picked out here and there from the discourse:—

"We are perpetually acting as if we were instruments photographic. We are throwing pictures; we are throwing shadows; we are throwing light upon one, ten, scores, hundreds. Every time we come into the presence of men something or other happens to them, for men are as sensitive to influence as we are powerful in developing influence."

"A person whose life is just as regular as a checker board—oh! of all the melancholy singing that I ever heard was that of a bullfinch in a cage that had been taught a little operatic air—(and Mr. Beecher showed how the bullfinch whistled)—and then over and over and over again, until I wanted to wring its neck."

"All real education brings men to men, and wherever you see men by the force of education separating themselves from and living above their fellow men, you may be sure they are uneducated and vulgar just in that degree, for the essential spirit of evolvement toward the good in man is the Christianlike spirit."

"The command to be orthodox is not to be found anywhere in the New Testament. Organized beliefs are all very well—among other things; but organization is not the sum of religion, nor even the need of religion."

"I don't object to elective affinities; I don't object that men who are alike intellectually should fellow together; but they must not build up a wall between themselves and their kind."

"The sign that a man is a gentleman is his consideration for those who are not; the sign that a man is educated is the largeness of his sympathy; the sign that a man is truly refined is not that there is a Desert of Sahara in his soul, but that he blossoms like a prairie."

Politics in Mexico.

Mexico has no political conventions. The newspapers do the nominating. The papers begin a discussion of candidates about a year previous to the Presidential election. Next they "postulate" or nominate certain candidates. At the head of the paper will appear, "We postulate" so and so, naming the journal's choice. Then, on election day, the voters assemble at the polling places, and each deposits a written ballot for electors, who are to constitute the Electoral Board of the State. This law stipulates that the ballot must be written, and a table, with paper and writing utensils, is provided beside the ballot box, and the ballot must be written and immediately deposited under the inspection of the Supervisor. Sometimes the voters of the different parties will meet a few hours previous and agree upon some candidate, but usually each voter has made a choice of candidates without any

"DICKENS' DUTCHMAN" DEAD.

The Old Penitentiary Inmate Dies in His Cell near Philadelphia.

Charles Langheimer, better known as "Dickens' Dutchman," died a few days ago in the Eastern Penitentiary, Philadelphia, where he had spent the better part of his life. He was eighty-two years old and was buried in Potter's Field. He was first sentenced to the penitentiary in 1840 and was released from time to time only to be returned for thefts.

It was not Langheimer's long residence in the penitentiary which gave him so much notoriety. It was the fact of Charles Dickens having seen and spoken to him and written about him in his "American Notes."

More than thirty years ago, when the eminent novelist visited this country, he took occasion to go through the penitentiary and there saw Langheimer, who was serving a term of five years. When Dickens wrote his "American Notes" he described the system of solitary confinement and referred to Langheimer in quite pathetic tones. He said:

"In a cell was a German, sentenced to five years' imprisonment for larceny, two of which had just expired. With colors extracted from yarn he had painted every inch of the walls and ceiling quite beautifully. He had laid out a few feet of ground behind with exquisite neatness and had made a little bed in the center that looked, by-the-bye, like a grave. The taste and ingenuity he had displayed in everything was most extraordinary, and yet a more dejected, heart-broken wretched creature it would be difficult to imagine. I never saw such a picture of forlorn affliction and distress of mind. My heart bled for him, and, when the tears ran down his cheeks and he took one of the visitors aside to ask, with his trembling hands nervously clutching at his coat to detain him, whether there was no hope of his dismal sentence being commuted, the spectacle was too painful to witness. I never saw or heard of any kind of misery that impressed me more than the wretchedness of this man."

Langheimer successfully passed through all the misery so pathetically pictured by Dickens and lived to hear of the novelist's death.

Printing Direct from Type.

Hoe, the printing-press builder, a newspaper correspondent says, is making a strong effort to induce newspapers to go back to the old system of printing direct from the type in place of stereotyping newspaper forms as is now the the custom. Hoe is now building a press for a New York evening paper which, he says, will run off 30,000 copies an hour from the type direct. He does not, however, want to make a contract to furnish a press to do this amount of work. If he could make a machine capable of that speed under the old type system, he would unquestionably do a good thing for himself and for the papers. It is quite certain that some improvement ought to be made on the stereotyping system. It eats up a lot of time that is very valuable, for the reason that it comes between the moment when the news is ready and the instant when press-work begins—at a period, in fact, when every moment of delay costs a lot of money. Any scheme to get over the half-hour or so that is spent in stereotyping will be of immense advantage, particularly to afternoon papers, where there is rivalry as to which shall get the news out a few minutes ahead of the others. It is all nonsense to say that stereotyping makes any practical saving of type. Where there are three or four editions packed off in a great rush a dress of type will not last more than a year with any stereotyping apparatus I ever saw, and it would be pretty heavy presswork which wore out type faster than that.

Statistics of Illiteracy.

Mr. Blair, of New Hampshire, addressed the United States Senate on the bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. In the course of his remarks he said:

More than one-ninth of the citizens of the United States are unable to read or write. According to the census of 1880, out of the 50,000,000 of population in the United States there were 9.82 per cent. who could not read and 12.44 per cent. who could not write. The proportion of white people who could not write was 6.06 per cent. and of colored 47.70 per cent. The number of persons of school age was 15,527,332, while the number enrolled was only 9,781,521, and even of that number the actual average attendance was only 5,805,342. That is to say, the average attendance was about two-thirds of the enrollment, or about one-third of the number that should attend. In thirty-four cities of the Union fifty to eighty-two per cent. of the children were not enrolled at all—that is, would never know how to read or write.

An Unlucky Dog.

Bill Nye, the funny writer, is a lucky and an unlucky dog. He picked up a bit of paper in the street on which was inscribed 2,684. He bought a ticket in a lottery of the same number and drew $20,000. This he invested in a gold mine, and at the end of six months he took the poor debtor's oath. He then went to Cape May, and while walking on the beach he discovered a young lady sinking for the third time. He rescued her and received $1,000 from her rich father. That night he fought the tiger and had to borrow a quarter to get a breakfast. He then took a job to put up telephone wire, and while doing so hit upon an idea which he sold to the company for $5,000. He spent $8,000 in solving the worthlessness of a new electric light. He concluded for the first time in his life that he would suit the balance down in good real estate, so he bought a farm and went to work. He resolved to dig a well, and the third day he struck a vein of coal, and has been offered $50,000 for one-half of the farm. Such is life.

Baby's Mother.

Oh, little baby, all pink, and wrinkled, and ugly as you are in men's eyes, how sweet you are to your mother! Heaven knows why, and Heaven only—I say it reverently—Heaven that sent you. A woman who has never loved a baby is not half a woman. She does not know what love can be. In every other phase of love there is some selfishness. In that which we feel for our baby there can be none. What does it bring to a mother, this morsel of humanity, but pain, and fear, and weakness, deprivation of pleasure, and vigils many and long? Yet the love she has for it pays for all. It is a passion—though it has never been called so—the strangest, sweetest, purest passion possible. When a lover's lips touch hers a girl looks fair and bright, and as beautiful as she ever will in life, so that those who see her envy and admire; yet her emotions may then be merely an equal mixture of love and vanity. When a mother kisses her first babe she is often pale and far from beautiful, but never in her life has such a depth of tenderness dwelt in her soul; never was she so near perfection; for all that we women have of good and true in our hearts has its base in mother-love. It is from this that our power to care for our households, to do our duty as daughters, sisters, and wives, must principally spring. The woman simply capable of romantic emotion may have lovers by the score, but is never true to one, and is always selfish to the heart's core, grasping all she can, and giving nothing. The woman with strong mother-love in their souls give that—though in less degree than to their babes—to all they love; and so is home built as the nest by the mother-bird

Lotteries and Presents.

Every sensible person should recognize the fact, when anything is offered for sale, no matter what it may be—a newspaper, book, medicines, pianos or jack-knives—for a certain sum of money, and gifts are offered as a bonus or inducement to purchase, that the thing offered is not worth the money asked for it. This conclusion cannot be avoided if one will only think for a moment. As this is not a regular business transaction, the purchaser of anything so offered cannot be surprised if he should find out that he has been deceived and has been led into a trap by means of a bait. If there is any chance about the distribution of these gifts it becomes a lottery, and is simply gambling. The laws against lotteries are now properly becoming very strict, and so far as morality is concerned the buyer of a chance is equally blamable as the offerer of it. Farmers are especially sought by persons who deal in these practices, as they are believed to be more than usually foolish or dishonest. It is to be hoped that they will resent this unjust imputation by letting such business severely alone.—New York Times.

LOST IT.—George Smith, of Indiana county, Pa., put $15,000 in bills in a wooden chest in his cellar. He would not trust his money to the banks. When he brought the chest to light a few days ago to count over his treasure, he found that the rats had burrowed through and through the chest until only a small fraction of the original package of bills was in a negotiable condition.

A TOWEL folded several times and dipped in hot water and quickly wrung, and then applied over the seat of the pain in toothache or neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief. Headaches almost always yield to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and the back of the neck

Mullein Vs. Cod Liver Oil.

Dr. Quillian, the leading authority of Great Britain on lung diseases, says, while one of his patients gained only seven pounds by the use of Cod Liver Oil, she gained over thirteen by the use of Mullein. The old field Mull in made into a tea and combined with Sweet Gum, presents in Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein, a pleasant and effective cure for Croup, Whooping Cough, Colds and Consumption. Price 25cts and $1.00. This with Dr. Biggers' Southern Remedy, an equally efficacious remedy for Cramp-Colic, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, and children suffering from the effects of teething presents a little MEDICINE CHEST no household should be without, for the speedy relief of sudden and dangerous attacks of the lungs and bowels. The secret of the large and constant sales of Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound probably lies in the fact that whereas there are many "Bitters" and "Tonics" of equal value, be it more or less, the Vegetable Compound is so completely superior to all other preparations specifically recommended for the needs of women that it has practically no rivals.

A Druggist's Story.

Mr. Isaac C. Chapman, druggist, Newburg, N. Y., writes us: "I have for the past ten years sold several gross of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I can say of it what I cannot say of any other medicine. I have never heard a customer speak of it but to praise its virtues in the highest manner. I have recommended it in a great many cases of whooping cough, with the happiest effects. I have used it in my own family for many years; in fact, always have a bottle in the medicine closet."

ROBERT WILSON had just retired to bed when the wind struck his home at Rockingham, N. C. His clothing lay upon a chair, and in his vest was a gold watch. He was blown out into the garden, and his watch was found hanging by the chain in the top of a high tree near by. It was still going.

THE Mississippi Senate passed a bill for the formal trial of habitual drunkards.

We Should Help One Another.

Mr. Norman Hunt, of No. 169 Chestnut street, Springfield, Mass., writes April 10, 1883, saying:

"Having the affliction caused by kidney and liver diseases, and after enduring the aches, pains, weakness and depression incident thereto until body and soul were nearly distracted, I sought for relief and a cure from my trouble, and was told by a friend who had been cured by it himself, that the best and only sure cure was Hunt's Remedy, and upon his recommendation I commenced taking it, and the first few doses improved my condition in a very marked manner, and a continuance of its use has justified all that my friends claimed for it—that it was a sure and permanent cure for all diseases of the kidneys and liver. Several of my friends in Springfield have used it with the most gratifying results, and I feel it my duty as well as a pleasure to me to recommend Hunt's Remedy in the highest possible terms."

Manufacturer's Testimony.

Mr. H. W. Payne, manufacturer of harness, saddlery, trunks, valises, etc., No. 427 Main street, Springfield, Mass., writes us under date of April 10, 1883:

"Gentlemen—I have used Hunt's Remedy, the best medicine for diseases of the kidneys, liver, bladder and urinary organs, and have received great benefit to my health from its use, and I find that it will do just what is claimed for it; it will cure disease and restore health. I therefore pronounce it the best medicine that I have ever used."

Boston and Albany Railroad.

Albert Bolt, Esq., paymaster Boston and Albany railroad, at Springfield, Mass., writes April 23, 1883: "I have used Hunt's Remedy, and my experience with it has been such that I can cheerfully say that I am satisfied that it will do just what it promises to do, if used according to directions."

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

An Article that Will Make the Bald and Gray Rejoice.

Many of the hair dressings of the day are excellent, but the great mass of the stuffs sold for promoting the growth and bringing back the original color, are mere humbugs, while not a few are pernicious in their effects upon the scalp and hair. The falling out of the hair, the accumulations of dandruff, and the premature change in color are all evidences of a diseased condition of the scalp and the glands which nourish the hair. To arrest these causes the article used must possess medical as well as chemical virtues, and the change must begin under the scalp to be of permanent and lasting benefit. Petroleum oil is the article which is made to work such extraordinary results; but it is after the best refined article has been chemically treated, and completely deodorized, that it is in proper condition for the toilet and receives the name of Carboline. It was in far-off Russia that the effects of petroleum upon the hair were first observed; a government officer having noticed that a partially bald-headed servant of his, when trimming the lamps, had a habit of wiping his oil-besmeared hands in his scanty locks, and the result was, in a few months, a much finer head of black, glossy hair than he ever had before. The oil was tried on horses and cattle that had lost their hair from cattle plague, and the results were marvelous. The manes and tails of horses, which had fallen out, were completely restored in a few weeks. These experiments were heralded to the world, but no one in civilized society could tolerate the use of refined petroleum as a dressing for the hair. But the skill of one of our chemists has overcome the difficulty, and he has succeeded in perfecting Carboline, rendering it as dainty as the famous eau de cologne. Experiments on the human hair and skin were attended with the most astonishing results. A few applications, where the hair was thin and falling, gave remarkable tone and vigor to the scalp and the hair. Every particle of dandruff disappears on the first or second dressing, all cutaneous disease of the skin and scalp are rapidly and permanently healed, and the liquid seems to penetrate to the root of the hair at once. It is well known that the most beautiful colors are made from petroleum, and by some mysterious operation of nature the use of this article gradually imparts a beautiful light brown color to the hair, which by continued use deepens to black. The color remains permanent, and the change is so gradual that the most intimate friends can scarcely detect its progress. In a word, it is the most wonderful discovery of the age, and well calculated to make the prematurely bald and gray rejoice. Carboline is put up in a neat and attractive manner and sold by all dealers in drugs and medicines. Price one dollar a bottle. Kennedy & Co., Pittsburg, Pa., general agents for the United States and Canadas.

We advise our readers to give it a trial, feeling satisfied that one application will convince them of its wonderful effects.

A YEAR'S WOOING.

'Twas autumn when first they stood on the bridge;
Ripe pears on the pear tree, ripe corn on the ridge;
The swallows flew swiftly far up in the blue,
And speeding still southward, were lost to the view.
Said he: "Can you love me, as I can love you?"
She said, quite demuredly: "Already I do!"

'Twas winter when next they met on the bridge;
The pear trees were brown, and white was the ridge;
The swallows were feathering their nests in Algiers.
She looked in his face, and she burst into tears!
His nose it was pinched, and his lips they were blue,
And she: "I can't love you!" Said he: "Nor I you!"

'Twas spring-time when next they stood on the bridge;
And white was the pear tree and green was the ridge;
The swallows had thoughts of a speedy return;
And the midges were dancing a-down the brown burn.
He said: "Pretty maiden, let by-gones go by Can you love me again?" She said: "I can try."

'Twas summer when next they stood on the bridge;
There were pears on the pear tree, tall corn on the ridge;
The swallows wheeled round them, far up in the blue,
Then swooped down and snapped up a midgelet or two.
Said he: "Lest some trifle should come in the way,
And part us again, will you mention the day?"
She stood, looking down on the fast-flowing rill,
Then answered, demuredly: "As soon as you will!"

—Chambers's Journal.

Disguised.

"Charles! Charles! you won't forget to meet my Aunt Stephanie at the depot at twelve precisely!"

Mrs. Early had followed her tall brother-in-law to the front door steps, with the fresh wind blowing her bright hair about her face, and a scarlet Shetland shawl drawn picturesquely round her delicate shoulders—a pretty woman with something of matronly dignity subduing the arch mischief that sparkled in her merry eyes.

Mr. Charles Early was a stalwart, handsome young man, with blue eyes and light brown hair shadowing a fair, open forehead. It was a pleasant face to look into, with nothing of irresolution or effeminacy about it, and consequently Charles Early had many friends—aye, and loyal ones, too.

He turned around at the sound of his sister-in-law's voice. Josephine was one of his most useful and constant allies.

"No; I'll not forget, Josephine; but I'm sorry her grandfathers and grandmothers in baptism gave her the name of Stephanie.

"Why?"

"Because I know a Stephanie; the prettiest fairy you ever saw! It was when we were all at Woolgrove Beach last month—and—if you'll promise not to tell my sober brother, Bob, I'll confide to you a momentous secret, Josephine. Have I your pledge of secrecy?"

"I promise."

"Well, then, I lost my heart to that beautiful little Stephanie, with her flossy, yellow curls, and her rosemouth with its tiny pearls of teeth, and her pink and white complexion, just like your great oleander in the drawing room."

"Did you propose to her, Charlie?" questioned his sister in-law, with all the eager earnestness of a woman's curiosity.

"Not just then, but—another secret, Josephine—I proposed by letter, day before yesterday!"

"And you have received no answer?"

"Not yet; I suppose it is too soon; but I'm on thorns and nettles until one does reach me, Josephine, if she don't love me, I'll drown myself!"

"No, Charles, you won't! What absurd nonsense!"

"Then I'll do worse; I'll subside into a cross grained, fidgety old bachelor, quarrelling incessantly at everything and everybody for all the rest of my natural days; just see if I don't."

"Charles, you're a goose."

"So are all young men who have the misfortune to fall in love. It's their normal condition. What time do you say the train arrives? Twelve? I shall have to get a carriage, I suppose, to transfer the rheumatic old lady here without any breakage of bones. Does she walk with a gold-headed cane?"

"Yes, and she wears a wig and spectacles, and talks through her nose, and takes snuff from a tortoise-shell box."

"Angels and ministers of grace defend us!" Josephine, how did you ever come to have such an aunt? and how did her name happen to be Stephanie, instead of Dorcas or Tryphosa?"

"We used to call her 'Aunt Feny,' for short," said Mrs. Early, mischievously, and her brother-in-law strode down the street, whistling, but not for the lack of thought, as he went.

"I wish Aunt Feny was in the Red Sea," he thought, a little vindictively; "but I suppose I must oblige Josephine."

So at 12 o'clock precisely Mr. Charles Early stood on the platform at the H—— depot watching the long train as it slowly glided in like a fire-throated serpent.

"There comes your antediluvian old hag, Charlie," said Guy St. Everil, with a laugh, as a brisk but somewhat bent figure, wrapped from head to foot in a voluminous cloak of snuff-colored bombazine, with a huge circular cape of the same, stepped out of one of the last cars by the aid of an iron-headed cane. Her bonnet, curiously bent and crumpled, barely covered a huge, frilled cap. She wore a bright brown wig, set a little awry over her forehead, and massive green spectacles sat astride of her nose, while brown cotton gloves adorned her hands, and a green umbrella, carried under the arm, threatened, with its brass ferule, the eyes of whoever was rash enough to crowd her movements in the rear.

"Aunt Feny's self, as I live and breathe!" echoed Bruce Montmartin. "Charlie, if I were you I'd run for it!"

"Drop her in the gutter and make off with yourself," suggested another young exquisite, superciliously stroking down his mustache.

But Charles Early had too many gentlemanly instincts to pay any heed to the waggish hints of his companions. He stepped forward, chivalrously.

"Allow me to carry your basket for you, ma'am?" he said. "I am the brother-in-law of your niece, Mrs. Early."

"Oh, you be, eh?" croaked a feeble voice, from under the cap frill. "Well, you may take my umbril and my basket, and here's a paper o' gingerbread I fetched along for lunch and a bottle o' root beer Farmer Jenkins' wife sent me—it's dretful good for pimples and sich—and I've got a striped carpet-bag somewhers, with the key tied on with a bit o' red tape—and here's the brass tickets for the trunks; checks, the fellow called 'em, if I remember rightly."

"It's all right, ma'am, I assure you," said Mr. Early. "Step into the carriage; I will see that your things are brought here directly."

"What be them fellows laughin' at?" demanded Aunt Feny, stopping short, with one foot on the carriage step, and glaring at Messrs. St. Everil, Montmartin & Co. through the green spectacle glasses. "I guess I'm as good as they be, if I ain't dressed in the very last agony of the fashion. I've got ten dollars sewed up in my flannel waist, over and above my travelin' expenses, and I'll go bail it's more than they've got!"

A suppressed laugh here ran through the little assemblage of spectators on the platform.

"Do not let their folly annoy you, ma'am," said Early, pleasantly. "Let me assist you into the carriage. St. Everil, stand back!" he added, sternly; "if you have no reverence for old age or womanhood, I will teach you to respect my right hand. This lady is under my protection, you will please to remember."

Mr. St. Everil retreated, somewhat discomfited, upon his companion's toes, and the old lady climbed, chuckling, into the carriage.

"Young man," she began, when the umbrella, lunch-paper, basket and bottle were safely stowed away and they were rolling rapidly over the city streets, "you've got a good deal of moral courage. 'Taint every city sprig would be as polite to an old creetur as you've been, with all them noisy fellers pokin' fun at you."

Our hero was somewhat embarrassed at this plainly-spoken compliment.

"I hope, madam," he said, "I shall never be found lacking in the essential qualities of a gentleman, in whatever circumstances I may be placed."

The antique dame nodded her cap-frills, and held silently on to her umbrella, without venturing any other remark until they reached Mrs. Robert Early's mansion.

Josephine was waiting for them on the threshold; she clasped her ancient relation closely in her arms, and there was a sort of triumphal procession up to her apartment, which Charles was rather at a loss to understand.

"One would think Josephine never had had an aunt, fresh out of Noah's ark before," he muttered to himself, as he took up the newspaper and went out to the vine-shaded back piazza, there to while away the time until such period as lunch should be announced.

"Charlie!"

He had exhausted the paper long ago, and nearly fallen into a doze; but at his sister-in-law's summoning voice he started to his feet and entered the house.

"Aunt Stephanie wants to thank you for all your kindness to her this morning," said Josephine.

"Confound Aunt Stephanie," thought Mr. Early, advancing drowsily toward the front room, where, in a sort of artificial twilight, produced by satin curtains and Venetian blinds, he could dimly descry a figure.

Suddenly Josephine drew back the shadowy draperies, and there, instead of a bent and crooked old woman, stood a lovely girl of 18, with deep blue eyes and golden curls, set off with a white muslin dress, with an abundance of floating blue ribbons looped and knotted about it.

"Stephanie Osborne!" he ejaculated, instantly recognizing his fair enchantress of the ——th.

"No—my Aunt Stephanie?" interrupted Josephine, demurely.

"What mystery is this?" demanded Early, looking with a puzzled face from one to the other. "Are you——"

"I am the veritable old lady of the railroad train!" laughed the golden-haired lassie, with a becoming glow of color in her cheeks. "Do not look so astonished, Charles. Josephine really is my niece, only as her mother, my sister, was married before I was born, she is just ten years older than I am!"

"Yes, but why——"

"Why did I assume that odious disguise, you would say? Just to try your sterling worth and native chivalry, Charles. I somehow fancied that the young man who was polite and attentive to a bent old woman would have in him the stuff for a good and noble husband, and——"

"And may I be your husband, Stephanie?" demanded Mr. Charlie, promptly deducing a favorable inference.

"I—I'll think of it," said Stephanie, laughing and blushing. "At all events, Charlie, I like you ten thousand times better since I have seen how devoted you were to the poor old woman in the snuff-colored cloak!"

"Upon my word, Stephanie, you ought to have been an actress!" said Mrs. Early, archly.

"'All the world's a stage,'" quoted Stephanie, "and I have only performed my part! Henceforward I relinquish the profession?"

"So you are going to marry my Aunt Stephanie, eh?" said Josephine, as she met her brother-in-law in the hall, after a lengthened interview with his fair-haired goddess. "And will you be my uncle then!"

"I don't care if I am your grandfather, now that she has said yes," was Mr. Charles Early's exultant reply.

Seasonable Farm Hints.

Peas may be sown as soon as the frost is out of the ground. It is cheaper in the beginning, as well as in the end, to buy the early cabbage plants, and those grown in cold frames may be put out as soon as the soil feels warm to the hand. A little mulch of warm manure around each one of a dozen or two of early cabbage plants, and some shelter—if only a newspaper pegged down over each plant—will protect them from a frosty night. A mulching of manure and some covering of straw will force asparagus ahead fully two or three weeks of the main crop, and a row or two can be easily covered in this way. It is quite possible to get two successive crops of vegetables and small fruits by protecting in this way a sufficient number of plants to afford an early supply. A liberal mulching of warm manure will start the growth very quickly, or at least will force a rapid growth after it has started naturally. As the garden is the most valuable part of the farm it is proper that a warm, sheltered place should be selected for it and that the ground should be very rich. Any one can grow vegetables and fruits, but some forethought, provision, and skill are necessary to grow early and good ones, and the pleasure of having fine vegetables and an early supply of them is worth far more than the thought—the labor is the same—that is requisite to secure them. The garden should now be put in order—and planted as far as may be—before the farm work is begun or it will be apt to be neglected. And why should not the husbandman—the farm husband—take this burden upon himself instead of casting it upon the farm wife, whose domestic duties are sufficiently engrossing without this addition to them.

A Change for the Better.

There are more temperance organizations and societies in the country to-day, more men who are total abstainers, than at any time in its history. There are three or four States where the sentiment against the use of intoxicating drinks is so strong that their Legislatures have been compelled to adopt stringent legislation on the subject. The memory of most men living can recall the time when the National Congress, the Senate as well as the House of Representatives, witnessed scenes of intoxication that shocked and disgraced the whole country. Strong drink was openly sold in both wings of the Capitol at Washington, and it was an ordinary occurrence to see drunken Senators and Representatives staggering through the corridors to their seats in the two branches of the National Legislature. It is true that liquor is still sold there; but it is in violation of the rules. The Congressional revelry has come to an end, and no man who is known as a habitual drunkard, no matter how great his ability or how excellent in other respects, can retain his seat in either body. This is true of nearly all the State Legislatures. Ninety per cent. of the officeholders of the country, State and Federal, are men of temperate habits. They cannot, in fact, be elected or appointed if their lives are, in this respect, a scandal. In private business houses the same rule obtains. The clerk who is a heavy drinker is very soon invited to seek another position.—New York Hour.

GENEROUS AS WELL AS BRAVE.—Lieutenant Rhodes has deposited in bank $3,000 received from various sources in testimonials for his bravery at the Gay Head disaster, and awaits permission from Secretary Folger to divide the money among his shipmates on the Dexter. To forestall a possible adverse decision by the Secretary, Lieut. Rhodes has purchased new uniforms and blue hats for every man on board.

THE WAR IN THE SOUDAN.

What a Correspondent Saw in the Midst of the Fray.

[From the London Standard.]

So hotly do the Arabs press forward that the troops pause in their steady advance. It becomes a hand-to-hand fight, the soldiers meeting the Arab spear with cold steel, their favorite weapon, and beating them at it. There is not much shouting, and only a short, sharp exclamation, a brief shout, or an oath as the soldiers engage with their foes. At this critical moment, for the enemy are rushing up quickly, the Gardner guns open fire, and their leaden hail soon decides the matter. At this instant, Admiral Hewett, who, with Mr. Levison, his private secretary, is present as a spectator, joins the Naval Brigade and leads them on over the dead bodies of the Arabs, lying thickly strewn on their front, into the work, which proves to be but a bank of sand. Colonel Burnaby here has his horse shot under him, and a bullet passes through his arm. Still with the double-barrelled fowling-piece he carries he knocks over the Arabs who assail him. But they press on, and he is only saved from being speared by one of the Gordon Highlanders bayoneting an Arab who attacks him when both barrels of his gun are empty. Several fierce personal encounters take place as the troops rush into the entrenchments. The first feeling of nervousness has passed away, their blood is up now, and the enthusiasm of battle is upon them. More and more shrill the pipes skirl out, and the men are eager to close with the foe. As single Arabs rush down the brave soldiers step singly forward from the ranks and meet, bayonet to spear, in almost every instance vanquishing them by the bayonet alone, without firing. A soldier who had single-handed engaged two of the enemy would have got the worst of it had not Captain Wilson, of the Hecla, come to his aid and run one of his assailants through the body, breaking his own sword and receiving a wound across the face as he did so. Sharp as the fight is, it lasts but a minute or two after the troops have passed over the sand bank.

The work contains one Krupp gun, which, of course, falls into our hands. The bush grows thickly all about where we are now formed up, and numbers of the enemy are lying concealed in it. They constantly leap to their feet and rush at us, singly or by twos and threes, with fanatical valor, often coming on till they fall dead almost at the muzzles of the rifles. During the halt the cavalry have moved round behind us, and we can now see them advancing toward a large mass of the enemy, who are making off in the distance. They are manifestly quickening their pace. Faster and faster they go; their sabres are flashing in the sunlight, and they dash into the mass of the enemy. Right through them they cut their way, and then turn sharp back again. The Arabs do not fly, but stand and fight stubbornly and gallantly, displaying as much courage as against the infantry. Again and again they are dispersed, but each time they gather together as the horsemen come on; and the cavalry, although cutting down many, go by no means scathless through them.

Oleomargarine in the Legislature.

Artificial butter was discussed by the Assembly recently, and the evils ascribed to it are deserved by some of the combinations of grease and milk that are sold as products of the dairy; but the Legislature might as well go slow as to have its conclusions set aside within a year or two. Genuine oleomargarine is an imitation butter that experts have pronounced almost identical with the original product of the churn, and it is much cheaper than butter made from cream; consequently it appeals to the pockets of consumers, who outnumber producers at least ten to one. Its imitations, made of materials that cannot bear the test of time, because they will in a few days be offensive to taste, smell and health, should either be suppressed or sold under their proper names. The people of a State containing one-tenth of the population of the United States should not be specially taxed to support dairy farms, neither should they be subjected to unhealthful imitations. Compounders of vile grease can easily be detected and punished. The law as it is can effect this end with but little additional legislation, and the people demand that this be done. For the rest, the interests of dairymen are not superior, nor even equal, to those of consumers. Let the Legislature be in earnest, but let it not fail to work for the greatest good to the greatest number.—New York Herald.

Closing a Gap.

General Buller has recommended Captain Wilson, R. M., of the Hecla, for an action at the battle of Teb, which he describes as one of the most courageous he has ever witnessed. There was a gap in the square, and five or six of the enemy seeing it rushed forward, attempting to pierce the ranks. Captain Wilson advanced to meet them alone, and breaking his sword in his effort to cut one of them down, would not retire a step, but held his ground, knocking them down with his fists. Either by a miracle or the surprising nature of his attack, he escaped with a few wounds, and the square closing up rescued him.

AGONY OF HYDROPHOBIA.

The Suffering of a Child Two Months After Being Bitten by a Dog.

[From the New York Herald.]

Willie Meddus, the six-year-old child of Mary Meddus, a widow, living in Williamsburg, was severely bitten in the face and on the elbow last January by a Scotch terrier belonging to John Van Brunt, who lives in a house opposite to that of Mrs. Meddus. The boy was taken to the Eastern District Dispensary, where his wounds were cauterized. Some days later the dog was shot [illegible] boy recovered and gave no evidence of having been seriously injured until last Sunday, when he became feverish and restless. He was awake nearly all night. The next morning the mother called in Dr. Daniel Murphy, who said that the child had symptoms of hydrophobia.

The physician gave the mother instructions as to what should be done in the event of a quick development of the disease. After the doctor left the child asked for a drink. A glassful of water was taken to his bedside, but at sight of it he was seized with violent convulsions. When the convulsions passed away the boy again asked for water. The mother and those about him were afraid to bring on the convulsions again and hesitated to comply with his wishes.

The boy, when he noticed that no one in the room moved in the direction of the water pail, jumped from the bed and exclaimed: "I will get it myself." He ran across the room and was about to put his face in the pail when he was again seized with convulsions. He was with difficulty lifted to the bed. His sufferings were intense. No relief whatever could be afforded him. The afflicted mother and the brothers and sisters of the child were nearly crazed by the sight the little lad presented, and begged their friends to release the child from its agony. When death came the poor mother said she was grateful. It would certainly have killed her, she said, to have had her child endure another day of such torture.

In the little casket the features of the child gave no evidence of the terrible suffering he had endured. With the exception of the scars on his face, where the dog had bitten him, the boy's appearance was that of a child who had died peacefully.

To a Herald reporter Dr. Murphy said: "I was called to see the boy on Monday and knew nothing about his having been bitten by a dog. I saw at once it was a case of hydrophobia and did all that was possible. As near as I can learn the boy had been tormenting the dog when the animal flew at him. When the child asked for a drink I advised the mother to give him some tea. A teaspoonful was given him, but he immediately threw it off. The little fellow's suffering was very great, and he presented an awful appearance. He lived forty-eight hours after the disease had manifested itself."

Mrs. Meddus said: "My boy was stricken down just nine weeks to the day after he was bitten. It is said that my poor child tormented the dog, but that is not so. Willie, with other children, was going into Mr. Van Brunt's creamery across the street when the savage little dog sprung at him and tore his face and elbow."

Talking About War.

General Grant recently told a newspaper correspondent, speaking of the Rebellion, that it was so much a young men's war that he thought himself rather too old to make a successful commander, because he was 39 when the struggle began. He said that the Mexican war, which closed only thirteen years before the Rebellion began, seemed to him much more remote in 1861 than the Rebellion does now, nearly twenty years after its close. The Mexican war was an episode merely, and being fought on foreign soil and with small forces, did not leave such impressions on the minds of those engaged in it as were left by the great civil war. Speaking of the nameless battles of the Rebellion, Gen. Grant said that there were many fights brought on by reconnoissances in command of Colonels where more men were killed than fell in some of the battles in Mexico which are famous in history. The battles of the civil war were so numerous that their very names are more and more fading from the public recollection, leaving only the most important to stand out distinctly in the national memory.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' MONUMENT.—General Lloyd Aspinwall, of New York, has obtained the signatures of 600 citizens, of high and low degree, "from a millionaire to a shoemaker," to use his words, to the roll of the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association, of which he is president. It is intended to raise by popular subscription, contributed from all classes of people, sufficient to erect a plain and massive shaft, high enough to be seen at a great distance, in commemoration of the soldiers and sailors who lost their lives in the war. A conspicuous site, like the Fifth ave. entrance to Central Park, will be selected for the National obelisk. It is expected that $100,000 will be collected.

PET NAMES FOR THE BABY.

Sploodoogle is a new father, and the other morning after a noisy night with the kid he picked up Sploodoogle, Jr., and began coddling him:

"Ee, oo ittle ootsy wootsy tootsy," he gurgled, "oo tweet ittle sing; oor mamma's darlin'. Yon darned Macbeth, you!"

"What's that?" cried Mrs. S., startled by this changed tones, "what's that you're calling the baby?"

"Nothing, dear, only 'Macbeth.'"

"That's a horrid name. What do you want to call the little angel that for?"

"On strictly classic principles, dear. I call him Macbeth because Shakespeare says, 'Macbeth doth murder sleep.'"—Merchant Traveler.

OUR MINISTER'S SACRIFICE.

Minister Sargent has completely won Bismarck's heart. At the great Berlin banquet the famous Chancellor watched the American diplomat closely. At a critical moment in the meal Bismarck called a waiter to him and spoke a few words in a low tone. The waiter immediately left the banquet hall, but in a moment returned and placed directly before Sargent's plate a piece of Limburger cheese that nearly pulled the table-cloth off. Sargent turned deadly pale. But nerving himself he grasped the cheese, and, holding his breath, ate every morsel of it with great rapidity. Bismarck eyed him earnestly, and as the last particle disappeared could contain himself no longer.

"Mein Gott! He hef schwallowed it all! Zargent, your handt! No longer call me Brinz. Call me Aubgoost; Ich bin nine bruder!"

Sargent has been in bed ever since; but he says he knew the fate of the two great nations hung upon the deed, and he did it.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

WORSE THAN BEING LEFT.

"Let the office seek the man and not the man the office. That's my doctrine," declared Mr. Jones.

"You're just the man I want to run against," responded Smith. "The man who sits down and waits for a salaried office to come and hunt him up is too good for this earth and too big a fool for heaven, and entirely too tame for Satan's dominions. I'm afraid you'd be left out all around."

"Well, it might be worse than that."

"Worse! What could possibly be worse?"

"Well, it isn't nearly as bad as being a New York Alderman under the Roosevelt Reform bill."—Oil City Blizzard.

A SIGNIFICANT SUGGESTION.

"I see," said Mrs. Youngwife, as she folded the newspaper and took up her sewing, "I see that the Mormons have their wives sealed unto them."

"Yes," replied her husband, looking up from his book, "that is the custom, I believe, my love."

"I don't see why Somerville wives should not be sealed unto their husbands," pursued the lady, as she threaded her needle.

"In what way, dear?"

"With a sealskin sacque, as it were," and the lady chewed her thread meditatively, while the husband muttered "selah!" and pretended to be gazing at the ceiling.—Somerville Journal.

ART NOTE.

Mortimer Morgan is a native of Austin, who imagines he has a talent for painting, but thus far he has met with no success. His father endeavored to make a clergyman of him, but in vain. A few days ago, the old man said to him:

"Mortimer, don't you think it is time for you to quit spoiling good canvas and wasting paint."

"I feel sure that in a few years I'll eclipse Raphael."

"In a few years," sneered the old man; "you are now forty-two years old, and nobody has ever bought a picture from you. Don't you know, you addlepated ass, that at your age Raphael had been dead five years?"—Austin Siftings.

DIDN'T KNOW IT WERE ENOUGH.

"Walter," said his fond wife, "will you not learn to play poker for my sake?"

"Learn to play poker!" he exclaimed in astonishment.

"Why—ahem—why, the truth is I do know something about the game. I—I have played it."

"Yes, dear, but you don't know enough. I thought if you would only learn how to play it you might not lose so much money, you know."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

A SAFE BET.

"I'll bet a good cigar that's a married couple," remarked a swell standing at the window of a fashionable club house and watching a lady and gentleman who were crossing the street during a heavy shower.

"I can't imagine your reason for saying so," returned his companion.

"It's plain enough. Don't you see that the center of the umbrella is over his head, and not over hers."

A FAIR OFFER.

A few days ago a farmer drove up to the door of a Springwells saloon and called out to several men standing around that a neighbor of his living about four miles away had fallen into the family well and probably killed himself.

"Well, what of it?" asked one of the men.

"Why, I want two or three of you to ride out with me and help get the body out."

"For how much?"

"You don't pretend to want pay for such an action as that!" gasped the farmer, but they said they did, and he entered the saloon to see if the owner was not more tender hearted.

"I tells you how it vhas——" began the saloonist, but he was interrupted with:

"Don't tell me that you won't lend a hand in such a case as this!"

"I can't go, my freudt, but I tells you how it vhas. I let you drink beer until you doan' care two cents for all the farmers und all der wells in America, und den I hire a poy for two shillings to drive you home. Dot vhas der best I can do to-day."—Detroit Free Press.

"HOW TO MAKE HOME HAPPY."

He was a book agent. He rang a door bell, and a woman who was sweeping opened the door so suddenly that he fell off the step and nearly lost his best equilibrium. But he was a book agent, and he recovered his momentum and said fluently:

"I am agent for the most celebrated book ever offered to the public since 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' was written, and filled with hints of things that cannot be found outside the covers of any other book, and with recipes for cooking and family prayers, and how to keep moths out of furs, and some fine poems by well known and popular writers, and you can give me your order to-day and needn't pay for it till next June, or on the installment plan, which is cheaper than going without, and the name of it is 'Three Million Hints, or Inquire Within How to Make Home Happy.'"

"Oh, yes," said the woman, smiling sweetly. "'How to Make Home Happy,' I have one already," and she looked at the broom in her hand with dreamy eyes.

He fell off the doorstep again, and this time he didn't recover till there was a block between them.—Detroit Free Press.

FINANCIAL STATISTICS.

Jim Webster, a hard-looking colored man, was brought to a justice in Austin, for stealing some money from the house of Col. Jones, one of the most respectable citizens.

Said the Judge very impressively to Jim:

"Don't you know that no good can come from stolen money—that there is a curse on it?"

"Boss, I didn't know Col. Jones stole dat money. I allus 'spected him ob bein' an honest man. White folks am gettin' to be mighty unreliable nowadays."—Texas Siftings.

WASHINGTON NOT AN ANGLER.

Jones—"What an enthusiastic old angler George Washington was!"

Smith—Washington! Why he was not a fisherman."

Jones—"Indeed he was a great lover of the sport. He wrote a book about it."

Jones—"Izaak Walton! Why, that's a fact; so I was. It was not Washington, of course. He was not an angler."

Smith—"No, indeed; Washington could not tell a lie."—Phila. Call.

Off for Cuba.

Col. Aguero, with thirty picked men, left Key West, at 9 o'clock at night, on the schooner Shavers. At an early hour in the morning the revenue cutter Gov. Dix started in pursuit, but returned after an unsuccessful cruise. A dispatch from Key West says: The schooner was loaded with dynamite, arms, ammunition, which have accumulated since Aguero's recent arrest. It is rumored that the Cedar Keys and Key West mail steamers report having seen a large steamship off Egmont Key steaming south. She is thought to be a filibuster from the vicinity of New Orleans, and it is believed that Aguero met her at Dry Tortugas and embarked with his men. If so, warm work may soon be expected in Cuba. Recent reports from Havana confirm the belief that a pistol shot at the present time would cause a revolution. Things are at their utmost tension there, and if the filibusters succeed in landing they will find the people ripe for a revolt. CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., MAY 22, 1884.

The State Democratic Convention will assemble in Montgomery on Wednesday, June 4th.

The Courier-Journal calls the the Democrats who voted against the Morrison bill renegades. This is the C. J.'s idea of harmonizing. Alas! and alas!

The Democratic County Convention of Lauderdale adopted a resolution instructing the delegates to the Congressional Convention to vote for General Wheeler.

Bogan Cash, the South Carolina murderer and outlaw was killed on last Wednesday by the Sheriff's posse while resisting arrest. One of the posse was slightly wounded by Cash during the firing. Cash was riddled with bullets before he ceased firing upon the posse.

George W. Cable, the novelist of New Orleans, has accepted an invitation to deliver an address at the approaching commencement of the University, at Tuscaloosa. Mr. Cable has lectured with great success in the large cities of the Union, and added much to his reputation for literary culture and ability.

The following resolution was adopted by the Choctaw County Democratic Convention:

Resolved 1st, That the delegates to the State Convention be instructed to cast the votes of Choctaw county for W. S. Thorington for Attorney-General, John G. Bass for Auditor and Willis G. Clark for Superintendent of Education.

It is the opinion of the Rev. Dr. Eccleston that San Francisco is the Paris of America in the fondness of the people for amusement, their love of display, their disregard of religion, and their reckless habits of speculation. He also notes that California has proportionately more suicides than any other State, and he finds prolific causes in dissipation, financial embarassment, and domestic trouble.

The literary world of Madrid have had a good chuckle at the expense of the Government. The manager of El Progreso was arrested for publishing an article on tyranny, which was considered by the Ministry as an incitement to civil war. The culprit, laughing in his sleeve, refused to divulge the name of the writer, and was sent to prison, where he would probably be now had not the Government suddenly discovered that the article in question was an extract from Macaulay.

From a French state paper, lately brought to light, it appears that in 1770 the following Parliamentary decree was solemnly passed and duly registered under King Louis XV.: "Whosoever, by means of red or white paint, perfumes, essences, artificial teeth, false hair, cotton wool, iron corsets, hoops, shoes with high heels, or false hips, shall seek to entice into the bands of marriage any male subject of his Majesty, shall be prosecuted for witchcraft, and declared incapable of matrimony."

Miss Susan B. Anthony has at least one passionate love, and that is for a gray skye-terrier given to her by Mrs. Cady Stanton. The animal sleeps in Susan's bed, feeds from her hand, accompanies her in her travels, and has a good time generally.—Exchange.

Miss Anthony says she never owned a dog and never even spoke to one, and that the President did not squeeze her hand when he told her that he believed the women should have whatever they wanted. She does not look like a woman who would let a President or any other man squeeze her hand, and we hasten to repel the slanders of a ribald press.

Of English doctors, Radcliffe made over $35,000 a year in the height of his fame; Mead $25,000, and Sir B. Brodie, $85,000 in the year but one before his retirement, the largest income known. Radcliffe once received $8,000 as special fee for visiting Lord Albermarle at Namur, Granville $5,000 and his travelling expenses for a visit to St. Petersburg, and recently Sir W. Gull $5,000 each for two visits to Pau and $7,500 for traveling to Perthshire and remaining a week with a patient. But the fee of fees was that received by Dr. Dimsdale in 1768 for inoculating the Empress Catherine and her son at St. Petersburg, viz., $60,000 paid down, a pension of $2,500 for life, and the dignity of a baron.

"A Life Worth Living."

Dr. Talmage delivered the following thoughts on the above subject in a late sermon in the Brooklyn Tabernacle:

First, a life that sets out with the one idea of money-getting never pays for the reason you will never get enough to satisfy you. The poorest men are those who have a million dollars, and the next poorest are those who have a half million. There is not a scissors grinder on the streets of New York or Brooklyn that is so absorbingly anxious to make money as those men who have for many years piled it up in stocks or government securities or tenement houses or city blocks. You ought to see them jump when the fire bell rings. You ought to scrutinize their feelings when reformation in tariff is proposed. Their nerves tremble like harp strings but without any music in the vibration. They read the morning report of Wall street doings with concernment that threatens paralysis or apoplexy. More probably they have a private telegraph in their house or telephone, through which they catch every breath of change in the money market. They are eaten up with the disease of accumulation. It gets into their heart, into their liver, into their spleen, into their brain, into their bones. Chemists have analyzed the human body and found it to be made up of so much lime and so much magnesia and so much chloride of potassium. If these financial behemoths were analyzed by some moral chemist, they would be found to be made up of copper and gold and silver and zinc and lead and coal and iron. That style of life is not worth living. There are so many earthquakes in it. There are so many agonies in it. There are so many shipwrecks in it. There are so many perditions in it. They build their castles and open their picture galleries and summon the prima donas and make every inducement for happiness to come, but she will not. They send footmaned and postillioned equipage to fetch her but she will not ride to their doors. They send a person to escort her thither, but she will not take their arm. They call to her from the upholstered balcony, but she looks the other way. They make their gateways triumphal arches to tempt her but she will not pass under. They set for her a golden throne before a golden plate, but she turns away from the banquet. However, this is the failure of those who have large accumulation. The most of those who make the one idea of life money-making die far short of affluence. It is estimated in all parts of this land that only two out of a hundred business men are successful. A life with the idea of money making dominant is not worth living.

So also a life that chiefly strives for worldly approval is a failure. The two most unfortunate men for the next six months will be the two men who secure the nominations for the presidency. The two reservoirs of malediction are gradually filling up, gallon above gallon, hogshead full after hogshead full and about mid-summer the two reservoirs will be brimming full and hose will be attached to each of these two reservoirs and they will begin to play on the two nominees and they will have to stand and take it, the falsehood, the sarcasm, the caricature, the venom, the caterwauling, the anathema, the filth, and they will be thrown down into it and rolled over and choked and submerged and strangled, and at every sign of returning animation barked at by all the hounds of political party from the St. Lawrence to Mobile bay. To win the great privilege a hundred candidates to-day with their thousand of friends are struggling.

But the misery of a life aiming for political preferment is seen on a smaller scale in the strife for social position. In every community to win it, men and women by the thousand are striving with attention terrific. What is social position? It is not easily defined but all know what it is. Good morals and education are not necessary for it, but wealth or show of wealth is indispensable. A man may be as notorious for his libertinism as the night is famous for its darkness, but he moves in it. There are hundreds of out and out rakes in high social position in America to-day. Their names appear in the list of important personages at the great levees. They have annexed for themselves all the known vices and are looking for other worlds of diabolism to conquer. Good morals are not necessary for what is called high social position. Nor is intelligence necessary. There are in the realm, men who would not know an adverb from an adjective if they should meet it a hundred times a day and could not write a note of acceptance or regrets without the aid of a secretary. They bought their libraries by the square foot, only anxious to have the books in Russian binding. Impersonations of ignorance so sublime they make the English grammar disreputable and yet they find the finest parlors open to them. But while good morals or intelligence are not necessary, wealth is, everything, or the appearance of it. It makes no difference how he got his money if he only got it. He may have gained it by failing four or five times, that being in this country the most rapid mode of accumulation. The quickest way of getting into high social position is to buy all you can on credit, then put your property in your wife's name, make provision for some special friends and then make an assignment and then go, no one knows where, until you turn up in time to start again. Don't you see how beautifully you have put your neighbor in the same kind of business in half puddlement, and so much sooner you can get in high social position. But really get out of money and how soon you will drop out, and the higher you are up the harder you will drop. Tens of thousands of people are anxious to reach that social realm and thousands in it fear they will lose their grip, and every year and month and day there are changes that involve heartbreaks never reported. Social life is in perpetual flutter with the delicate question as to who shall be let in and who shall be pushed out, and the battle goes on, pier mirror against pier mirror, upholstery against upholstery, Chickering grand against Chickering grand, wine cellar against wine cellar, drawing room against drawing room, equipage against equipage. Insecurity and uncertainty rampant, and it is wretchedness enthroned and torture at a premium, and a life not worth living.

The Purpose of the Press.

Mr. Chappelle Cory, of the Selma Times, delivered the annual address before Alabama Press Association at its recent meeting in Eufaula. Mr. Cory's address was a most excellent one. It was practical, and was replete with real noble thoughts and sound teachings. The following extract, setting forth the nobility of purpose which should ever control the press, deserves a place in the memory of each individual member of the Association. We would like to publish the address entire, but can find space for this extract only:

"From that selfishness and greed for money-getting which, in a State as far behind as ours, seems so essential a part of her rapid development, the press at least is exempt. About the newspapers of Alabama there is no odor of venality. No profession does more unselfish work than ours and the newspapers of no State are so free from suspicion of bargain and sale. No class is moved more by the hope of honor for good work done, and less by the itching of their palms. A man who thinks less of the public esteem than of the cash drawer is unfit for journalism. If he hopes for more riches than fame from the pen and the paste pot, he had best abdicate his high calling. Some proprietors of newspapers do grow rich, but that is not the hope that lures the brightest adherents of journalism nor those who do most honor to their calling. The unknown many who toil for pittances and build colossal names for the famous few, are the men whose brains are worn and wasted in moulding the character of this great people. Their reward is not in riches nor a sounding trump, but there is a glad spot in their hearts for having said a word here that carried solace to grief or a smile to care-worn lips, and a word there which sent a blush of pride to the cheek of young ambition, stirring it to nobler deeds and higher aspirations. Nothing we do is lost. Each generous sentiment to which we give tongue and life, finds an echo in some eager heart or chamber of the mind, and we know not when, from point of pencil or pen, shall drop some glowing thought to fall, like an angel's tear 'upon the world's cold cheek, and make it burn forever.'"

An Apt Retort.

It is said that the late Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, was strongly opposed to total abstinence, and his side-boards were loaded with brandy, wine, etc. On one occasion Perkins, of the Sons of Temperance, dined with the bishop who, pouring out a glass of wine, desired him to drink with him.

"Can't do it, bishop. 'Wine is a mocker.'"

"Take a glass of brandy, then."

"Can't do it, bishop. 'Strong drink is raging.'"

By this time the bishop, becoming excited, remarked to Perkins, "You will pass the decanter to the gentleman next you!"

"No, bishop I can't do that. 'Woe unto him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips.'"—Cimeter.

Unwomanly Women.

"Long Island negroes who are hesitating whether or not to become professional murderers, will please take notice that the more women they kill the more women will visit them—should they happen to be committed to jail—and the more flowers they will receive. No matter how honest and inoffensive a Long Island negro may be, young ladies will never go to his house to sing to him. If he wishes to be thus honored, he must choke two or three white women, and then he will have all the flowers and hymns and feminine sympathy he can desire. Rugg is to be hanged, ostensibly to teach men not to commit murder. It is a very different lesson that is taught by the silly and unwomanly women who visit him and flatter his love of notice."—Ex.

Democratic County Convention.

The convention was called to order by Chairman Brittle of the Executive Committee, who, after stating the object of the meeting, requested J. R. Jones to act as temporary chairman of the convention, and M. DeJarnette and W. F. Claughton to act as secretaries. After the organization was perfected, these officers were made permanent.

Enrolling of delegates was then had.

On motion, a committee of one from each beat was appointed to confer as to whether it was advisable to nominate a ticket for county offices, also, to select one person from each beat in the county to represent the county in the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions. The following committee was appointed in the order of their beats: H. C. Young, G. W. Pierce, Dr. J. S. Johnson, Sr., W. M. Wilson, K. Wells, J. R. Kemp, W. J. Atchinson, T. D. Parnell.

The following resolutions, offered by A. J. Brooks, were then adopted:

Resolved, 1st. That this convention proceed first to appoint Delegates to the State, Congressional and Senatorial Conventions.

2d. That the Chairman appoint one delegate from each Beat to suggest to the Convention the names of eight Delegates each to the State Congressional and Senatorial Conventions, to consist of one from each Beat.

3d. That during the absence of said committee the convention consider the propriety of nominating the various county officers to-day.

The committee reported the following delegations named in the order of beats:

To the State Convention — H. C. Young, J. P. Allen, William Walker, W. H. Foshee, S. T. Brittle, J. L. Farr, N. W. Foshee, S. D. Keyser.

To the Congressional Convention—Oliver Mullins, John Boyd, D. A. White, H. J. Callen, A. J. Brooks, W. I. Mullins, D. J. Waterworth, Dr. T. E. Callier.

To the Senatorial Convention—W. J. Marcus, Sam Curry, B. T. Raspberry, W. E. Stewart, J. S. Pitts, J. Scott, W. R. Bowline, John Parnell.

The following resolution was offered and adopted:

It is resolved that a County Convention be called to meet at the Court House in Clanton, on Saturday, the 28th day of June, 1884, to nominate county officers, and that each Beat hold an election on Saturday the 21st day of June to elect delegates to said County Convention. That the executive committee be authorized to properly adjust the representation from the different Beats.

The Chilton View was requested to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

After the foregoing resolution it was moved and seconded that the meeting adjourn.

J. R. JONES, chairman.
W. F. CLAUGHTON,
M. DEJARNETTE,
Secretaries.

The Trial of Young Abercrombie.

Judge Clayton arrived in this city on Sunday from Opelika, and left for Eufaula yesterday morning. Consequently he will not open court at Clayton until to-day. The trial of young Abercrombie at Opelika charged with the killing of the city marshal, Hart, some time ago, at which Judge Clayton presided, was suddenly terminated Saturday by the insanity of one of the jurors, Mr. Folk, which caused a mistrial. The prisoner pleaded insanity, and as the proof was overwhelming, Judge Clayton ordered Abercrombie to be sent to the asylum at Tuscaloosa.—Advertiser.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderfully restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

The county convention had almost a full representation of delegates from the different beats, harmony prevailed and considerable interest was manifested in the success of the convention's work.

Next Tuesday is the day for the prohibition election in Beat 1. It is about conceded that the prohibitionists in this county will carry any beat they see fit to call an election in, and we expect them to roll up a good majority in beat one.

Died, in this place, on the 16th inst., Mr. Benjamin Welsh, aged about forty-five years. Mr. Welsh was a quiet, unobtrusive and industrious citizen, and his death causes a vacancy in our midst which it will be difficult to fill.

The Calera boom has exploded. Calera was duped by a set of sharpers. The Sentinel says Calera is having a boom of her own, however, and that the place is steadily and solidly growing through the enterprise and vim of her own citizens. The best plan always.

See the card in another column of the Capital City Hotel, Montgomery. This splendid hotel is in the new wholesale block on Commerce street. It is convenient to business and only a very short distance from the Union depot. Visitors to the city will find it an excellent stopping place.

The notorious negro Robert Pelham has served his sentence at Bivings & Duke's saw mill, and is again in jail. Pelham is the negro who assaulted Col. B. J. Baldwin with brass knucks. He was tried on the charge before the county court and sentenced to sixty days hard labor for the county. He is in jail to await trial upon the heavier charge of assault with intent to kill.

Fishing parties frequent the creeks surrounding Clanton at all hours of the day, but seem to prefer the light of the stars to the rays of old Sol. The scribe went out with a party the other night. The cat-fish that were drawn ashore were numerous, but not a solitary cat would fasten himself on our hook. Nevertheless the mosquitoes were delighted with us, we never saw a more numerous or affectionate lot of mosquitoes together, and after we had lost a half dozen pints of genuine gore, we dropped line and pole and stole back to the dismal sanctum to fish for cats not more.

Verbena Views.

The warm weather and absence of rain have had a telling effect on our dusty roads.

We think Verbena can get up a respectable hat show. Suppose you try it ladies. You would have quite an attractive assortment—hats on the half shell, whole shell and in any style you please. Last, if not least, we mention the modern reproduction of the head covering of our pilgrim fathers.

Ex-Gov. Watts, of Montgomery, honored us with a visit last Sunday.

Politics are beginning to assume some proportions among our sturdy citizens.

We have since learned that the poster referred to, last week, was not an African production, but simply an improvement on the Egyptian hyerogliphics. We are always thankful to have our errors corrected.

Mr. R. L. Thompson, late of Clanton, has been stationed as night operator at this place.

A ladies waiting room, recently fitted up, has been added to the conveniences of our depot.

Mrs. A. P. DeBardeleben has returned from her visit.

Our boys appear to have lost all interest in their base ball club.

The ordinance of Baptism was administered to two new members of the Baptist Church last Sunday by Rev. J. L. Thompson.

BIJOU.

Maplesville Dots.

Crops looking well with the exception of oats.

Cotton chopping fairly begun. Very good stands are reported. Fruit prospects flattering.

Mr. Minge and family, of Faunedale, honored our village with a visit a few days ago, and were the guests of Mr. C. F. Douthit.

Rev. I. U. Wilkes, of Brierfield, will preach here the second Sabbath in June, at 4 o'clock in the evening.

The school here for this session closed last Friday. It is needless to further eulogize Miss Liles as her success in uniting the patrons and giving perfect satisfaction, bespeaks her ability as a teacher. Miss Liles leaves many warm friends in this community, and their consolation is in the hope of her return next session. N.

The Pole Road Locomotive.

The Advertiser of recent date says: A pulling match occurred yesterday between one of Capt. W. E. Cole's pole road locomotives and a twenty-five ton railroad locomotive in which the former was the victor. The pole road engine had just been finished at the Montgomery Iron Works, and to test its power, three cars were coupled to it, and the breaks applied. As this seemed no load a twenty-five ton engine was coupled to the other end of the cars and started in opposite directions. To the astonishment of all present, the pole road locomotive moved off, pulling the engine, cars and all some forty feet without the least difficulty. This locomotive has three or four times the traction force on poles that it has on rails, and an idea may be formed of its power.

After the above named test a track was laid at an incline of 1,500 feet to the mile, to the top of a car, and the locomotive made to load itself, which it did with all ease. This is the second engine of the kind built and goes to the saw mill of Gullahorn & Bro. on the S. & N. road. The tests that have been made rendered perfect satisfaction to Capt. Cole, the inventor, and the Montgomery Iron Works, that will build them.

A Champion Farmer.

ED. VIEW:—We have in our town the champion corn raiser of the county. He was never known previous to this to feed his grey mule on anything but bay leaves, but last year discovered the hidden secret of corn raising on impoverished land and now not only has enough for the gray mule but full twenty bushels for sale. All those in search of information on corn growing can call on J. C. Gibson.

B.

Verbena, Ala., May 21st, 1884.

We learn of a most distressing death which occurred near Mountain Creek, about a week since. It was rumored here that two sisters became involved in a difficulty and one of them was kicked to death by the other. If the account which reaches us is true it is too shocking for publication. We understand that the survivor in the difficulty has been placed in jail at Prattville, and names are withheld until a legal investigation is had.

Mr. W. H. Mills reports crops in the Kincheon neighborhood in especially fine condition. Plenty of rain and outlook promising.

The Calera Boom Exploded.

In our last issue we stated that the company named above had filed their declaration with the probate court of this county, and that as soon as all the preliminary arrangements were perfected it would commence operations at this place. This was the situation when we went to press. The next morning we learned that its bottom had dropped out—that this company that we had heard so much about had vanished into thin air. Disagreement among the Michiganders was assigned as the cause; this people thinks capital was wanting. Whatever it may have been, the fact remains that said company is defunct—died at its birth, and the Michigan capitalists who so dazzled and bewildered our people, with glowing pictures of iron furnaces, palatial buildings, etc., etc., for some weeks past have gone hence and left us alone in our glory.—Calera Sentinel.

The Homicide in Coosa.

The Wetumpka Times gives these particulars of the shooting of Dr. Kendrick, at Nixburg:

Mr. Walter B. Parker killed Dr. Anderson M. Kendrick at Nixburg, Coosa county, late last Saturday evening. From the testimony before the coroner's jury it appears that Mr. K. and Mr. Brake Thomas rode up to Nixburg from Equality, and Thomas and Mr. Leslie Parker got into a quarrel. Kendrick laid his hand on Parker's shoulder and tried to cool him off. Walter Parker ordered K. to take his hands off his brother, threatening otherwise to shoot K. In a short time K. turned to Walter and asked, "what was that he said about shooting," saying if Walter did not mind he (K.) would cut his throat. K. had his knife in his hand open, as it seems he had been whittling. Walter jumped over the counter, picked up a repeating pistol and shot Kendrick three or four times, killing him instantly. Walter Parker has not yet been arrested, though his brother says he will surrender himself so soon as arrangements are made for a preliminary trial. This is a very sad affair, and has plunged two of Coosa's best families into great trouble and deep distress.

Mormon Elders Mobbed.

A dispatch from Western Valley, Miss., to the Times-Democrat says: While a Mormon Elder was waiting at the depot here to-day, for several other elders he was assaulted by unknown persons who emptied buckets of tar on his head. He made his escape. It is reported from Calhoun and other counties that the Mormons are making great headway among the lower classes, and these elders were on their way to a great revival meeting.

GUSSET, SEAM AND BAND.

HOW THE SHOP GIRLS LIVE ON STARVATION WAGES.

A Peep Into One of Their Lowly Homes and a Chat with the Industrious Inmate—Food and Fuel in Small Quantities at Bankrupt Prices—A Sorrowful Side of Life.

[From the New York World.]

"Please sit down and I will answer any questions you wish to ask me, but you will excuse me if I keep on with my work. I must have these done by 3 o'clock or I cannot get my pay this week, and I can hardly afford to wait a week for that," said a pale, wan woman in the top room of one of the largest tenement houses in the city, and it might be said, too, one of the poorest ones. While resolving mentally the most pertinent questions to ask, the reporter glanced about the room which served as a home to this woman, who evidently was superior to such surroundings. It was about ten feet square and had one window opening on a court, and though in the top of the house the light was scarcely sufficient to permit her to see to sew on the buttons she was placing with a mechanical swiftness on a pile of shirts at her feet. A cot bed stood in one corner, which looked clean, but scanty as to clothes and devoid of a pillow. Two chairs, a board nailed against the wall for a shelf, a small old table and a tiny, broken stove completed the furniture. There was no carpet and the cold wind penetrated the room.

"Oh, I am finishing these shirts. I don't make them entirely. There are many women who take shirts this way to finish, perhaps in all somewhere near two hundred. For these I get seven cents a dozen; for some I receive nine and for others 10 cents a dozen. On these I put four stays each, or gussets as some call them, three buttons and one ticket. On the nine-cent ones I put the same number of stays and five buttons and a ticket; on the 10-cent ones I must sew eight buttons, and sew them stronger, and the same number of stays and ticket."

"So for seven cents you sew in forty-eight stays, thirty-six buttons and twelve cards; for nine cents you put forty-eight stays, sixty buttons and twelve cards, and for 10 cents you sew forty-eight stays, ninety-six buttons and twelve cards. Is that all you do?"

"Oh, no; sometimes I make women's calico sacques, for which I get 60 cents a dozen. Those I make on a machine. I have one, which I hire out for 25 cents a week when I have no machine work. I prefer machine work, for somehow it does not seem as if I were working so hard then, and, besides, it isn't so injurious to my eyes, which are growing quite feeble. I shall have to get glasses, and it will take me some time to spare enough money to get a pair.

"About the sacques? Each garment I have to cut and make. I receive an amount of calico and must cut a certain number of sacques out of it. It takes close calculation and there are very few scraps left. There are nine seams in a sacque and a hem all round, besides the collar and sleeves. Eight buttons and button-holes go on each. For these, as I said, I receive five cents apiece, or 60 cents a dozen.

"Oh, yes, indeed, there are branches of female labor quite as extravagantly remunerative. For instance, the woman who rooms with me gets 45 cents a dozen for men's drawers. She sews three seams in each pair, puts on a waistband double stitched, a hem at the bottom and sews on tapes, puts in eyelets at the band and ties a tape in or puts on a buckle and straps, works two button-holes and sews on two buttons. They find the material and thread. She could hardly afford that, you see. She can make about three dozen in two days by working nights. Men, when their buttons fall off, would perhaps not feel so impatient if they knew that one stitch more on each would cost the worker a loaf of bread per week.

"One of the women on this floor works at finishing men's trousers. She gets twelve cents a pair. To finish them she puts in buckram, hems them, sets a waistband on each pair and finishes off four pockets and sews twelve buttons. This must be done by hand, and an experienced person can finish from twelve to sixteen pairs a week.

"Another one makes linen dusters, for which she gets eight cents a piece. The smartest worker with a machine cannot finish more than three a day. Her room-mate gets 30 cents a dozen for making woolen overshirts with collars, bands and bosoms. With all her strength and industry she cannot finish more than one dozen per day. A widow who hires bed-space from them earns 30 to 35 cents a day making button-holes. Button-hole machines are very high and it will be long before machine-made button-holes will supersede the work of hands. You think these are starvation prices, but worse than this is the price paid for making women's cloaks.

"I know a woman who makes them—and nicely, too—who only gets $2.50 for eighteen, finished and ready for sale. You would like to know how we all live on such sums. It is a problem, but we do, after a fashion, as you see. I have a friend who rooms with me, and together we pay $6 a month for this room. Nearly all of us have to room with one or more other women to make ends meet. Many women who work at these peculiar industries have families, and generally one or more of them earns something, which of course helps along. Those who work like I do must devote their entire energy to it and cannot spare time to clean and scrub or scarcely cook their food. We have to buy our food in the very smallest quantities and nor deal by the bushel, and we pay for it at the rate of about $14a ton.

"As to the groceries—well, I think if Vanderbilt had to pay for all the food used in his house at the same rate as we would be bankrupt in a year, for the smaller you subdivide the articles the more they cost. For instance, a pound of oatmeal is six cents, a half-pound costs you four; a pint of beans is eight cents, while a quart costs twelve.

"What do we eat? Oh, dear, not much, not enough to give one the gout, I assure you. I earn $2.40 and the rent of my machine brings it up to $2.65. Out of this I pay 75 cents for rent and 40 cents for coal and wood, which leaves me $1.50 for food, clothes, medicine, car-fare, theatre tickets and a box at the opera. Seriously, though, I buy a quarter of a pound of tea, a half-pound of sugar, one pound oatmeal, one pint of beans, two ten-cent loaves of bread, one soupbone and perhaps it costs a couple of cents a week for salt, pepper and herbs for my soup. I buy a quarter of a pound of butter a week and sometimes I get a little milk for my tea. The things I have enumerated generally form my bill of fare for a week. I take tea and bread for breakfast, and have beef soup for two days from one bone and soup two days from the beans. I have tea and bread for supper. I forgot to say that I buy a half a pound of liver for Sunday, and a half a pound of bacon some other day. Once in a while I buy a quart of potatoes, which I bake in place of the liver. The oatmeal, I forgot to mention, I cook and eat cold for breakfast, for I cannot work hard all day without something more nourishing than tea and bread. I spend about $1.25 for food, and it cost me 4 cents a week for kerosene. I must save and pinch very closely to be able to buy shoes and clothes. Only that I had some I don't know what I should do. I don't know how the other women get along. Sometimes four and even six club together and pay room rent, and they say they find it costs less for food; but I am not sure about that. I never waste a particle of food, and I think if I had it I could even eat more than I do; and I doubt if they get it cheaper than I do.

"It is indeed a hard life. You will find among those who do what is called 'slop work' more decayed gentlewomen than those who have been born to poverty, for those who were born of poor parents are generally put to learn trades, which, though none too well paid, still afford a better living. Those who were never obliged to learn a trade in youth, when reverses came are only able to do such work as this. You may be sure that I tried to do better, yet you see me here, glad when I have health and work. One of the greatest trials of this kind of a life is that one is almost obliged to live in dirt, for the woman who works for her very bread must not leave that work for a minute. Sunday I generally employ cleaning up my room, mending my clothes and those of a poor woman living two flights down, who washes mine in exchange. I don't go to church. The washerwoman I mention earns a dollar and a half a day four days in the week, besides which she gets a good many little presents from the people where she works and her meals. She is strong and well. I wish I could do washing.

"Did I ever try for any other work but this?

"For one year I tried to get a position as governess, housekeeper, copyist in a store, and received only insult for my advertisements. I then began answering advertisements, as my money was all gone. I still found no honest position. I don't say honorable, for I only asked for honest employment. I was too old for a 'saleslady,' too unattractive to draw custom, and too 'particular' I was told on two occasions when I sought employment as housekeeper, and asked the men about their families and refused to go in the capacity they offered. I have been a book agent, and prefer this life. Oh, it was not without a long, hard fight against fate that I drifted into this slave's life, and worse, for slaves at least had food and shelter and care when sick; but here I am, and I only form one out of an army who work as I do. I don't complain. I ought to be content, for I am a capitalist in a small way, as I own a sewing-machine. A firm for whom I worked at making men's underwear sold it to me on instalments to be paid for in work. It was a second-hand machine, and I worked for it and paid $45. It kept me bound to them for three years, to earn my bread and pay for that."

Spreading the Diphtheria.

It may be remembered that a good deal of prominence was given last fall in the papers to the occurrence of diphtheria in a family in Amsterdam, N. Y. Two children died at intervals of several months, and a third was taken sick. The Board of Health appointed a committee to investigate, which examined the house and its surroundings and obtained a statement from the attending physician. They have recently made their report, finding that there were no bad conditions existing in or about the house sufficient to explain the appearance of the disease, and they conclude that it came from a cat which was fondled by the child which first fell ill. This cat was found at the time to have a swollen throat and to be suffering from a discharge from mouth and nostrils. It died a few days afterward. Three days after the death of the cat the child fell sick with malignant diphtheria and died in about a week. During its illness it played with a doll, which was afterward given to a younger child, as it was supposed to have been properly fumigated with sulphur fumes. This child, shortly after being allowed to play with the doll, also fell ill of diphtheria, and died. The third child also played with the doll and fell ill, but recovered. The Board of Health, therefore, traces the reappearance of the disease in the family, after the death of the first child, to the doll.—Sanitary Engineer.

The Boy and His Mother.

A young fellow writes as follows "What do you think of a young lady while in the company of a dude masher, remarking of an old schoolmate of hers, 'that he is a good boy, but tied to his old mother's apron strings, and is of no good on earth.' Will not the boy come out ahead if he supports and cares for the mother?" Come out ahead? Well, of course he will. A girl who would make such a remark is not worthy to blacken the shoes of a boy who is kind to his old mother. Such a girl has got no more heart in her than a turnip. It is such girls as this one that we hear of playing the piano while the mother is mending her stockings, or washing her white clothes. It is such a girl that tells her mother to mind her own business, when the old lady advises her not to stay out more than two or three hours after midnight with a dude. The meanest men in the world are those who have allowed themselves to drift away from their mothers and forget all about them. The best and bravest men in the world are those who have never been so proud as when doing something pleasant for the kind old mother. The most heartless thing in the world is for a person to make such a remark as that quoted above about a young man who is proud of his mother, and loves her so that a tear in her eye is like a drop of melted lead on his heart. No boy need ever be ashamed to be called his mother's boy, and no person with a soul to save will ever make trifling remarks on o sacred a matter as the love of a son for a good mother.—Peck's Sun.

Good Morning.

Don't forget to say good morning! Say it to your parents, your brothers and your sisters, your schoolmates, your teacher—and say it cheerfully and with a smile; it will do your friend good. There's a kind of inspiration in every "good morning" heartily and smilingly spoken, that helps to make hope fresher and work lighter. It seems really to make the morning good, and to be a prophecy of a good day to come after it. And if this be true of the "good morning," it is also true of all kind, heartsome greetings. They cheer the discouraged, rest the tired one, and somehow make the wheels of life run smoothly. Let no morning pass that you do not help to brighten by your smiles and cheerful words.

WRECKED NEAR SAMBRO.

The White Star Steamer Atlantic and Other Vessels Lost on the Rainy Coast.

The loss of the Steinmann with over 100 souls on Sambro ledge recalls the terrible disaster to the White Star steamer Atlantic on Meagher's Rock, near Cape Prospect, twenty-two miles west of Halifax. In this wreck, which occurred on March 31, 1873, 560 lives were lost out of a total of 978. The Atlantic sailed from Liverpool on the 20th of March. During the first part of the passage favorable weather and fair winds were experienced. On the 24th, 25th and 26th the ship fell in with heavy southwest and westerly gales, which blew so violently that only about one hundred miles a day were made. On the 31st of March the engineer reported to the captain that his stock of coal had diminished to about one hundred and twenty-seven tons. The Atlantic was then four hundred miles to the eastward of Sandy Hook, with the wind southwest, a high westerly swell and a falling barometer.

The ship was steaming at the rate of eight knots an hour. The captain considered the risk too great to push on, as he feared he might be, in the event of a gale, shut out from any port of supply. Under the circumstances, he decided to make for Halifax. At one p. m. he calculated that Sambro Island was distant 170 miles. At midnight the ship was, according to the estimate of the captain, forty-eight miles south of Sambro. The captain then went below, leaving orders that he should be called at three o'clock, when he intended to put the ship's head to the southward and await daylight. The second and fourth mates were in charge.

At about three o'clock the man on the lookout reported breakers ahead, but before the engines could be stopped the vessel had struck heavily on the rocks. She began to labor heavily, and immense breakers swept the decks. Before the boats could be cleared the ship heeled over to port, rendering the starboard boats useless. Then ensued a scene of heartrending horror. The decks were thronged by the helpless passengers, who sought in vain for succor. Men, women and children clung together in groups in the pitchy darkness, which was illuminated every now and then by the glare of a rocket sent up for assistance. Soon the helpless beings on the deck began to be swept off by the waves, the storm increasing in intensity.

About two hundred persons were crushed to death by the foreboom, which broke loose from its lashings and dashed to pieces all who had gathered on the house on deck. Every succeeding wave washed off its victims. The officers of the ship tried to get the passengers into the rigging and outside of the rails forward, where there was the least danger, the ship being highest there and less exposed to the waves. The women behaved heroically. No cry was heard from them as they perished. Not a woman or child was saved from the wreck. All who landed were rescued by a life line from on shore and by boats manned by the hardy and gallant fishermen of the locality.

Warm for the Soldiers.

The heat which has destroyed so many of Gen. Graham's horses and camels, and is now prostrating his soldiers likewise, shows the folly of employing British instead of Hindu troops in desert warfare. At the same time it must be remembered that the sun of the tropics frequently makes fearful havoc among transport beasts while striking down comparatively few men, and that of the men thus struck down a very small proportion actually die. The garrison of Cawnpore, in June, 1857, though encamped for 21 days on an open plain, without any shelter from a heat which seldom fell below 138, lost by the sun, by disease, and by the enemy's fire only 12 lives a day. Even more remarkable was the experience of one of the five Russian columns directed against Khiva in 1873. During its march across the Kara-Koum Desert from the Caspian seaboard to Orta-Kuyn—where it was forced to turn back—it encountered a heat varying from 125 to 139, and lost upward of 4,800 horses and camels. But although the troops were more than once over two days without water, an officer attached to the expedition has recorded that of the many men who fell out of their ranks only four actually died.

An Apprentice Disciplined.

There was a very unusual proceeding in the Court of Quarter Sessions, in Philadelphia, before Judge Arnold. Joseph Girhardt, an apprentice to William Clark, a morocco manufacturer, was arraigned on a charge of neglecting his duties. Mr. Clark testified that the boy had by his neglect permitted $30 worth of skins to become spoiled. The judge said he was satisfied from the testimony that the boy had been negligent. "It is a pity," he said, "that the old system of apprenticeship has gone nearly out of use. Because of that fact we are depending for our skilled labor upon foreign countries. Wherever the apprenticeship system exists it ought to be carried out according to the law governing it." He sent the boy to prison for 24 hours. The apprentice was confined in that part of the county jail in which witnesses under restraint are detained.

THEY ARE HAVING TROUBLE IN TEXAS over a man who has just received two sentences, one of fifty years' imprisonment, and the other to be hanged. They want to hang him now, but the man claims that he ought to serve his term first, as that sentence was pronounced prior to the one of hanging.

"WILL there be a hop to-night?" asked a summer sojourner of another who had loved the stock market "not wisely, but too well." "I don't know about the hop, but there will be a skip if I can get my trunk out," was the reply.

"THE THIRD HOUSE."

A Good and Bad Reputation—The Relative Significance of a Close Observer of its Workings During a Long Residence at Washington.

(Correspondence Rochester Democrat.)

No city upon the American continent has a larger floating population than Washington. It is estimated that during the sessions of Congress twenty-five thousand people, whose homes are in various parts of this and other countries, make this city their place of residence. Some come here, attracted by the advantages the city offers for making the acquaintance of public men; others have various claims which they wish to press at, while the great majority gather here, as the crows flock to the carrion, for the sole purpose of getting a morsel at the public crib. The latter class, as a general thing, originate the many schemes which terminate in vicious bills, all of which are either directed at the public treasury, or toward that revenue which the back-mailing of corporations or private enterprises may bring.

While walking down Pennsylvania avenue the other day I met Mr. William M. Ashley, formerly of your city, whose long residence here has made him unusually well acquainted with the operations of the lobby.

Having made my wants in this particular direction known, in answer to an interrogative, Mr. Ashley said:

"Yes, during my residence here I have become well acquainted with the workings of the 'Third House,' as it is termed, and could tell you of numerous jobs, which, like the 'Heathen Chinee,' are peculiar."

"You do not regard the lobby, as a body, vicious, do you?"

"Not necessarily so; there are good and bad men comprising that body; yet there have been times when it must be admitted that the combined power of the 'Third House' has overridden the will of the people. The bad influence of the lobby can be seen in the numerous blood bills that are introduced at every session."

"But how can these be discovered?"

"Easily enough, to the person who has made the thing a study. I can detect them at a glance."

"Tell me, to what bills do you refer?"

"Well, take the annual gas bills, for instance. They are introduced for the purpose of bleeding the Washington Gaslight company. They usually result in an investigating committee which never amounts to anything more than a draft upon the public treasury for the expenses of the investigation. Another squeeze is the abattoir bills, as they are called. These, of course, are fought by the butchers and marketmen. The first attempt to force a bill of this description was in 1877, when a prominent Washington politician offered a fabulous sum for the franchise."

"Anything else in this line that you think of, Mr. Ashley?"

"Yes, there's the job to reclaim the Potomac flats, which, had it become a law, would have resulted in an enormous steal. The work is now being done by the government itself, and will rid the place of that malarial atmosphere of which we hear so much outside the city."

"During your residence here have you experienced the bad results of living in this climate?"

"Well, while I have not at all times enjoyed good health, I am certain that the difficulty which aid me up so long was not malarial. It was something that had troubled me for years. A shooting, stinging pain that at times attacked different parts of my body. One day my right arm and leg would torture me with pain, there would be great redness, heat and swelling of the parts; and perhaps the next day the left arm and leg would be similarly affected. Then again it would locate in some particular part of my body and produce a tenderness which would well nigh drive me frantic. There would be weeks at a time that I would be afflicted with an intermitting kind of pain that would come on every afternoon and leave me comparatively free from suffering during the balance of the twenty-four hours. Then I would have terrible paroxysms of pain coming on at any time during the day or night when I would be obliged to lie upon my back for hours and keep as motionless as possible. Every time I attempted to move a chilly sensation would pass over my body, or I would faint from hot flashes. I suffered from a spasmodic contraction of the muscles and a soreness of the back and bowels, and even my eyeballs become sore and distressed me greatly whenever I wiped my face. I became ill-tempered, peevish, fretful, irritable and desperately despondent."

"Of course you consulted the doctors regarding your difficulty?"

"Consulted them! well, I should say I did. Some told me I had neuralgia; others that I had inflammatory rheumatism, for which there was no cure, that I would be afflicted all my life, and that time alone would mitigate my sufferings."

"But didn't they try to relieve your miseries?" "Yes, they vomited and physicked me, blistered and bled me, sweat, steamed and everything but trace me, but without avail."

"But how did you finally recover?"

"I had a friend living in Michigan who had been afflicted in a similar way and had been cured. He wrote me regarding his recovery, and advised me to try the remedy which cured him. I procured a bottle and commenced its use, taking a tablespoonful after each meal and at bed time. I had used it about a week when I noticed a decrease of the soreness of the joints and a general feeling of relief. I persevered in its use, and finally got so I could move around without limping, when I told my friends that it was Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure that had put me on my feet."

"And do you regard your cure as permanent?"

"Certainly, I haven't been so well in years as I am now, and although I have been subjected to frequent and severe changes of weather this winter, I have not felt the first intimation of the return of my rheumatic trouble."

"Do you object to the publication of this interview, Mr. Ashley?"

"Not at all, sir. I look upon it as a duty I owe my fellow creatures to alleviate their sufferings so far as I am able, and any communication regarding my symptoms and cure that may be sent to me at 508 Maine avenue, will receive prompt and careful attention."

"Judging from your recital, Mr. Ashley, there must be wonderful curative properties about this medicine."

"Indeed, there is, sir, for no man suffered more nor longer than I did before this remedy gave me relief."

"To go back to the original subject, Mr. Ashley. I suppose you see the same familiar faces about the lobby session after session?"

"No, not so much as you might think. New faces are constantly seen and old ones disappear. The strain upon lobbyists is necessarily very great, and when you add to this the demoralizing effect of late hours and intemperate habits and the fact that they are after found out in their steals, their disappearance can easily be accounted for."

"What proportion of these blood-bills are successful?"

"A very small percentage, sir. Notwithstanding the power and influence of the lobby, but few of these vicious measures pass. Were they successful it would be a sad commentary upon our system of government, and would virtually annihilate one branch of it. The great majority of them are either reported adversely or smothered in committee by the watchfulness and loyalty of our Congressmen. J. E. D.

The Press.

Reporter—So far as you know, then, you do not propose to start an evening paper here?

Mr. Bromley—Young man, do you know that newspapers are now sold for two cents?

"Yes."

"And that Guilford clams bring five cents?"

"I was not aware of that."

"They do. And that being the case, why should anybody want to start a daily paper when by digging clams he can get more money with less work."—New Haven News.

THE late Dr. John B. Wood once said: "If you should see a gaunt yellow dog running down Broadway with an old tin coffee-pot tied to his tail, and yelping at every bound, it wouldn't be worth a line in the paper. But if the dog should walk quietly down Broadway with a coffee pot tied to his tail it would be worth a column."

"I HAVE a little poem for sale," he said to the editor of a Sunday paper. "The price is $5."

The editor looked at the manuscript and remarked: "Don't want it at any price; it's too long."

The next day the poet returned with the same poem, divided into four parts.

"I have a few poems I would be glad to sell you. The price is $5 apiece."

The editor looked at them for a moment and then said:

"All right; they are just the proper length; I'll take 'em all."

A BOSTON clergyman, lately alluding in his pulpit to the subject of family government, remarked that it is often said "that nowadays there is no such thing as family government. But it's false, all false! There is just as much family government now as ever there was—just as much as in the days of our fathers and grandfathers. The only difference is that then the old folks did the governing, now it is done by the young ones!"

Walk More, and Sleep Soundly.

Mr. John W. Cole, Principal of the Gale School, Troy, N. Y., writes us:

TROY, N. Y., April 7, 1883.

"Having been afflicted for several years past with illness, the cause of which was unknown to me for a long time, and my continued disability getting to be of so serious and distressing a character as to cause great anxiety with my family and friends, I became satisfied upon close investigation that the cause of my sickness was the diseased condition of my kidneys and liver. At this time by accident a friend who had similar symptoms to mine, informed me of the great improvement in his health by taking Hunt's Remedy, and persuaded me to try it. I immediately commenced taking it, and from the first bottle began to improve, and its continued use affords very encouraging results. I can sleep soundly, walk better, am free from pains, and the severe attacks of headache from which I suffered so much have disappeared, and I cheerfully recommend Hunt's Remedy for all purposes which it is advertised. I will add in closing that my wife has used it very successfully for preventing the attacks of sick headache with which she had been afflicted from youth."

Almost Disheartened.

A prominent citizen sends us the following statement:

"For several years I have been very seriously afflicted with a severe pain in the back, which I long supposed to be lumbago or rheumatism of the back. More recently the pains had become more severe, so much so that it was with difficulty that I was able to get out of bed in the morning. I had tried various remedies without any apparent relief. By the earnest solicitation of a friend I commenced taking Hunt's Remedy, about three weeks ago, and its instantaneous benefits are wonderful, for I have had no pains in my back since taking the first three doses; and am relieved from the pains, aches and exhaustive weakness, the painful symptoms that usually accompany disease of the kidneys. And I confidently expect to be completely and permanently cured by the use of it. I most cheerfully recommend Hunt's Remedy to all who are afflicted with any kidney or liver disease.

DRAWN BLANK.

The passionate grief beside the dying bed;
The passionate longing for the vanished bliss;
The passionate yearning for the glory fled;
Of each we ask, "Can life bear worse than this?"
Aye—answer weary lips and tired eyes,
To violent sorrows solace Nature grants;
Worse than the world's supremest agonies
Are all its empty blanks—its hopeless wants

When vivid lightnings flame and thunders crash,
When the fierce winds lash the fierce sea to storm,
We see the beacons by the lurid flash,
The tossing spray-clouds glittering rainbow form;
But when below the sullen drip of rain
The waters sob along the hollow shore,
'Tis hard to think the sun can shine again,
The dull waves gleam to living light once more.

When time saps slowly strength and hope away,
And the black gulf yawns by the lonely path,
When the dumb night creeps on the empty day,
And the one clew of all is held by death,
Look not to failed joy or lingering love
To wake the powers youth and faith have given;
Take patiently the lot we all must prove,
Till the great bar swings back and shows us —heaven.

A Doctor's Boy.

BY EDMUND LYONS.

Years flew over both of our heads before I called him by any other name than the Doctor's Boy. The village knew that he was a foundling, because he had been left at the door of old Dr. Hart's house one cold Christmas-eve, but it was divided in opinion as to whether he was a bad boy or a good one. Some thought he was the latter, some the former. I was perfectly satisfied that he was a wretchedly iniquitous youth, and I told him so. He burst into tears, and said I would change my opinion of him some day.

But at first he certainly gave me no reason to do so. He compounded for me a dose once to cure a headache (for Dr. Hart was not above keeping drugs and making up his own prescriptions) that brought me to death's door, and the old doctor was put to his wits' end to cure me. But the Boy went to my mother and told her that it was his fixed intention to become a great doctor and chemist, and I had given him his first opportunity to test his knowledge of medicine. He had given me the wrong drug, he acknowledged; but it was all in the interest of science, and he promised never to do so any more. So my mother forgave him, and persuaded Dr. Hart to retain him in his service.

It certainly was not on account of the Boy's good looks that his first misadventure resulted harmlessly to him. He was an angular Boy. He was a red-haired Boy. He was a freckled Boy. But he was a frank Boy (at least my mother said so), and for two years more he was allowed to go about the village distributing the doctor's nostrums, and making himself, as I thought, very objectionable.

Dr. Hart had no particular liking for the Boy. He said the Boy was a Christmas gift, and, like all such presents, called for something in return. Thus he had been obliged to board and clothe the lad for seventeen years, and he always protested that he was not worth the outlay. Still, those who knew the doctor best were well assured of the fact that if the Boy had not earned his board, clothing, and lodging he would not have received them. He was called, in later years, Ebenezer Dorking, though what right he had to that name nobody in the village knew.

At last the Doctor's Boy disappeared. He stole quietly away in the night-time, leaving not a line of writing behind him to say where he had gone; so Mrs. Hart suggested that he had robbed the till in the drug-store. A search was at once made, and the fact was developed that not only had no money been taken from the drawer, but that a new crisp five-dollar bill had been added to its contents! There seemed to be no doubt that the Doctor's Boy had placed it there, and the matter was a nine days' wonder for the village. Then the doctor hired another boy, who interested nobody, and he was soon discharged.

I suppose it was due to the subject-matter of conversation furnished by the Boy's departure that I found myself more frequently than before in the doctor's sitting-room. Agnes Hart was a beautiful girl, about sixteen years of age, and she laughed so merrily at my tales of the eccentricities of the Boy that I am afraid I exaggerated them a little; but by degrees the recollection of the fugitive seemed to pass out of our lives, and when, four years later, a torrent of war swept over the country, I was not thinking of the Doctor's Boy when I took Agnes Hart's hand to say good-by before going to the front; but I was thinking very tenderly of Agnes herself, and I believe she was thinking in much the same strain of me. A hundred times during the past two years I had been on the verge of asking her the momentous question, but had decided to wait until my position in the world was better assured. And now that the country in her extremity was calling for the best services of her sons, would it have been fair to ask a simple girl to bind herself, even by an engagement, to one who might never return to claim her pledge? I thought not; but as I watched her face when we were parting, and imagined I saw what I longed for written there, I determined to ask her to be my wife when the war was over.

Oh, the wretched years of strife that followed! I thought they would never end. But at last the closing scenes had come, and the good fortune that had followed me through a score of engagements, bearing me unharmed while others went down by thousands, forsook me in a measure at last. I was hit by a spent ball on the knee, and a moment afterward ridden over by the charging cavalry.

"Your case is not a very serious one," said the doctor, as he bent over me while I lay that night on a blanket on the field, where the hospital tents had not yet been erected. "There are others here more in need of my services—this boy beside you, for instance; I must attend to him. He seems to be badly hurt. Let me examine you, my lad."

"Oh, there is not much the matter with me, sir," said the lad. "I was hit in the side at the last fire; but it is only a trifling wound. You see, I was a doctor's boy before I joined the army, and I know something about such things."

"Indeed!" said the doctor, smiling. "Well, we ought to be good friends. I was a doctor's boy myself before I became a doctor. But let me look at your wound. Phew! this is no trifle. The sooner we get you under cover the better. You are in for a siege of a couple of months of it at least, my lad."

The boy was very much disheartened at this intelligence; and the next morning, when we were all under canvas, the doctor, having finished his immediate duties, sat by his bedside, and I heard him tell his patient how when he was a doctor's boy he had not learned much of medicine; and how in making an experiment he had nearly dosed to death a boy a little older than himself. When he was about to leave the tent I said: "Doctor, I am the boy whom you nearly dosed to death. What have you been doing through all these years?"

I had recognized him on the preceding night, but he had not known me, and he was astounded when I accosted him. He had certainly improved both in appearance and manners, and I found afterward that he was a great favorite with the command to which he was attached. We soon became very good friends—far better, indeed, than we had ever been in the old days when I so candidly expressed my opinion of him. His success was due simply to common-sense and industry. On leaving Dr. Hart's service he had hired himself to another doctor, who gave him fairer play than his former principal, and he was enabled to study medicine, attend the necessary lectures, and finally to obtain his diploma.

At last I asked him why he had left the five-dollar bill in the drawer when he was leaving. He laughed.

"It was the only money," he said, "that Dr. Hart ever gave me. He handed it to me, grudgingly enough, about a year before I left, and I never changed it. You will think it, perhaps, a strange sentiment for a doctor's boy; but when I was running away without giving him any notice, I thought I had forfeited all claim to compensation for my services; so I returned his money. By-the-way, how is the old doctor now?"

I had heard of Dr. Hart since I left the village, and I was able to give Dr. Dorking (for so he was called) a good deal of information about him, and, with the rest, I told him that he was anxious to sell his practice.

"Oh, indeed," said Dorking, quietly. "Then I think I will go and buy it." And then, in answer to my look of surprise, he added: "I have saved some money, and I don't see how I can employ it better than in settling down in the old village."

As the weeks went past, my wound did not improve, and Dorking was often with me. The final scenes of the war closed without our presence. In the conversations we had I suppose I told him enough to give him some inkling of my old affection for Agnes Hart, for I noticed that as I spoke of her he grew very thoughtful, and looked furtively at me. My love, perhaps, was not very deep, but it was my first love, and did not easily die. As I lay on my couch, tossing at times from side to side, muttering in a low fever, I saw always that sweet young face before me, and in the days of my convalescence I resolved, as soon as I could travel, to start for the old village and ask her to be my wife.

At last Dr. Dorking left me, going back, he said, to try to secure Dr. Hart's practice, and I passed three very dreary weeks alone. All sorts of misgivings troubled me. Oh, why had I not cast sentiment to the winds, and asked Agnes for the promise of her hand before I joined the army?

It did not take me long to reach the village after I had once started, and my heart was beating very fast as I stood before the old doctor's house. The honeysuckles still twined around the posts at each side of the door, and the four years that had passed since I was there last did not seem to have made much change in the quiet old homestead. The plate on the door bearing the words of "Doctor Hart," was perhaps a little rustier than formerly, but that was all.

The servant who admitted me ushered me into the front parlor with a "Hem! Captain Douglas!" and I saw that there were two persons in the room. Now I am not particularly quick of apprehension, but I knew precisely the situation between those two the moment I entered. Agnes rose, while her companion, who was seated very close to her, remained in his chair, and the blushes that flew to the fair face of my old sweetheart were clearly not for me.

"You see, Douglas," said Dorking, half an hour later, "Agnes had promised to be my wife long before I left the doctor's house. I could never have offered her a home had I remained here, and that was the reason I ran away. She has known all my movements, for we have corresponded regularly ever since."

So it was just as well that I had not proposed for Agnes before the fighting began. Even then the Doctor's Boy had won the doctor's daughter.—Harper's Bazar

Steamed or Cooked Food, Profitable.

Mr. B. J. Stone, Westboro, Mass., has for twelve years fed steamed food to his herd of forty-five animals, from early fall until pasturing time the following spring. He has a twelve-horse power boiler in the basement of an L adjoining the barn, over which is a six-horse power-engine, a plunge pump that raises water into the boiler, and a tank near the steam box and mixing trough. In the story above there is a large power cutter, that cuts all the corn-fodder, straw, and second quality of hay used. It is cut into one inch lengths. To three hundred lbs. of this cut fodder, one hundred lbs. of grain, four qts. of salt, and enough water to moisten it are added, and mixed in lots of eighty lbs. each to insure thorough mixing. This provender is pitched into the steam-box, which holds enough for one day's feeding. The first feeding is at seven p. m., the second at seven the following morning. At noon the animals are watered, then fed one hundred and twenty-five lbs. best quality of dry hay. The water which settles under the false bottom of the steam-box, from about eighty gallons used at a steaming, is converted into a hay tea. This is mixed with sufficient wheat bran to make a mash, and is fed to milch cows and young calves. This food being well seasoned, is very palatable, readily eaten, and quickly digested. The warm food, together with the warm stable, keep up the animal heat, and a large flow of milk is the result. The cause of so many failures in steaming food is, in part, due to not using any grain, and allowing the steam to come in contact with the feed direct from the boiler. Here the steam is let into the bottom of the steam-box, and softens the whole mass. The cooked grain is taken into the stomach of the animal, masticated with the cud, and nearly all of its nutriment thereby extracted. Below is an estimate of the daily cost per head. One-half of the fuel consumed, has been deducted and charged to the house, as this same boiler supplies steam, and heats sixteen rooms.

Checked Too Much.

At Macon I became acquainted with a commercial tourist. He toured for a Philadelphia harness house, and he had two trunks. As soon as I found that he had two trunks I discovered why he came up to me in the reading-room of the hotel, reached out the friendly hand, and said that he had carried my photograph next to his heart for the last seven years. He wanted me to check one of the trunks on my ticket as we went up to Atlanta, and thus save him expense on extra baggage.

Well, I agreed. It is seldom that I try to beat a railroad, but one must do something for his fellow-man now and then in this up-hill road through life. It so happened that I had a pass around to Montgomery via Atlanta, and I handed it to the baggage-checker without a thought of what might follow. As a consequence, while the harness-house tourist dropped off at Atlanta with tears in his eyes for my disinterestedness, only one of his trunks dropped off with him. The other continued the ride with me for 150 miles, and after considerable telegraphing it went back to Atlanta by express. Just how much it cost him to fall in love with me I don't know, but I assure him on my honor that whenever I can go out of my way again to oblige him I shall cheerfully do so.

He Quit It.

One day a gentleman addicted to hard drinking was seated in the smoking-room of an English hotel, when a dog walked in. The drinker gave a violent start and shrank back in his chair, upon which a waiter whispered to him reassuringly, "Don't be afraid, sir; it's a real one." This story was related to Dr. Farrar, and gave him, it is said, an utter loathing for strong drinks which can destroy the mind and convert a man into a paltry cur. It need scarcely be said that the drinker in the smoking-room was afflicted with delirium tremens.

JAY GOULD IS SAID to be a much happier man than Mr. Vanderbilt. As the latter is worth $200,000,000 and the former only $100,000,000, it can be easily seen, says the Evening Call, that wealth alone does not constitute happiness.

DURING THE PAST TEN years Uncle Sam expended nearly $70,000,000 in caring for the Indians. The total number of Indians attached to agencies is only 246,000, and of these 60,000 in Indian Territory, 7,700 in Wisconsin, and 5,000 in New York are supposed to be at least partially self-supporting.

THE BLUE RIDGE OF West Virginia is believed by the State Geologist to contain a slumbering volcano. There is one place of about an acre in extent where the ground never freezes and the snow always melts. Vegetation is always a month in advance of the season. The volcano is believed to be below this spot.

A New Reason.

The temperance question has been so thoroughly threshed out of late that it scarcely seems possible to find a new argument on the one side or the other. But a certain Dr. Troth, of Perth, Scotland, recently delivered a lecture in which he advances some exceedingly original propositions:

"The drinking of alcoholic beverages is a necessary evil, and is not likely ever to be discontinued. It is like cholera, plague, or war—one of the wise dispensations of Providence for preventing an undue increase of mankind. It prevents the accumulation of all the property of the nation in the hands of a few * * * By its means the son scatters the savings of his father's lifetime in a few months, enabling another man to fill his position, creates a class of drunken tradesmen to neglect their business, so that energetic men may succeed where they fail * * * In short, it benefits directly or indirectly everybody but those who drink it, and if they are fools enough to sacrifice themselves and their families for the good of the sober and industrious, why should we interfere with them?"

There is, says the Hour, really a certain amount of sound sense in the Malthusian selfishness of this ingenious doctor.

WHEN a man and his wife engaged in a debate, the other night, and the dog got up and scratched to be let out of the room, they contended it was time to stop the discussion.

Over a Coffin-Lid.

"She—was—a—good—wife—to—me. A good wife, God bless her!"

The words were spoken in trembling accents over a coffin-lid. The woman asleep there had borne the heat and burden of life's long day, and no one had ever heard her murmur; her hand was quick to reach out in a helping grasp to those who fell by the wayside, and her feet were swift on errands of mercy; the heart of her husband had trusted in her; he had left her to long hours of solitude, while he amused himself in scenes in which she had no part. When boon companions deserted him when fickle affection selfishly departed, when pleasure palled, he went home and found her waiting for him.

"Come from your long, long roving,
On life's sea so bleak and rough,
Come to me tender and loving
And I shall be blest enough."

That had been her love-song—always on her lips or in her heart. Children had been born to them. She had reared them almost alone—they were gone! Her hand had led them to the uttermost edge of the morning that has no noon. Then she had comforted him, and sent him out strong and whole-hearted while she stayed at home and—cried. What can a woman do but cry?—and trust?

Well, she is at rest now. But she could not die until he had promised to "bear up," not to fret, but to remember how happy they had been. They? Yes, it is even so. For she was blest in giving, and he in receiving. It was an equal partnership after all!

"She—was—a—good—wife—to—me."

Oh, man! man! Why not have told her so, when her ears were not dulled by death? Why wait to say these words over a coffin wherein lies a wasted, weary, gray-haired woman, whose eyes have so long held that pathetic story of loss and suffering and patient yearning, which so many women's eyes reveal—to those who read. Why not have made the wilderness in her heart blossom like the rose with the prodigality of your love? Now you would give worlds—were they yours to give—to see the tears of joy your words would have once caused, bejeweling the closed windows of her soul. It is too late.

And smiles for the sometime guest—

The Better Man.

There must have been ten of us sitting on our trunks in a dismal passenger station in Arkansas, waiting for the inevitable night train. Some of the drummers tried to tell funny stories, but it was no go, and those who were not nodding and dozing were mad enough to fight, when a negro came in and flung a lot of wet coal on the fire, extinguishing the little we had been shivering over.

"See here, you infernal nigger, you ought to be shot!" growled a man in the county map business.

"Who's a 'fernal nigger?"

"You are!"

"Better look out, white man! I'm a better man than you is!"

The prospect of another civil war woke everybody up in a second, and it didn't seem as if the clock had ticked fifteen times before the map man had his coat and vest off and his ears working for business.

"What you gwine to do, sah?" asked the negro as he stood gazing at him.

"I'm going to see who is the best man! Boys, look out for splinters!"

"Hole on, sah! Hole on, sah!" called the other. "Ize de bettah man, an' I kin prove it! See heah, sah!"

He pulled from the pocket of his old coat a fair-sized cocoanut, the bark of which was highly polished up, and opened his mouth and tossed the nut into the cavity, rattled it around over his back teeth and then dropped it into his hand with the remark:

"White man, come to taw! If you am de bettah man let's see you circumlocute dat cokernut aroun' in your mouf like I did!"

The proposed bloody struggle ended right there. The map man put on his garments, the whole crowd rose up, and during the next twenty minutes that "nigger" scooped in ninety-five cents by rattling that cocoanut and adding to it any bunches of keys or pocket-knives the boys could hunt up and hand over.

Pay of Officers.

Senator Hawley reported favorably to the U. S. Senate, from the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill introduced by him to provide that section of the act approved March 3, 1865, making appropriations for the support of the Army, which provided that all officers of volunteers then in commission below the rank of Brigadier-General, who should continue in the military service to the close of the war, should be entitled to receive, upon being mustered out, three months' pay proper, be so construed so as to entitle the heirs or legal representatives of such officers who were killed or died in the service between March 3, 1865, and April 10, of the same year, to receive the three months pay to which such officers would have been entitled had they lived and been mustered out at the close of the war.

NO MORE FRONTIER.

Bill Nye on the Way the West is Losing its Strange Ways.

The system of building railroads into the wilderness and then allowing the wilderness to develop afterward, has knocked the essential joy out of the life of the pioneer. At one time the hardy hewer of wood and drawer of water gave his life willingly that his son might ride in the "varnished cars." Now the Pullman palace car takes the New Yorker to the threshold of the sea or to the boundary line between the United States and the British possessions.

It has driven out the long-handled frying-pan and the flapjack of twenty years ago, and introduced the condensed milk and canned fruit of commerce. Along the highways, where once the hopeful hundreds marched with long-handled shovel and pick and pan, cooking by the way thin salt pork and flapjacks and slumgullion, now the road is lined with empty beer bottles and peach cans that have outlived their usefulness. No landscape can be picturesque with an empty peach can in the foreground, any more than a lion would look grand in a red monogram horse blanket and false teeth.

The modern camp is not the camp of the wilderness. It wears the half-civilized and shabby genteel garments of a sawed-off town. You know that if you ride a day you will be where you can get the daily papers and read them under the electric light. That robs the old canyons of their solemn isolation and peoples each gulch with the odor of codfish balls and civilization. Civilization is not to blame for all this, and yet it seems sad.

Civilization could not have done this all alone. It had to call to its aid the infernal fruit can that now desolates the most obscure trail in the heart of the mountains. You walk over the chaos where the "hydraulic" has plowed up the valley like a convulsion, or you tread the yielding path across the deserted dump, and on all sides the rusty, neglected and humiliated empty tin can stares at you with its monotonous, dude-like stare.

An old-timer once said to me: "I've about decided, Bill, that the West is a matter of history. When we cooked our grub over a sage-brush fire we could get fat and fight Indians, but now we fill our digesters with the cold pizen and pewter of the canned peach; we go to a big tavern and stick a towel under our chins and eat pie with a fork and heat up our carkisses with antichrist coal, and what do we amount to? Nuthin! I used to chase Indians all day and eat raw salt pork at night, bekus I dassent build a fire, and still I felt better than I do now with a wad of tin-can sodder in my stummick and a homesick feeling in my weather-beaten breast.

"No, we don't have the fun we used to. We have more swarrees and sciatica and one bloomin' thing and another of that kind, but we don't get one snort of pure air and appetite in a year. They're bringin' in their blamed telephones now and malaria and ague and old sledge, and fun might as well skip out. There ain't no frontier any more. All we've got left is the old-fashioned trantler joos and rhumatiz of '49."

Behind the red squaw's cayuse ping
The hand-car roars and raves,
And pie-plant pies are now produced
Above the Indian graves.
I hear the oaths of pioneer,
The cancus yet to be,
The first low hum where soon will come
The fuzzy bumble bee.

BILL NYE.

The English in Egypt.

The prestige that once surrounded the European in Upper Egypt, and was worth more to us than fifty thousand bayonets, is departed, says an English magazine. The burning of Alexandria, the temporary triumph of Arabi, the belief that our fleet and army were destroyed by him, and that the Khedive and not England was his conqueror; finally, the conviction that the defeats in the Soudan were suffered by the English and not by the Egyptians, have all combined to shatter it, and it will be very long before it can again be restored. Not that the European in Upper Egypt is exposed to any danger so long as things remain quiet in Lower Egypt. The respect due to the hope of bakshish is as strong as ever, and the fellah is too cowardly to start any movement in which he is not quite sure of being backed by superior force. Moreover, the educated part of the population, which knows the real state of affairs, is naturally concerned to maintain order; while the "Copts" have discovered that their own safety and interests are intimately bound up with those of the Europeans. But the most unobservant traveler cannot but notice a certain insolence in the bearing of the natives toward him which would have been impossible only two years ago. It is nothing in itself; as a symptom, however, it is dangerous

PRESIDENT'S CHILDREN.—Washington was childless; Adams's favorite boy died by suicide; Monroe had no son; Madison no child; Van Buren's best son went to an asylum; Pierce's only child was killed on a railway; Polk had no child; and Johnson's only son was self-destroyed. Meanwhile neither Disraeli nor Palmerston had a son, and Napoleon III.'s boy died on a negro quest.

QUAKER CITY HUMOR.

A FEW THINGS ACCIDENTALLY OVERHEARD BY THE PHILADELPHIA "EVENING CALL."

AT THE SUPPER TABLE.

"What, another cup of tea, Mr. Dumley?" exclaimed the landlady, as he passed his cup for the third time. "I am delighted to see that you are enjoying your supper."

"Yes," responded Dumley. "I was quite hungry to-night, and the tea tastes unusually good."

"Not very complimentary to me," went on the landlady, with a sort of second-class genteel little laugh. "I generally make the tea myself, but to-night I was busy about something else, and the cook made it. I wonder what she could have put in it."

"Well," responded Dumley, as he stirred it gently with his spoon, "I should judge from the taste that she must have put some tea in it."

A PLEASANT DAY IN THE WEST.

"My dear," said a Western farmer to his wife as he got out of bed, "will you look and see what kind of a day it is?"

"Well," she replied, gazing out of the window, "Mr. Smith's barn across the way is being blown into the next lot, but—"

"Not his new brick barn?"

"No, the old wooden one, and it looks as if the roof of his house will have to go, but I don't believe there will be very much of a storm."

"Probably not," replied the husband, "but still we can hardly expect settled weather at this season of the year. I guess I had better drive to town to-day instead of waiting until Saturday. It might storm, then."

SUMMER BOARDING RATES.

Stranger—"What do you charge for those rooms for the season?"

Landlady—"Let me see. You said something about being at Newport all last summer, did you not?

"Yes."

"My terms are $10 a day."

"My gracious! I can't afford to pay that."

"It is cheaper than going to Newport."

"But I meant Newport, Pa. I was at a farm-house near there, and paid $6 a week."

"Oh! excuse me. In that case my terms will be $5.50 a week."

APPROPRIATE PRONUNCIATION.

Jones—"That was a terriable dy-na-mite explosion, wasn't it?"

Smith—"was anybody killed?"

"No, but the reverberation was felt for miles."

"In that case you should not call it a dy-namite explosion. Nobody died you know."

"What should I call it?"

"A dyn-amite explosion—made a big din, you know."

HIS EXCUSE.

Editor—"No, your Honor, I am not sick, but I should like to be excused from jury duty all the same."

Judge—"For what reason?"

"I have a very important article to write for the next issue of the paper."

"Very important, is it? May I ask what is the subject?"

"The jury system."

"Ah! And what ground do you take?"

"That all the evils of the system would be removed if reputable citizens would consent to serve."

A SAD PROSPECT.

"I see by the papers that the American Association of Umpires have decided to fine pitchers ten dollars for hitting the batsman with the ball."

"Oh, I guess that can't be true."

"But I know it is. You can rely on it."

"It is really too bad. Seems to me the country is going to the dogs."

"How so?"

"The only national game we have is baseball, and now that is to be deprived its chief attraction."

TOO HIGH RENT.

"What did you say the rent of that double dwelling is?" asked a house-hunter of a West Philadelpia landlord.

"Eighty dollars a month for each side, the tenant to pay water rent and do all the repairing."

"H'm; do you let both sides together for any less?"

"No, it pays me better to let each side alone."

"Well, I guess it will pay me better, too," and he walked away.

LIFE AMONG THE MORMONS.

"Are you going out this evening?" asked a Mormon lady of her husband.

"Yes," he replied. "I shall call on Mrs. Smith."

"I owe Miss Smith a call myself," she said, "but I don't suppose it would be exactly the thing for us to go together."

"Hardly," responded the husband.

TWO MODELS.

Iowa Man—"Yes, sir; our proud boast is that Iowa has a cow on every hill-top, and plenty of milk in the valleys."

Pennsylvania Man—"That's nothing. Pennsylvania has a pump at every corner, and plenty of milk in the cities."

WASHINGTON, May 21.—The Treasury excess to-day of assets over demand liabilities was 154,700,000 dollars. This remarkable balance will be still further increased, as the receipts of the Government continue unusually large. The custom at the Department, for which there is no law, by the way, has been to keep a reserve on hand of 138,000,000 dollars. This gives the Secretary a surplus of nearly 17,000,000 dollars with which to make another call of three-per-cents. The last call for 10,000,000 dollars will have to be set aside from this surplus, but as that does not mature for a month yet, the receipts up to that time will be ample to meet all demands.

Tuskaloosa county comes to the front with an act almost unparalleled in the annals of any county. Out of 103 delegates, selected without any view to the result that followed, Hon. A. C. Hargrove received 96 of that number, and but for a Committee of six being out at the time would have received 102 votes, or in other words every vote in the convention but his own. We hazard the opinion that there is not another county in the State can produce a similar case. This too, after having served in the State Senate for two terms, and with our county laboring under petty personal feuds, is a compliment of which any man might well feel proud. Col. Hargrove did not desire the nomination, but preferred to retire to the quiet of private life. Such men as he cannot be spared from the Councils of State, and when we see him elevated to the Chief Magistracy of the State and thence to the Senate of the United States, we will be content to let him retire to the shades of private life.—Gazette.

Let Us Organize.

When this press was established it was announced that its policy was non-political, so far as possible, except when the interests of the State and county were concerned. We desired to have very little to say on politics because we knew very little of politics. Likewise, we wished to avoid the vexations that political wrangling and political acridity of epithet would necessarily bring about. Immediately, our position was very ably and severely criticised by a number of our confreres of the State press. But our policy has not and cannot change one iota; for, having selected and adopted the life of Pericles as a model and guide, this press had chosen as its motto, "Wisdom, Justice, Moderation." Its duty performed is all that it hoped for.

The interests of our county, we think, now demand a thorough organization of the Democratic and Conservative element. The interests of each individual citizen demand such organization; for what is good for the country is equally beneficial to the individual citizen, according to the practical philosophy of republican institutions.

The Democrats of Chilton propose to meet in convention on the 28th day of June, for the purpose of nominating candidates for county offices. Let every Democrat work for a full representation, composed of our best citizenship, in that convention. It is undoubtedly true that a convention cannot always nominate the best man for a position. The clashing of the interests of prominent and good men, brought about by the over-zealous support of their friends, sometimes prevents the nomination of an excellent man, and places an inferior nominee before the people. But what is the alternative? A still worse man with no interests but his own to look after, and without a voice in controlling the affairs of the people he pretends to represent. We must have organization or we must submit to Radical office-holders.

This year everything augurs well for the Democracy of the State and of the county. In the county, however, as in the State, we must have organization if we would be successful. There is a strong and growing sentiment in the county favoring the county convention which has been called; and the people may rest assured that the best men will allow their names to go before the convention. No candidate who does not have his name presented to the convention is entitled to the endorsement of a single Democratic vote. The interests of the county demand that we be prepared to meet a foe so wily that one hour's notice will be sufficient to bring its cohorts together at the polls to poison the official records of the county for four long years. This is the true condition of this county to-day, and this foe to the best interests of the people, needs no organization. It is fully organized, and "notification" is its guide and watchword. It is the Radical party. We must be prepared to meet it. Let us organize.

A Good Platform.

President J. B. Stanley, of the Greenville Advocate, deserves to be sent to the National Democratic Convention as a delegate from the State at large. Mr. Stanley is President for the third time of the Alabama Press Association. In his annual address before the recent assemblage of that body, he uttered the following manly sentiments in regard to political and other newspaper discussions:

"Let us discuss all subjects with calm deliberation and gentlemanly courtesy, showing ourselves men in the highest sense of that term. Manhood is a great attainment. It rises to the sublime. It controls the animal; it rules the physical and enthrones the intellectual and moral. To do this demands the highest courage and the strongest determination. Temperate in speech and in conduct, manly in all our deportment, strong in our purpose and high in our aims, let us show to the world that we deserve the patronage of a refined and cultivated people."

With such a platform to guide him, Mr Stanley has attained that success as a newspaper man which such nobility of mind deserves.

River and Harbor Appropriations.

Among the principal items on the river and harbor bill as reported to the house are the following:

For Southern Virginia—Appomattox river, $15,000; James, 7,500; Rappahannock $20,000; York, $20,000.

North Carolina—Cape Fear, below Wilmington, $75,000; ditto, above Wilmington, $50,000.

South Carolina—Ashley, $25,000; Edistoe, $20,000; Great Pedee, $8,000; Salkahatchie, $3,000; Waccamaw, $6,000; Washapoo cut 3,000 dollars; Waterce, 5,000.

Georgia—Allamaha, 10,000 dollars; Chattahoochee, 20,000 dollars; Coosa, Georgia and Alabama, 5,000 dollars; Flint, 2,000 dollars; Ocmulgee, 3,000 dollars; Rome marsh, 10,000; Savannah, 15,000.

Florida—Olarsabatchie, 5,000 dollars; Choctawhatchie' 15,000 dollars; Escambia, 10,000 dollars; St. Johns, 15,000 dollars; Suwanne, 10,000 dollars; Volusiabor, 2,000 dallars.

Alabama—Alabama, 10,000 dollars; Cahaba, 1,000 dollars; Warrior 12,000 dollars; Tombigbee, 25,000 dollars.

Tennessee—Clinch, 5,000 dollars; Cumberland below Nashville, 75,000 dollars; Cumberland between Nashville and Smith's Shoals, 20,000 dollars; French Broad, 35,000 dollars; Tennessee above Chattanooga, 30,000 dollars; Tennessee below Chattanooga, 35,000 dollars.

Ohio river, 60,000 dollars; Mississippi river, a number of appropriations for specific localities aggregate 2,350,000 dollars. The falls of the Ohio at Louisville, 30,000 dollars.

Among the appropriations for harbors those important are, viz: Norfolk, 25,000 dollars; Charleston, 50,000 dollars; Georgetown, 50,000 Brunswick, 10,000 dollars; Savannah, Ga., 150,000 dollars; Cumberland Sound, Ga., 5,000 dollars; Appalachicola Bay, Fla., 10,000 dollars; Pensacola, Fla., 5,000 dollars; Tampa Bay, 20,000 dollars; Mobile, Ala., 20,000 dollars.

Rev. Jefferson Falkner.

The place of senator in the Alabama legislature has been looking and seeking for an occupant from Chilton county. A careful mental review of the field has convinced us that Rev. Jefferson Falkner can be induced to enter the canvass. He would make a good senator, and we believe he would serve if elected.—Wetumpka Times.

STANTON.

The New City on the E. T. V. & G.

Yesterday morning Stanton, as a city, was born. Without a whisper or a sign to forewarn the public that the piney woods of Chilton were about to give birth to a vigorous stripling, the youngster held up his head and said to the world, "look at me."

About ten o'clock, Mr. M. M. Stone, real estate agent, hung out in front of his drug store near the Post Office, a black-board on which was the plot of a town. On one side was a brief description of the place, the size of the lots, the advantages of the location &c. The plot of land consisted of forty acres divided into 160 lots. Of the whole number sixty were reserved. One acre is already occupied by a church, one acree is reserved for a hotel and one for a park. In less than half an hour the sidewalk was crowded with people, and the first four lots on the front next the railroad went off at $50 for the lump. By two o'clock eighty lots were sold at an average of 10 dollars each, making the cash sales for the day 800 dollars. The lots are 90x100 feet. A number of those who bought refused offers on the spot at advanced prices ranging from 25 to 50 per cent. None of these offers were taken, the investors holding for the purpose of erecting substantial buildings on their property.

What is Stanton? A railroad station on the E. T., V. & G. R. R., twenty-eight miles from Selma. It is named for the lamented Myron Stanton who was killed in the Dunklin bridge disaster several years ago. He had selected the spot as the site for a town and his wishes are now being fulfilled. At this station are located the immense lumber mills of Messrs. Gregory, Coe & Co. The advantages of the place are its altitude above the sea, its fine water, pure atmosphere, the fine creeks and mill ponds in the vicinity, the beauty of the lofty pines which decorate the neighboring hillsides, and the general rural quiet and picturesqueness of the scene. The purpose is to make it a summer resort for Selmians and the people of adjacent towns, principally for those with families. Neat cottages will be at once erected and to encourage the building of substantial houses, Messrs. Gregory, Coe & Co. have agreed to furnish lumber at greatly reduced rates.

All things considered the sale of lots in this lovely little retreat was the most marvelous thing of the kind on record. There had been no advertising, absolutely no heralding of the enterprise. The cheapness of the pine, the need of such a retreat in summer and the general merits of the location at once caught the public mind. The fact that twenty acres of poor piney woods land sold, in less than five hours after it was put on the market, at 40 dollars an acre is a wonderful evidence of the life and go and surplus capital in Selma. It shows that we have the money here to put in the luxuries of life, and it furthermore insures that Selma is to have one of the loveliest little summer resorts of any city in the South. An excursion party will go up to Stanton on Sunday by the regular train.—Selma Times.

More About the Phosphates.

UNIVERSITY OF ALA., May 12, '84.

EDITOR OF SELMA TIMES: Since the publication of my letter of last week, several new localities of phosphates have been found along the line marked out by me. Immediately after the Perry discovery, I sent samples of the phosphates to Dr. S. P. Smith, of Prattville. With suggestions as to where to look for them in Autauga. His search was soon rewarded by finding them in Bear Creek hills, as already announced in your columns, and it seems almost certain that they occur also even nearer to Prattville. On Friday last, I sent Mr. John Daniel, a student in the laboratory here, to examine the country between Selma and Summerfield. He has just returned with a fine lot of phosphates obtained from that section.

On last Saturday I received from Messrs. Franklin & Co., of your town, a package of phosphates found six miles southeast of Summerfield, and consequently not far from Selma.

Mr. Daniel traced the phosphate bed from within three miles of Selma to the Perry county line, and Mr. Daniel W. Langdon, Jr., who has been making for the geological survey, some detailed examinations at Hamburg, has followed them from that place to the Dallas county line. These two observers have therefore shown that there is an uninterrupted belt of phosphate extending certainly from Hamburg nearly to Selma in Dallas, and and very probably to the vicinity of Montgomery, through Autauga county.

Mr. Langdon's examinations have apparently also demonstrated that the nodular phosphates will average at least five or six hundred tons to the acre, which would pay well, even if no use were made of the greensand, which contain about twenty per cent of phosphoric acid, and which is five or six feet in thickness.

It seems, therefore, beyond question that these beds are destined to form the basis of a great enterprise in the future, and my object in writing this is to speak of one among the many industries which will spring up in connection with the working of the phosphates. I mean the manufacture of sulphuric acid, which is used to convert the insoluble tri calcic or bone phosphate into the soluble or superphosphate. We have in many localities in our metaphoric region, which includes the counties of Cleburne, Randolph, Chambers, Tallapoosa, Coosa and Clay, and parts of Chilton, Talladega, Elmore, Lee and others, beds of iron pyrites, which are bound to furnish the material for this manufacture. When the pyrites hold in addition a per centage of copper, as is the case with that from Wood's copper mine in Cleburne, and from several other places already known, the extraction of the copper, even when the ore does not carry more than five or six per cent, can be profitably combined with the manufacture of the acid.

A large part of the English sulphuric acid is made from Spanish pyrites containing from four to ten per cent of copper.

Whether the pyrites in Alabama will be shipped to the phosphates, or vice versa, will of course depend upon the relative cost of transportation; but that Alabama will produce the sulphuric acid needed in the manufacture of the superphosphates we have no reason to doubt. EUGENE A. SMITH.

Callierville Dots.

The pleasant weather we have had, has greatly helped our farmers. They are up with their work enough for the young people to enjoy picnics. By the way, we enjoyed a nice one the 24th of May, at Moore's Ford, near Plantersville. A barbecue is now in contemplation, to be near Dixie.

Stanton is on a big boom now. Capitalists from Selma have been up and bought off lots, and will begin the erection of summer residences at once.

There was a big fire at Messrs. Thouston, Carter & Co's mill recently. Loss estimated at five hundred dollars. The fire started from the stack, but by all hands working for life, the dwellings and larger portion of mill and lumber were saved. The mill is running rapidly again. Mr. Thouston fell from a car and was seriously injured.

Ebenezer Church has been greatly improved recently. The interior is nicely ceiled. We also have a good Sunday school conducted by Mr. Thomas DuBose.

The State S. S. Convention met in Selma, the 20th. Ebenezer was represented by Mrs. Hare, Rev. Mr. Rudick, and Dixie's fairest belle, Miss Loula King.

Our school is also flourishing.

H. J. H.

Uncle Billy Nabors, who lives near Hanover, in Coosa county, is 81 years old, has 23 children, 17 of whom are now living, 130 grand children, all in good health and living within twenty miles of the old homestead. He expects to celebrate the 4th of July by having them all meet at his house and enjoy a big dinner.

ESTRAY NOTICE.

Take notice that on or about the 12th day of May, 1884, two certain mules found estray, were taken up by W. C. Hester. The value of said animals having been duly appraised according to law by two disinterested house-holders, summoned by J. P. Vanderveer, N. P. and ex-officio J. P. for said county and sworn by him and that said appraisers have certified to said N. P. and ex-off. J. P., the value of said animals to be sixty dollars, with the following description. Mare mules over medium size, with no marks except harness marks, dark bay color, in bad order, about 16 hands high, and between 12 and 15 years old.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

—:o:—

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

—:o:—

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

The office of county commissioner is one of the most important in the whole catalogue of offices, as well as the most honorable. Let us select none but good men to fill such responsible positions.

Our columns are open to communications regarding the feasibility of county nominating conventions. We are willing to give every one a "say" either pro or con.

At the recent State Sunday School Convention held in Selma, Rev. J. W. Shores was appointed a delegate to the National Sunday School Convention which meets in Louisville, Ky., in June.

Prof. W. U. Acree has been re-elected Principal of Verbena Academy for the next scholastic year, by the Board of Trustees of that institution. This was an honor well conferred—a compliment well deserved.

Mr. Thomas Evans, the energetic and handsome assistant road master on the E. T. V. & G. rail road, spent several days in Clanton last week on a visit to his father's family. Tom is succeeding as he deserves to do.

Mrs. Lucy Hopper, a recent resident of this place is now enjoying a visit to her old home, Hartford, Connecticutt. The readers of the VIEW would no doubt be glad to read something from Mrs. Hopper's pen as to that aristocratic city and its celebrities.

Sheriff Garner went all the way to Haynesville last week to arrest a man supposed to be John M. Dickerson, who shot and killed John Pressley in this county some weeks since. The party answered the description of the fugitive almost in toto and had exactly the same deformities which marks the latter and the same name. But Mr. Garner was forced to admit that he was not the man. He is a half uncle of the accused, and the Sheriff returned without a prisoner.

A couple of the sons of Ham, had rather a serious difficulty near this place on last Sunday. One of them was struck upon the head with an axe. He will probably recover. It is a huge joke to strike a negro on the head with anything weighing less than 20,000,000 tons.

An article prepared by a VIEW representative, who went over to look after the Stanton "boom," is not published, from the fact that the article from the Selma Times, on the subject, and giving like particulars, was already in type when the VIEW man's article reached us.

Members of the Clanton Lodge of Knights of Honor are hereby requested to be prepared to meet their initial dues on Saturday, June 7th. The members will meet at the office of Dr. I. D. Lanier for the purpose. All names will be dropped from the Lodge roll if dues are not paid. It is absolutely necessary that all pay dues promptly or the Lodge cannot be organized.

The beat Committees must not think that their duties have ceased. They are urged to take an active part in the work of selecting a set of delegates on June 21st to the county convention which will be held at Clanton on June 28th. Let them be at work even now in jar-ranging suitable delegations from their respective beats. Send good men only as delegates.

We were in error as to the particulars of the failure of H. S. & E. B. Nelson, at Columbiana. We stated on hearsay that their liabilities exceeded their assets by 35,000 dollars. We have since learned from the Columbiana Chronicle that their total liabilities are estimated at 35,000 dollars, while their assets are given at 45,000. Their failure is attributed to losses on cotton and leniency with their debtors. The Chronicle thinks they will soon get their affairs straightened sufficiently to start up again.

Beat No. One Goes for Whiskey.

The election on the prohibition question in Beat No. 1, which came off on Tuesday, resulted in a vote of 38 for prohibition and 70 for no prohibition. The result, as might be expected has had a very discouraging effect upon the prohibitionists of that beat.

We're For It.

There is a rumor abroad that a Republican county ticket is to be placed in the field and a Republican campaign paper to be established at Clanton. We hope the report will prove true. Something of the sort might stir up a good Democratic vote in old Chilton, while nothing else would. We are sound believers in opposition. We would say to our Republican friends: Show us your teeth, and we will grab you and give you such a shake as will cause your old bones to rattle all the way along the road to "Davy Jones'," which route you will per force take as soon as you come out against the white man's party.

Callierville to the Front!

The Stanton boom is quite a boom and has had the weird effect of inspiring some of our citizens to follow suit, in staking off some choice lots—which have already attracted attention to our beautiful valley-village, with its many advantages, excellent water and health, all of which are sure to be good friends.

Our latest improvement is, milk boxes. A cheap and substantial dairy at our dining room doors, by the pump which sends the cold water through. Mr. Jimmie Peeples makes them, and has made a poor widow's heart rejoice, now that she can furnish cold milk and butter to those who wish.

CALLIERVILLE.

A County S. S. Convention.

A former correspondent of the VIEW, writing from Dixie, after telling us they are proud of their county paper over there, adds: Mr. Editor, your old correspondent has turned "Callierville Dots" over to another; but must tell you how enthused she became at the State Sunday School Convention recently in Selma, and wishes to beg you to urge our people to organize a county S. S. Convention now, in compliance with the wish of those earnest workers. One of the Convention anecdotes illustrating the necessity of striking "while the iron is hot," was as follows: "Once a stuttering blacksmith had a stuttering apprentice, who stood with hammer uplifted, awaiting orders. The blacksmith with a red-hot iron on the anvil said:

'W-h-y d-o-n't y-o-u s-t-r-i-k-e?'

Apprentice—'W-h-e-r-e m-u-s-t I s-t-r-i-k-e?'

Blacksmith—'Never mind how s-t-r-i-k-e, s-t-r-i-k-e!'"

The mite meeting, last Saturday night, at Mrs. Gibson's, was a stupendous success so far as we could learn from those who enjoyed the pleasure of attending. Vocal and instrumental music and recitations were the chief attractions of the programme. About seven dollars were realized by the entertainment. The money is to be applied to the benefit of the Methodist church. This effort of our ladies was so highly appreciated that a repetition has been called for. Our only regret is that absence from our post prevented us from giving a more extended notice.

Mr. McAlpine, of Talledega, was the guest of Capt. Clisby for a few days last week.

Thomas Falkner, the young man who received so much notoriety by his bloody assault on Mr. Floyd Brooks last winter, has returned from East Florida, whither he had gone for safety, and has been consulting with friends regarding the propriety of surrendering himself to the Sheriff.

We regret to hear of the temporary illness of Mrs. A. J. Brooks.

This year is the Election for State and County Officers, Legislature, President and Congressmen.

Devoted to the Democratic party, it will at all times and under all circumstances advocate its measures and candidates, believing that in its triumph alone can the best interests of Alabama and the United States be secured.

The Daily should be taken by every man in reach of a daily Postoffice. It is a thirty-six column newspaper, with full telegraphic and commercial dispatches. Price of Daily per year $10.

The Weekly is a fifty-four column paper and each column a long one. It contains more reading matter than any paper that circulates in Alabama, and more of interest to Alabama readers. Subscription price per year $2. Send us your names. A subscription now will carry you through the State and Presidential election periods, and the next State Legislature.

SHORTHAND BY MAIL.—The correspondence class in phonography conducted by Rowell & Hickcox, Boston, Mass., is the oldest and without doubt the most successful class of the kind in existence. There are more than 300 members in it at present. We advise those of our readers who want to learn the modern art-science, thoroughly and well, for practical purposes, to join this class now.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken out of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup For Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhoea, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. [ma15

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

PRETTY GIRL AND MASHER.

AN OLD GENTLEMAN, A POLICEMAN, AND A CONDUCTOR VERY ANGRY.

A Scene That was Enacted on a Street-car —Joy of the Passengers who Didn't Participate.

[From the New York Times.]

A very pretty girl, attired in a long seal dolman and carrying an alligator skin bag with initials in silver on the outside, stood at a crossing waiting for a car. A youth of about 21 or 22 years was also awaiting the car, and he occasionally glanced at the pretty girl, who turned indignantly away from him. When the car stopped the youth stood at the back step to assist the maiden to enter, but she wheeled about when she noticed his gallant intention and went in by the front door. The youth smiled languidly, entered the car and sat down opposite the pretty girl, at the front window, whereupon she angrily turned and looked out at the horses.

The conductor observed this pantomime, and regarded the youth with a scowl. When he began to collect fares at the front end the young lady got out her purse, while the youth was feeling in his pocket, and paid her transportation fee. The youth handed the conductor a dime, without noticing that the pretty girl had paid, and said: "Two." The conductor handed him back five cents, with an ugly glance, and the girl looked harder at the horses than ever, whereat the youth smiled with a great deal of amusement. An old gentleman got into the car and sat down near the girl, the conductor kept his eyes upon the youth. Other passengers entered and a policeman stood upon the platform with the conductor.

Presently the old gentleman noticed that the youth kept his eyes upon the pretty girl, and smiled whenever she dared to turn her glance away from the window, and that her eyes fairly blazed with anger as she turned from him. The conductor spoke to the policeman, and policeman, conductor, old gentleman, and all the rest of the passengers began to glare at the youth. The old gentleman was the first to interfere.

"What do you mean, sir," he said, "by annoying this young lady in that outrageous manner?"

The youth stopped smiling and said, softly: "If it isn't too much trouble, I'd be much obliged if you'd mind your own business."

"You young puppy!" roared the old gentleman. "I'll see to you! I'll see to you! I'll see if young ladies are to be publicly insulted by such ruffians as you are! I'll make an example of you!"

"Oh, don't; please don't do anything!" said the pretty girl, imploringly. "Please don't make a scene!"

"My dear young lady," said the old gentleman, gallantly, "you shall not be embarrassed, I assure you, but I have daughters myself, and it is a duty I owe to the public to make an example of this scamp. Conductor!"

The conductor advanced very willingly into the car, followed by the policeman, and all the passengers gazed at the youth, who only smiled more broadly than ever.

"Put this little puppy off the car," said the old gentleman to the conductor.

The conductor rang the bell and said to the youth: "Come, now! git off the kyar!"

"What for?" asked the youth.

"Fer mashin'," replied the conductor. "Come, now! start, or I'll t'row yer off!"

"If you touch me," said the youth very quietly, "I'll break your thick head."

The policeman had been anxiously awaiting his opportunity, and now saw his chance.

"Well, you won't break my head," he remarked, taking out his club, and elbowing the conductor, the old gentleman, and the excited passengers aside, while a crowd collected in the streets and looked in the car windows.

"Stop, stop," screamed the pretty girl, throwing herself between the youth and the officer. "Oh please, please don't hurt him. He's my brother!"

"What!" shouted the policeman in a tone of intense disgust.

"What!" echoed the conductor, the old gentleman, the driver, and the rest of the passengers.

"Yes, she's my sister," asserted the youth, seating himself beside her. "And you're all a pack of infernal idiots," he added.

"I don't believe it," the old gentleman said after a breathless pause. "What were you treating each other in that manner for if you are brother and sister?"

"She's a little mad because I wouldn't take her to the circus this afternoon, that's all," replied the youth.

"And I'm—I'm awfully ashamed of it, too," said the pretty girl, beginning to cry. "And I think you're an awfully stupid old thing to make such a fuss," she added, passionately, to the old gentleman.

"Perhaps," suggested the youth to the conductor, who, with the policeman, still gazed speechlessly upon them; "perhaps, as you've stopped about a dozen cars behind you, if you should ring that bell and start the procession, the funeral may get up to Eleventh street in the course of the afternoon."

The conductor, utterly crushed, rang the bell. The policeman looked foolish. The old gentleman seemed hopelessly cast down, and the other passengers have not ceased yet to congratulate themselves that they did not get an opportunity to take part in the controversy.

LAST YEAR THE MANAGING editor of the Providence (R. I.) Journal wrote Senator Anthony's obituary, and had it in type in case of emergency. Not long ago this young man died suddenly, and Senator Anthony wrote the funeral sermon of the editor who had calculated to survive his employer many years. Such is life.

SUPPORTING HERSELF.

What a Girl May do if She Has the Disposition.

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps has a vigorous paper with the above title, on the subject of self-supporting girls, in the May St. Nicholas. Her sentiments on this topic are forcibly shown by the following extract:

"Girls, first make up your minds that you will be something! All the rest will follow. What you shall be comes more easily and clearly in due time.

"A girl of thirteen cannot decide, with any discretion or any assurance, whether she will be a sculptor or a washwoman, a farmer or a poet; but she can decide distinctly whether it is her wish or her duty, after leaving school or college, to remain dependent upon her parents or to fit herself for a self-providing life.

"The education by which you mean to get your bread and butter, your gloves and bonnets, is a very different affair from that which you take upon yourself as an ornament and an interval in life. The chemical experiment which you may some day have to explain to pupils of your own is quite another thing from the lesson that you may never think of again. The practice in bookkeeping, which may some time regulate your dealings with live, flesh-and-blood customers, becomes as interesting as a new story. The dull old rules for inflection and enunciation fairly turn into poetry, if you hope to find yourself a great public reader some coming day. And the very sawdust of the French or Latin grammar becomes ashes of roses to the stout little fancy that dreams of brave work and big salary, in some foreign department at Washington, or tutoring girls and boys for college. All over the terrible ocean, among the lawless sailors, the men with wives and children to work for are those that lead the gentlest and cleanest lives. So, on the great ocean of school-life, the girls with aims to study for are those whose labor is the richest and ripest. Ah! you will never realize till you have tried it what an immense power over the life is the power of possessing distinct aims. The voice, the dress, the look, the very motions of a person define and alter when he or she begins to live for a reason. I fancy that I can select in a crowded street the busy, blessed women who support themselves. They carry themselves with an air of conscious self-respect and self-content which a shabby alpaca cannot hide, nor a Bonnet silk enhance, nor even sickness or exhaustion quite drag out."

New York Newspapers.

The New York Graphic says:—When the eleven story Potter building at Beekman street and Park Row is completed the Sun will remove into it. The first story will contain on the corner the finest publication office in the city, while the old World press vaults will be extended and improved to meet the demands of the new comer. The topmost story will hold the composing and proof-reading departments, and on the one below will be the editorial and reportorial rooms, fitted up with every comfort and convenience. The Sun has obtained a lease of these premises which is practically illimitable as to the length of its duration. Immediately upon the completion of the building, which will be in about a year, the Sun will remove to its new quarters. Then the premises now occupied by the Sun will be torn down and the Tribune building continued over the site, making one of the great blocks of the city and the finest newspaper structure on the continent. The Tribune Association paid the Sun $375,000 for the property. The Sun bought it twenty years ago from the Tammany Society for $150,000. A few days ago the French's Hotel property was sold under the hammer for $410,000. It is understood that some time previous; the Sun people offered $600,000 for it, but the offer was either declined or could not, in the then undivided condition of the heirs' interests, be accepted. The Sun then made the lease of the Beekman street premises referred to.

They Were All Girls.

George W. Cable spent Sunday with friends in Monson, Mass., and attended the Congregational Church and was invited to talk to the Sunday-school in the afternoon. In the course of his remarks he raised his hand, expanded the digits, and said: "I have so many children at home. How many is that?" "Five," piped up a youngster promptly. "And half of them are girls," continued the speaker, staggering his audience with his apparently reckless disregard of the truth. "How much is half of five?" asked Mr. Cable. "Two and a half," reproachfully replied a little miss in the front pew. "Yes," said the novelist with a benignant smile as he saw that his reputation for veracity was fast slipping away, "two and a half of them are girls and the other two and a half, too—five girls." "Oh," gasped the little miss with a look of relief, and then there was a ripple of laughter.

AN ARMY PANIC.

HOW SOME WERE OCCASIONED IN THE LATE WAR.

A Slight Disarrangement of Affairs May Cause a Serious One.

The panic which seized upon a portion of the Federal army at First Bull Run, says M. Quad, in the Detroit Free Press, and resulted in demoralising the whole was repeated many times afterward in both armies. Place a regiment in ever so favorable a fighting position, and give it the best officers in the service, and one thing more is needed. Unless men are driven to desperation they will not fight their best until possible disaster is provided for by an avenue of escape to the rear. Troops can be quickly and steadily half-faced to meet a flank attack, but if it continues long a panic is almost certain to be the result. The soldier fears his retreat will be cut off. Even if he has no thoughts of retreat, this feeling forces itself upon him and demoralizes the bravest troops.

The slightest cause has led to gravest results in battles. Let a battery change position with a rush, running through a brigade, and those men must be handled firmly to prevent a falling back. Caissons in search of ammunition have stampeded regiments time and again. Let one regiment fall back hastily to secure a new position, and it is a cool line of veterans indeed which will open to let the men pass and then close up firmly after them. It is not the fear of being killed that unnerves a man fighting in the ranks. Men who have fired seventy-five rounds at close range have been afterward stampeded by the fear of being surrounded and captured. With veteran fighters the fear of being made a prisoner is perhaps stronger than that of death itself. A man falling dead as a line advances produces no consternation. The gap is closed as quick as the men on either side can move up. But, let a man be wounded and call out at the top of his voice, as was sometimes the case, and a sort of quiver runs up and down his whole company. Let a second and a third be hit, and it requires the stern "Steady, men!" of the captain to prevent disorder in the ranks.

The teamsters were the direct cause of more than one panic. Being noncombatants and unarmed, they were, of course, helpless, and for this same reason easily frightened. Let one single shell fall among the wagon-train, and nine out of ten wagons were bound to move. If one teamster abandoned his wagon, others were certain to follow his example, no matter how slight the danger.

When Gen. Sturgis had his fight at Guntown, Miss., the wagon-train was by some blunder brought too near the front and parked near an open field. As the fighting grew hot the Confederates brought forward a single section of artillery and got the range of this train. Four or five shells did the work. A panic seized the teamsters, and the few who got their wagons out of the field abandoned them along the only highway. This action blocked the road, preventing any movement of artillery along the thoroughfare, and in half an hour there was a panic among the men who had all along been fighting with the greatest bravery. The panic resulted in a rout, entirely uncalled for, and the Confederates gathered in from 900 to 1,200 prisoners, eighteen pieces of artillery, 230 wagons and ambulances, 500 horses and mules, and rations and ammunition in immense quantities. The bursting of five or six shells half a mile in rear of the lines of battle lost Sturgis that fight, and came near being the destruction of his whole command.

A Berner Juryman.

A dispatch from St. Louis, Mo., says: L. A. Phillips, one of the jurors who tried the Berner case in Cincinnati, was interviewed by a reporter. He says he came to establish a branch of his carpet cleaning works here and will probably remain. He says that the jurors believed that Berner was forced by threats to aid in the murder of Kirk, and that they refused to believe the alleged confession, because they were satisfied it was obtained by bulldozing and starvation methods. He did not know the Berner family at all, but he wanted the young man sent up for life. Seven jurors voted for acquittal on the first ballot, but he held out for murder in the second degree. It was represented that unless they agreed they could be kept locked up for thirty-three days, and their room was small and poorly ventilated, so on Monday morning, sick himself and hearing of sickness in his family, he weakened and compromised on a twenty years' verdict.

Phillips adds that the murder was not nearly so bad as lots of others, but the newspapers selected Berner as a victim, and when they failed to hang him incited the people to lynch the prisoners.

Prices in Idaho.

A copy of the Coeur d'Alene Weekly Nugget before us is printed at Eagle City, which, it claims, is the metropolis of the new mining district. It is not a very large paper, but it sells for $12 a year. It gives a list of prices of articles of common household necessity at the mines. The list is made up by an Eagle City grocer, who appends the intimation that these prices may fluctuate, according to the condition of the trade: Flour is $60 per barrel; sugar, 50 cents per pound; tea, $1.25; coffee, 50 cents; candles, 50 cents; bacon, 40 cents; potatoes, per pound, 25 cents; beans, per pound, 50 cents; tobacco, $1; soap, 25 cents; yeast powders, 75 cents; cheese, 25 cents; salt, 25 cents; syrup, per gallon, $4.50; coal oil, per can, $7.50; cigars, per thousand, $40 to $150; liquors, per gallon, $8; cook stoves, $40 to $150; beans, $1.25; over-shirts, $6.50; boots, $7 to $12. The Nugget estimates that there are now 3,000 people at the mines, and others are coming in on all trails.

A FEW PRESS NOTES.

THE Rev. Oliver Dyer does the "Answers to Correspondents" in Bonner's Ledger.

MR. DANIEL GODWIN of the old printing house of Baker & Godwin, of New York, died at his home in Ridgewood, N. J.

STREET & SMITH bought the New York Weekly from Amos J. Williamson twenty-five years ago for $40,000. Both became millionaries.

MANY of the poems of the late Nathaniel G. Shepherd are floating through country newspapers spuriously credited. Shepherd wrote some of the sweetest poems in the English language. He was a reporter on the Tribune. He died over twelve years ago.

ENGLISH editors receive good salaries. The editor of the Times receives $25,000, the Standard pays $15,000, Daily News, $20,000, senior editors of the Telegraph receive $17,500 each, Manchester Guardian $15,000, Pall Mall Gazette, Spectator and Saturday Review each $10,000, St. James Gazette, $9,000 and Punch $15,000.

THE New York City Press Association pays its reporters fifteen and twenty dollars a week. Reporters on the city papers make from $7 to $50 a week, $25 being the average. Many of the reporters work on space, receiving from $4 to $8 per column for such matter as is published. They would do well if editors did not cut their copy so.

TWO HUNDRED and fifteen Typographical Unions are in existence in the United States. These have a membership exceeding 12,000. The number of non-Union men, in the localities where the Unions exist, is estimated at 8,000. Allowing an additional force of 5,000, in the small towns, we have 20,000 compositors. There are 1,000 women mostly in the Eastern States employed in setting types.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Journalist suggests that newspaper men should form a mutual benefit life assurance company, which should extend all over the country, the receipt of money being contingent upon death only. There are in the United States not less than 100,000 men who make their living directly from newspaper work. And such an association properly conducted would be of immense benefit

Spring Jackets, Wraps, Etc.

Short jackets of gray, tan, dark red, or black lady's cloth, Harper's Bazar says, are to be worn with spring dresses. They are single-breasted, close-fitting, smooth over the tournure and hips, and of even length all around, or else they are shorter behind than in front. They may be quite plain, but have usually a standing collar and small cuffs of velvet, or else they are braided all around in a very simple pattern of curved or of diagonal lines, or they have many straight rows of braid. The fine French webbing like Jersey cloth is made up in this way for house basques, completed by two darts and short side bodies, and they are trimmed with braid of the same color, or else of gilt or silver.

Pretty little mantles to wear with any dressy costume are shown in mushroom shades, in olive green, and sapphire, and are partly of cloth and partly of velvet; the velvet is usually in the middle forms of the back and in the middle of the front. The shapes are very short behind, scarcely reaching to the waist line, and as clinging as a scarf, while the sides are high and full on the shoulders, and the fronts are long and slender. A ribbon fastened on the back is tied underneath around the waist to hold them in shape, and the lining is of surah. Sometimes the cloth parts are nearly covered with India embroidery in dull colors, which is very effective when the mantle is olive green, and edged with chenille fringe of netted heading with the sleek mouse-tail strands, each of which is tipped with a ball. Similar mantles in blue cloth and velvet are lined with shrimp pink surah, and decorated with ribbon embroidery. A copper red mantle has the velvet scarcely more than a deep collar or yoke, with longer stripe down the front, while all the back and sides is a net-work of large jet beads in a very open pattern. Full ruffs of black French lace finish the neck of most of these garments.

The North Polar Region.

In natural history several disputed points will be settled on Lieut. Ray's return to Washington from the Vienna convention. The preserved specimens will show for themselves in a short time. Lieut. Ray has also made a study of the currents in that latitude, and when his views are given to the public they will find many advocates. He believes the so-called great Japanese current flows through Behring Strait, meets the ice pack further north and is divided easterly and westerly, the westerly current describing a half circle, pushing against the ice pack and flowing west of Wrangell Land until it met a current and was turned down along the Asiatic shore. The easterly current is turned against the British North American shore, forced to the east of Mackenzie river and flows past said river, the Ickpick-pong and Mead rivers, and is only stopped by the stronger current flowing through Behring Strait at Point Barrow. The long nine-mile spit, called Point Barrow, where Lieut. Ray was stationed, would assist in carrying out this theory.

RETROSPECTIVE—Lady—"Here, my poor man, is a ticket for a dinner at the soup kitchen; and you can eat as much there as will suffice for to-morrow and the day after." Mendicant—"Thanky kindly, mum; but I'd rather like first to eat enough for yesterday and the day afore, if it would make no difference to you to write that down on the ticket."—Judy.

The Nihilists in Russia.

The Germania says there is much confusion and consternation among the Russian police owing to the discovery made since the murder of Colonel Sudeikin that besides the ordinary police cipher Colonel Sudeikin used various ciphers for the different sections of the organization of secret agents in Russia and throughout Europe. These keys have been stolen or lost and it is impossible for the government to know or verify the identity of the agents. It is feared that the nihilists hold the key to a cipher.

Some Facts About Trichinosis.

Antonio Pisino, the Italian laborer, who is at Bellevue Hospital under treatment for trichinosis, is doing well. It has been discovered that the sick man had an inordinate fondness for raw pork, of which he ate large quantities. There have been five other cases of trichinosis in Bellevue Hospital within five years. Of these only one has resulted fatally. That was the case of a butcher who was taken to the hospital in 1880. He had eaten a large quantity of diseased pork and he died shortly after his admission to the hospital. The last case was that of a Jew who was admitted about a year ago. He had eaten a piece of bologna sausage—the first piece of pork he had ever tasted. He recovered after a short illness.

Trichinosis can be contracted only from raw or underdone pork. A temperature of 155 degs. Fahrenheit will kill the trichinæ. If the meat is thoroughly pickled, and allowed to stay in the brine, the animalcules will be destroyed. Smoking is not effective, inasmuch as it reaches only the outside. Hence bologna sausage or raw ham in nearly every instance is the means of conveying the disease. It is only in cases of weak constitutions, or when the patient has eaten immoderately of the diseased flesh, that the disease results fatally. About 25 per cent. of the cases of trichinosis prove fatal. There is a case of a man who had trichinosis, and when a piece of his muscular tissue was examined, twenty-four hours after, live trichinæ were found in it.—New York Tribune.

The Chinese Islands.

There has recently been mooted in the French journals a plan to seize the Chinese islands of Hainan, Formosa and Chusan as an indemnity for the expenses of the war in Tonquin. The island of Hainan commands the gulf bearing the same name. It is a province of Canton, and lies partly in the Gulf of Tonkin, 300 miles south-southwest of Canton. The area of the island is 12,000 square miles, the length being 180 and the breadth 100 miles. The population of the island is 2,300,000. The Straits of Hainan, which separate the island from the mainland, are only five miles across, and are navigable only for junks. Hainan is one of the least known portions of the Chinese empire. The mountainous regions in the interior of the island are unexplored.

At the port of Hoi-how, which is one of the open ports of the Celestial Empire, the value of the commercial exchanges in 1880 amounted to 13,000,000 and the maritime movement to 230,000 tons. The other ports are not known. Formosa is a larger island in the China Sea, lying ninety miles off the province of Fu-kien, from which it is separated by the Formosa Channel. It is 237 miles long, with an average breadth of 70 miles. The number of inhabitants is 3,600,000. Formosa is the part of China where foreign influence has made itself most felt. A telegraph line has been established between the two principal ports, Tai-wan and Takau, and last year it was proposed to connect them by a railway.

Life Aboat a Brewery.

A Newton, N. J., brewer has sued a New Jersey judge for libel. The judge, in a temperance speech, is claimed to have said that he had seen a dead rat in one of the brewer's beer vats. He asked the brewer if he would not throw the brewing away. The beer man replied: "Oh, no; my customers will never know there was a rat in the beer."

It is also claimed that the judge stated that chemicals detrimental to health were used in manufacturing beer, and that the men employed at the brewery washed their feet in the vats.

A BOY found a woman's switch in the opera house and returned it to her. "Thank you, my little man," said the lady; "you are an honest boy." "Oh, no, I'm not so very honest; but I know what I am." "What are you, then?" "A hair restorer."—Detroit Free Press.

Sweet Gum & Mullein.

Very few realize that in the exudition they see clinging to the Sweet Gum tree there is a powerful stimulating expectorant principle, and in the old field Mullein a mucilaginous one that is very healing to the lungs. These two principles presents in Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein, a pleasant and effective cure for Croup, Whooping Cough, Colds and Consumption. Price 25cts and $1.00. This with Dr. Biggers' Southern Remedy, an equally efficacious remedy for Cramp-Colic, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, and children suffering from the effects of teething presents a little MEDICINE CHEST no household should be without, for the speedy relief of sudden and dangerous attacks of the lungs and bowels. The Professions Unit.

Mr. C. H. Draper, of No. 228 Main street, Worcester, Mass., volunteers the following:

"Having occasion recently to use a remedy for kidney disease, I applied to my druggist, Mr. D. B. Williams, of Lincoln Square, this city, and requested him to furnish me the best kidney medicine that he knew of, and he handed me a bottle of Hunt's Remedy, stating that it was considered the best because he had sold many bottles of it to his customers in Worcester, and they all speak of it in the highest terms, and proncunce it always reliable. I took the bottle home and commenced taking it, and find that it does the work effectually; and I am pleased to recommend to all who have kidney or liver disease the use of Hunt's Remedy, the sure cure."

April 11, 1883.

We All Say So.

Mr. George A. Burdett, No. 165 Front street, Worcester, Mass., has just sent us the following, directly to the point:

"Being afflicted with ailments to which all humanity is subject sooner or later, I read carefully the advertisement regarding the remarkable curative powers of Hunt's Remedy, and as it seemed to apply to my case exactly, I purchased a bottle of the medicine at Jannery's drug store in this city, and having used it with most beneficial results in my own case, my wife and son also commenced its use, and it has most decidedly improved their health, and we shall continue its use in our family under such favorable results."

Druggist's Evidence.

Mr. George W. Holcomb, druggist, 129 and 131 Congress street, Troy, N. Y., writes April 7, 1883:

"I am constantly selling Hunt's Remedy for diseases of the kidneys, liver, bladder, and urinary organs, to my trade and friends, and find that it gives general satisfaction to all who use it."

Another Life Saved.

J. C. Gray, of Dadeville, Ala., writes us: "I have been using your Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and I can say, of a truth, it is far superior to any other lung preparation in the world. My mother was confined to her bed four weeks with a cough, and had every attention by a good physician, but he failed to effect a cure; and when I got one bottle of your Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, she began to mend right away. I can say in truth that it was the means of saving her life. I know of five cases that Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam has cured, and my mother is better than she has been for twenty years."

THE CHURCHYARD BY THE SEA.

A MEMORY.

Across the waste of years I see
One spot forever soft and green
Which, shrined within my memory,
In evening glow or morning sheen,
Tells of the golden vanished years,
When smiles came oftener far than tears.

A churchyard by the restless sea,
Where in deep, calm and dreamless sleep,
The Dead lay resting peacefully,
Unheeding the tempestuous deep;
Careless alike of sun and breeze,
Or sobbing of those changeful seas.

And oft when shipwreck and despair
Came to the little sea-boat town,
Pale women, with dishevelled hair,
To the wild shore went hurrying down,
And tenderly dead eyes would close,
And smooth dead limbs for long repose.

Full many a weary, storm-tossed wight,
Year after year, in quiet was laid,
Safe from the blustering storms of night
In this green spot and undismayed,
Slept close beside the breakers' roar,
Whose wrath should mar his rest no more.

And over each low-sleeping head,
Where thyme turf grew green and soft,
The wild bee hummed, and rosy-red
The brier-flower bloomed, and up aloft
The fleecy clouds went drifting by
Like shades, across the summer sky.

And ever as the years go by,
And one by one old memories creep
From out the sweet past solemnly,
I seem to see, beside the deep,
That little, lonely, silent spot,
With many a childish dream enwrought.

A Lover's Dilemma.

HOW HE TOOK THE BREAD OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF A BAKER'S CUSTOMERS.

Translated from the French for the Phila. Call.

Ponparlin-en-Bigarrau was by all odds the most wearisome town in the whole department of the Garonne-Inferieure.

Among its 8,500 inhabitants it contained only eight pretty girls, a fact that disgusted all the young men living within its limits.

One of these eight pretty girls was Berthe, daughter of M. Agenor Malenfrond, one of the two rival bakers of the town. Berthe was sweet 16, and would have had plenty of adorers had not her father pitilessly driven away all the young men who had ever ventured to pay her even the slightest attention. M. Malenfrond had amassed considerable money, and did not wish his daughter to become the wife of a gallant without a sou.

Stanislas Coquelard, the town notary's youthful clerk, was gifted with a sentimental soul. He had just reached that age when the heart opens to love as the corolla of a flower to the kisses of the breeze. Stanislas thought that Ponparlin should furnish him with other happiness than contemplating the broad meadows during the day and listening to the song of the nightingales during the night.

It was toward the close of April, and, while he conscientiously copied the notary's documents, the young clerk thought of the charming Berthe, and wondered what he could do to get into the good graces of her hard-hearted father, who, by the way, was a widower. Stanislas had read in the young girl's eyes that she was dissatisfied with her lot, and firmly believed that she would not be averse to accepting his heart and hand if ever he got an opportunity to offer them to her.

Stanislas Coquelard was twenty, and had abundant faith in the belief that his time would come.

The notary's house was situated opposite the bakery, and occasionally the clerk had exchanged through the windows more than one furtive glance with the pretty Berthe.

Every morning on his way to the notary's, he stopped at the bakery and bought a sou loaf of Berthe, as he paid for it, he rolled his eyes after the fashion of a young man who is desperately smitten and intends that the object of his adoration shall know it.

On her side, the baker's daughter was far from regarding Stanislas in a way to discourage him.

Such a state of things could not last very long without producing the usual result.

The baker made his bread during the day, then went to bed and did not rise until it was time to begin baking, toward half-past ten at night.

One evening the clerk, taking advantage of the moment when M. Malenfrond was still slumbering while awaiting the hour at which his nocturnal toil was to commence, fell at Berthe's feet and began a speech, to which he added the most expressive pantomime. He ended by asking her to marry him.

Berthe, unused to such masculine eloquence, was melted, and in a low voice consented to unite her destiny to his.

Stanislas, greatly affected, kissed Berthe several times so enthusiastically that he awakened M. Malenfrond, who slept in a chamber over the back shop.

The baker listened, and thought he recognized the hand of his apprentice who had been sick for a week. Overjoyed, he leaped out of bed, crying;

"Wait a little, my boy, and I'll help you knead the bread! I'm coming down!"

The lovers stared at each other in consternation. At that instant the stairs creaked beneath the baker's heavy tread.

How was Stanislas to escape? The stairway was between the shop and the room in which were the two turtle doves!

There was not a second to be lost, Berthe, who had a good head, extinguished the lamp and whispered to the terrified Stanislas:

"Hide yourself quickly in that chest over there and don't be afraid. I'll take care of everything!"

Coquelard followed her recommendation and felt his way along the wall in the direction Berthe had indicated with a rapid gesture. In the darkness he missed the chest but encountered the dough trough; he felt a lid beneath his fingers, lifted it, and, as nimbly as a squirrel in danger, leaped into the box.

He came down amid the dough with a thud, but he had the presence of mind to draw the lid over him.

At that moment the baker entered the apartment.

"Sacrebleu!" growled he, "there is no light here!"

Berthe instantly replied:

"It's the fault of this wretched lamp. I tried to turn up the wick, but it went out. That lazy Nicole must have forgotten to put oil in it!"

A two minutes' search ensued; then came the scratching of matches, and the lamp was lighted again.

"What!" exclaimed M. Malenfrond, "are you alone? Why, I thought I heard some one a kneading a little while ago!"

"You had the nightmare, father!" answered the daughter, soothingly. "Why, who on earth could be here? Gervais, our apprentice, is still sick and won't be out of bed for a week to come."

"Then I didn't hear right. But now I'm up I'll go to work!"

And the baker, rubbing his hands to get them in working trim, went to the dough trough and raised the lid.

At that moment a great clammy hand arose from the depths of a box, hurling fragments of soft dough in every direction. "What's that—what's that?" exclaimed M. Malenfrond, drawing back a couple of paces. "Who the deuce is in the dough——"

He did not finish. An enormous plaster of dough was applied to his face with a splash, cutting short his exclamations and blinding him at the same time.

The baker was conscientious in the exercise of his trade. His dough was well kneaded, and, though he made tremendous efforts to scrape the plaster from his visage, two or two minutes elapsed before he was able to open his eyes and speak.

During the whole of this scene, Berthe, paralyzed with astonishment, had not stirred.

When her father had succeeded, unaided, in ridding himself of his plaster, she recovered her senses and began to cry:

"Oh, mon Dieu!" it must be a robber!"

"Ah, the scoundrel!" groaned poor Malenfrond. "Where is he, that I may knock him down!"

And, all sticky as he was, he rushed to the dough-trough.

It was empty, and empty in every sense. Stanislas in his flight had dragged off on his person all the baker's dough. He had left in the bottom of the box only his shoes, that would have bothered him in running.

"Ouf!" cried the unfortunate baker. "The thief! I cannot bake to-night. He has taken the bread out of the mouths of more than ten families!"

During this time the clerk, all covered with dough, hastened as well as he could toward the shop of the other baker, which was not far away.

The latter received this farinaceous mass with the greater affability, as he brought with him fifteen or eighteen livres of dough. He scraped the clerk so conscientiously that the next day some of the inhabitants of the town found in their loaves, one a plug of tobacco, another a porte-monnaie containing eighteen sous, a third a pocket-handkerchief and a bunch of keys.

The luckiest had for his share a sheet of stamped paper.

This worked against M. Malenfrond's rival, who, accused of inattention to business, lost a part of his customers, thus once again proving that wrongly-acquired property never benefits any one.

A few weeks afterward Stanislas ventured to ask M. Malenfrond for his daughter's hand. As the clerk had received a legacy of a few thousand francs, the baker gave his consent, and even took him into partnership in the bakery shortly after his marriage with Berthe had been duly celebrated.

As for M. Malenfrond, he was kept in strict ignorance of the real nature of the episode of the dough-trough, and he never afterward went to bed without having first cautioned his daughter to be on the watch for robbers.

"You see, Berthe," he often said to her, "it is not enough to keep an eye on the shop, the dough-trough must also be watched, and for that there's nothing like the eye of the master or that of the mistress!"

Women at Sea.

The life which women lead on board ship, says the Aquatic Monthly, is usually a monotonous one. Their quarters are close and their social opportunities are quite limited. The captain's wife may tire of the society of her husband or of the constant care of her children. If she wishes to go out to walk, she is confined to the quarter-deck. A flirtation during her airing with one of the mates or carpenter would be beneath her. If she happens to be good-looking, the vessel will constantly swing a few points out of its course, for the man at the wheel will keep his eye on her as long as she continues her promenade. She may make an occasional excursion to the forward part of the ship, but even in that novelty she finds little to attract her. A passing vessel arouses her interest, and a hurricane relieves, to a certain extent, the monotony of her existence; but these blessings do not come along every day. She has no one to gossip with but the stewardess, and they find few matters of recent date which are worth discussing at any great length. The captain's wife may be as gay as she chooses without causing any scandal, but, unfortunately, she has very little to stimulate whatever desire for gayety she may possess. She has some advantages, however, for she is able to keep an eye on her husband. How or where he spends his evenings is no mystery to her.

"Is your mother in?" asked a visitor of a little Mormon boy who opened the door. "Yes, ma'am," the little boy replied, "but my brother's mother is in."

DEATHS FROM TRICHINOSIS.

Terrible Results Which Followed Eating Raw Pork—Four Lives Lost.

A letter from Loyalhanna, Pa., says:—Two more of the seven persons who ate a quantity of raw pork about six weeks ago, died at the residence of Hans Galle, near here. Four persons, all women, have thus fallen victims to the first authenticated cases of trichinosis in the State of Pennsylvania.

About a year ago Christian Schilitzer, his wife Emmeline and daughter Bessie, Hans Galle, his wife Catharine and daughter Marguerite and Edward Clapter, a young friend of the Schilitzers, came to this country as emigrants. They settled in Columbia county, but during the recent floods in the Susquehanna river their homes were inundated and they lost a portion of what little worldly goods they possessed. They were very poor, and, crushed by this misfortune, moved some weeks since to a little hamlet near here. They had nothing to eat, and made their wants understood with extreme difficulty.

Among them they mustered enough money to buy some meat, and it was decided they should have pork. Christian Schilitzer accordingly came and purchased a fat pig. The animal was dressed whole (according to the fashion in some parts of Germany), garnished with raw onions, red pepper and salt, but was not cooked. A family feast ensued, of which all the persons partook. One week afterward Mrs. Schilitzer died, having for several days suffered violent pains in the stomach and curious creeping and stinging sensations in her limbs. A physician was called in, but, it is said, did not seem to understand the character of the disease.

Mr. Schilitzer, however, who had served in the Prussian army and had seen cases of trichinosis, suspected the existence of this malady, and a piece of flesh from one of his wife's legs was taken to Pittsburg for examination. An anaylsis disclosed the presence of millions of minute pin shaped worms with pointed heads, which had burrowed in all the tissues of the unfortunate woman's body. Mrs. Schilitzer at length died of strangulation, a mass of the worms being found to have crawled into her throat and stopped it up.

In the meantime all the others who ate of the pig had been prostrated. Christian Schilitzer, Hans Galle and another daughter, younger than Marguerite, are not now expected to recover. They suffer terribly, and Schilitzer's arms have been eaten away until only a thread of the muscles remains.

The Real Truth.

The London Truth sums up the Egyptian question in the following way: "The real truth in regard to our interference in Egypt is that we went there for the bondholders, that we have remained for the bondholders, and that every effort is being made to force us to remain for the bondholders. We have no European mandate, we are fulfilling no civilizing mission, and as a country, we should be losers rather than gainers were Egypt made over to us to-morrow as a free gift. Europe is not sorry to see us weaken ourselves, and does not object to our drawing the chestnuts out of the fire for others. The Egyptians dislike us because we are Westerns and Christians, whilst they are Easterns and Mahometans. We are in precisely the same fix as was Austria in Lombardy. If we establish any form of representative government that is a reality and not a sham, the first use that will be made of it will be to bow us out of the country, bag and baggage. A certain number of wealthy and powerful persons who have already made millions out of the Egyptian fleshpots wish to make a few millions more. 'Unified at 80' is their cry. For this we have spent nearly five millions of our money—for this we are called upon to undertake compromising responsibilities, and to act as taskmasters over the fellahs. Yes, 'Unified at 80'—this is, in plain words, our civilizing mission. All the rest is shuffling and subterfuge, trickery and clap-trap. It is to the credit of the Prime Minister that he is one of the few who perceive this."

Old Soldiers.

Grant always talks with a cigar in his mouth; Sherman never does. He lays it down somewhere when he starts to make a remark, forgets where he put it, and lights a fresh one when he has finished what he wanted to say. The result is that his desk or the furniture around the room in which he happens to be smoking, is usually loaded with several half-consumed stubs. At his headquarters, when he was in Washington, it was generally the case that these stubs were to be found in every room that he frequented, and the staff officers called them "Sherman's old soldiers."

A PLAIN FUNERAL.—"I want you to promise me one thing," said the late Augustus Sothell, of New York, to his two brothers, Edward and Robert, two days before he died, "that is that when I die you will have no ostentatious funeral. Give me a simple burial, and don't let there be any expensive floral display." The brothers promised to do as the dying man wished and the whole of the funeral services was as simple as possible.

BURDETTE POINTS A MORAL.

The Hawkeye Humorist Tells of a Dog That Went off and Lost Himself.

On the Western farm where much of the summer time of my life was passed we had a dog. There being two or three boys on the farm, we had seven or eight dogs, as a matter of fact, but there was one particular dog, with whose tail I desire to point a moral. He was a hunter. Morning after morning, summer and winter, he went forth to hunt. Night after night he came back home, his hair full of burs, his feet covered with stone-bruises, and his ears pendent with wood-ticks. For seven long years that dog lived on the farm. He gnawed not the bone of idleness, neither was he wise in the conceit of the sluggard, because in all those seven years he hunted all the time, seven days a week. But, alas! like the slothful, he "roasted not that he took in hunting" (Prov. xii., 27). Because he never found anything. Not one single, lone, solitary, lost thing did he find in all those seven years' hunting. Never found a thing. But we kept him, because we believed, indeed we knew, that the dog's intentions were good. He meant well. Every morning as he went forth, happy and confident, he hoped to find something and bring it home with him joyous and triumphant. But never did. And at last, one keen, clear, bracing November day, he went down in the ferny glens and lost himself. We never heard that he died; nobody ever saw him or heard anything of him again; his bark came back no more; he was just lost; he had wrapped the drapery of the unknowable about him and joined the innumerable caravan of intangible things he had been hunting for years. The moral of this passage is self-evident. There are men, even in your own circle of acquaintance, who hunt all their lives and never find anything. They take the Congressional Record for its jokes and read the Nation for political instruction. He goes to the minstrel show for amusement and reads the Washington papers for news. He goes to a summer boarding-house to get cool and takes a vacation that he may rest. He goes to the country for cream and fresh eggs and keeps a horse to save street-car fare. In all this he doeth foolishly. He hunts well enough but not wisely. You must know, my boy, before you go hunting, where to hunt for what you want. You might go deer-stalking all over Coney Island for twenty years and never bring home a pair of branching antlers to hang in the ancestral halls of the flat in which you live.

He Nearly Lost his Pocket-book.

"Tuesday I was down town," says the bad boy, "and an old farmer was walking along in front of me, and I saw him drop his pocket-book on the sidewalk. I yelled to him and pointed to the pocket-book, and told him he dropped it, but he told me to go to the hot place. It was April fool day, and he thought I was fooling him, and he went on laughing, as much as to say no town boy could play any jokes on your uncle Ike. Well, I picked up the pocket-book, and it was a fat one, and I followed the old farmer, and pulled his coat and told him here was his pocket-book, but he hit me side of the jaw and said to go away or he would maul me. I never felt so mean since my girl went back on me, but I didn't want to keep the old man's pocket-book, and I didn't want to be killed trying to deliver it to the owner. So I ran ahead of him and stopped and opened the pocket-book, and when he came up I took out a roll of bills as big as my wrist, and showed them to him, and asked him if he knew whose pocket-book it was. What do you think the old granger did? He took the pocket-book with one hand and took me by the neck with the other, and called me a thief, and said I ought to go to State prison, and he took me into a stairway and set me down and stood on my coat tail so I could not get away, and kept me until he counted all the money in the wallet, cussin' me between every ten dollars he counted, and when he found it was all there, he put the wallet inside his shirt and gave me a lecture about boys growing up to be thieves, and finally he gave me this lead nickle, took his foot off my coat-tail and let me go, and then tried to kick me as I ran away. I don't think that was right. Only for me he would have lost his wallet and probably have gone crazy over the loss."

The Constitution.

Robert Rodney, U. S. N., would like to have the Constitution amended so that no citizen could own more than ten million dollars' worth of property. If Mr. Rodney is afraid of owning more than ten million dollars himself, he can easily give away his surplus wealth, without an amendment. As for the rest of the people, there are comparatively few of them who are troubled that way, and when they are they will manage to get along under the present Constitution, says an exchange.

"My dear boy, the business world is divided into camps, the gamblers and the speculators." "I don't exactly see the difference." "It's very simple. The speculator is the one who gains. When a man loses he is only a gambler!"

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT THE WAGS OF THE PRESS HAVE TO SAY THAT IS AMUSING.

A BOY'S POCKET.

Buckles, and buttons, and top, and marbles and pieces of string, a screw from a rusty old mop, and scraps of a favorite sling. Slate pencils, and part of a lock, some matches and kernels of corn, the wheels of a discarded clock, and remains of a mitten all torn. A jack-knife or two, never sharp, some pieces of bright-colored glass, the rim of an ancient jews'-harp, pens, fish-hooks, and pieces of brass. Old nails, "sweeties," chippings of tin, with bits of a battered-up locket. All these, and much more, are within the depths of a little boy's pocket.—The Continent.

AT THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

"I'll have to consult with a doctor I'm not well."

"What is your trouble?"

"I sleep too much. As soon as I drink eight or ten glasses of beer, I can't keep my eyes open. I think I ought to be bled."

"I can tell you what will spare your eyes, and keep them open. Just you let me sell you, at par, for cash, a thousand shares of some railroad stocks I've got, and you will not be able to get a wink of sleep as long as you have them on your hands. What is riches without health?"—Austin Siftings.

HE DIDN'T FIGURE LIKE THAT.

A German tailor in a village in Canada failed a few days ago and called a meeting of his creditors. An investigation seemed to show that his liabilities were $4,000, and his assets $1,000.

"It thus appears," said one of the creditors, "that you can pay 25 cents on the dollar."

"Vhell, I doan' figure like dot," replied the tailor.

"How do you figure?"

"Vhy, I pays feefty cents on der dollar."

"How can you do that when your assets only allow one-fourth?"

"Vhell, I prings the odder money down from der house."

He was not permitted to fail.

CONSOLING.

Mrs. Minks—"Who would have thought that that lovely Mrs. Blank, who was a bride only a few years ago should now be suing for a divorce?"

Mrs. Finks—"I do not blame her. Her husband abused her terribly."

Mrs. Minks—"Why, when they were married her husband was just as devoted as dear John is to me. I would die if I thought that in a few years he could change that way."

Mrs. Finks—"Oh, don't alarm yourself, he won't."

Mrs. Minks—"You are sure, then?"

Mrs. Finks—"Certain. All your money is in your name."—Philadelphia Evening Call.

WHAT IT TAUGHT.

Mrs. Bilkson—"I hope this, Mr. Bilkson, will be a warning to you."

Mr. Bilkson—"What are you talking about, anyhow?"

Mrs. Bilkson—"An item in this paper. It says: 'A man in Springfield, Me., being invited to drink, poured out a glass of whisky, looked at it a moment, and then dropped dead.' Now, just remember that, Mr. Bilkson, the next time you are asked to drink. It teaches a terrible lesson."

Mr. Bilkson—"Yes, indeed. Delays are dangerous."—Evening Call.

OVER, LONG AGO.

"How long have you been married, Mrs. Slowbody?"

"Five years."

"Five years? Why, you ought to have a wooden wedding."

"Have," replied Mrs. Slowbody, glancing across at the meek figure of a man trying to hide behind a newspaper, "had that when I was married."—Burlington Hawkeye.

AN EXPLANATION.

"How far is it from the City Hall to the Battery?" asked one New Yorker of another.

"According to the city map it is a mile, but I've walked it and I find it much longer."

"I can explain that discrepancy. The city map does not go into every other saloon between the two places.—Texas Siftings.

HE STRUCK IT RICH.

"That's my uncle over there," said a fast young man to his fast companion; "we're pretty near broke and I'll strike him for a raise. He won't go back on me. Bet you the drinks I'll strike him for a ten and get it."

The bet was made and the young man "struck" his uncle. A long conversation ensued. Finally the young man returned, his face flushed with triumph and some bills in his hand.

"I told you I'd make it," he said, "maybe we can make a hit on roulette with this."

Then his companion looked at the bills, and there were only two $1 notes.

"But you didn't get $10, did you?" he inquired.

"Yes, I did," replied the nephew, as his tone changed to one of coldness, "only I had to take the other $8 out to guest advice."—Chicago Herald.

FROM TIPPERARY.

Two hot-tempered Celts from Battle row were in Yorkville Police Court yesterday. One had stabbed the other with a night key. The man who did the stabbing said, in extenuation of the act:

"He called me a flamin' sucker."

"What if he did?" said the Justice.

"Oi'll allow no man to call me that."

"Why not? What is a sucker?"

"Shure, Oi don't know."

"How do you know but what it is a complimentary term?"

"It may be, yer honor; but Moike niver mint it for a compliment."

"Don't you know that natives of the great State of Illinois are called suckers?"

"Oi did not, but Oi do now. Oi'm shure Moike niver mint to call me a native av that place, for well he knows Oi'm from Tipperary."—N. Y. Sun.

LIFE AMONG THE MORMONS.

"My dear," said a Mormon wife to her husband, "I should think that you would be ashamed of yourself, flirting with that Miss B. as you did in church to-day."

"Flirting with her?" he replied in astonishment. "Why we have been engaged for more than three months. It's all over town."

"Oh, I beg your pardon," said his wife indifferently. "If you are engaged to her, I suppose it is all right. When does the happy event occur?"—Philadelphia Call.

DULL TIMES.

Canadian Hotel Keeper—"I don't see how we are to get along. The house is about empty, yet it is impossible to reduce expenses. Look over the American papers and see what the news is."

Hotel Clerk—"I have looked over them. There has not been a big defalcation in the United States for two weeks."

Canadian Hotel Keeper—"My stars! we will be ruined. I never knew the times to be so dull."

HE COULDN'T STAND IT.

"Why are you home so early?" asked a wife of her husband. "Is the singing school exhibition out already?"

"No; not more than half out," he replied.

"Why didn't you stay to the close? Weren't you interested in the singing?"

"I was until a sixteen-year-old boy attempted to sing 'Larboard Watch Ahoy.' Then I thought I would come home, go to bed and try to forget all about it."

IN WANT OF MONEY.

"Can you give me a little money on that account of yours this morning?"

"No, I don't believe I can this morning."

"Well, will you appoint a time when you can? You have traded with me a great deal and have never paid me a cent."

"I know it. I am a free trader."

In the Lime-Kiln Club.

Trustee Pullback offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, Dat when a pusson has bin tried in due form, convicted by an honest jury an' sentenced to prison by a Judge in whom the people have confidence, de criminal should stay dar' until his sentence has expired."

Giveadam Jones moved that the roll be called upon the vote, and this being done Shindig Watkins was the only name marked as opposing the resolution.

"Dis resolushun kivers a subject of deepest interest to de people at large," said Brother Gardner when the vote had been pronounced. "A robber or embezzler or defaulter or thief or even murderer kin sit down with a piece of chalk in one han' an' a shingle in de odder an' make clus figures on dis matter. De murderer strikes his victim an' makes a break. De papers howl, de detectives rush an' de public talk of lynchin'. If he am not picked up right away dar' am a fusilade agin' de officers. When he am caught dar' am great anxiety to push him to trial. When he am tried an' convicted dar' am a heap of sweet talk 'bout de majesty of the law. He gits, say, fifteen y'ars in prison. He orter have bin sent fur life, but it was shown dat he was drunk, or his grandfadder was insane, or his great grandmudder had allus acted a leetle queer. Befo' a y'ar has passed away somebody begins to pity. In de course of two or free y'ars de prosecutin' attorney begins to relent. A petition am drawn up an' de jury finds dey was mistaken, de Judge discovers dat he sentenced de wrong man, an' de Gub'ner am asked to exercise de pardonin' power to restore a perfectly innocent man to society!"—Detroit Free Press.

CHILTON VIEW.

Issued Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., JUNE 5, 1884.

Take your county paper and keep posted. You will never miss the money, and the paper will be a weekly reminder of a good investment.

The Democratic State Convention met in Montgomery yesterday. O'Neal for Governor; Phelan for Secretary of State, and Smith for Treasurer will without doubt be renominated by acclamation. The other officers will probably be new.

It begins to look as if Gen. Wheeler will get the nomination for Congress in the Eighth District. The Moulton Advertiser says that Franklin, Colbert, Lauderdale, Lawrence, Morgan and Jackson, are all solid for Wheeler, leaving Limestone and Madison still to decide between him and Judge Richardson.

While we are eating peaches and plums in Alabama, reports come of damage done to crops by frost in the North and West on Wednesday. At Monticello, N. Y., ice formed on the ponds, and water froze a quarter of an inch in Ohio. The fruit crop in those sections was almost cut entirely off.

Linked together in the holy bonds of matrimony, the 17th inst., in Greensboro, by Hon. J. M. Hobson, Jobe Richardson and Miss Mary Jane Simmons, both of Beat No. 8, Hale county. Miss Simmons, a maid of over 40 summers, and Uncle Jobe in his 63d year, a widower of fifty-one days.

The North Alabamian says: "It is amusing to hear some people talk about editors having such an easy time in the world; only two or three days tight work in the week; make their money easier than any other class of men; can go away from home and splurge at any time, etc. But if they only knew the real facts—how much hard labor is done by the midnight lamp when they are sleeping sweetly; how much of that work is gratuitous, for which even thanks are not received; how they are misjudged by people who willfully misconstrue their writings; and, lastly, how many people actually repudiate their debts with them—they might arrive at the conclusion that the editor's life is not the easiest after all."

"Let Us Organize."

Ed. Chilton View:

In order that the county convention to be held at Clanton may act effectively and untrammelled, it is of prime importance that the several beats have a full attendance at their meetings, and that a free discussion be there had of the advisability of making nominations for county offices.

This is a question to come before the county convention, and it is the duty of the people to see that the convention shall be composed of representative men, who shall be fully informed as to the wishes of the beats they severally represent. Unless the convention is held under these conditions, an attempt in this way to perfect our party organization as well as to insure a good corps of county officers, may prove abortive. I am informed there is a growing feeling in the county in favor of making nominations, and it may not be amiss to have some discussion of the matter. It will be conceded by all that trustworthy and efficient men should be elected to posts of public service, no matter what the nature of those posts may be—and it is well to consider whether there can be any better way devised to secure such a result, than the system of nominating by county conventions. Is it not the only way by which the choice of the people can be ascertained?

When a beat holds a meeting of its citizens and they choose their representative men as delegates to the county convention, and when that convention composed of such delegates assembles, is it not absolutely a concentration of the people? No body of people scattered over any considerable extent of territory, can have concert of action except in two ways—by assembling en masse, or by assembling by their representatives in convention. Of the two, the former has always been unsatisfactory, because of its unwieldiness to the transaction of business. We must have recourse to the latter, and I hold that in order to [illegible] all [illegible] full meetings in the different beats. Having done this, it will be our duty to abide by the action of the county convention, composed of delegates whom we have selected. I am and ever shall be, in favor of making nominations by convention; in fact, see no other way to get at a choice by the people. If we make no nomination, any one is at liberty to offer himself, and a dozen candidates for each office may be in the field, and no matter who is elected, he cannot be said to be the choice of the people. He may have a majority of the whole number of votes polled in the county, and still be no choice of the people, for many might vote for him on the principle, "that in a choice of evils it is best to choose the least."

One of the objections offered to the nomination of county officers is that we have a Democratic county, and so largely so, that with any number of candidates we will be sure to have a Democrat. This is a most pernicious idea. We want not only a Democrat, but we want the best one we've got, and we will never find him except by means of a Convention. Besides, I have none of this sense of security. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." I have been educated in a school where it was impressed upon me that it was best to keep the Republican party out when you had them out, and I am not disposed to take any chances in the matter. Let everything be as absolutely sure as you can make it. This alluring and insidious idea that we have no foe may for aught we know be promulgated by a "Gift-bearing Greek." Like the Trojan, I fear them; and believe a perfect party organization the best mode of resisting them. There is no better time to prepare for war than a time of peace. There is no more effective soldiery than a drilled soldiery, and there is no greater necessity than that which now exists of having a thoroughly organized party—a party pledged to an honest administration of public affairs, and also pledged (to secure that end) to the election of honest and capable men to positions of public trust.

Let us, therefore, attend our beat meetings, instruct our delegates to make nominations. And then let us vote for them.

Phosphate Boom.

Marion Standard.

We learn that Mr. Charles Gibson, a distinguished geologist from Chicago, visited the phosphate beds at Hamburg last week in the interest of wealthy companies at Baltimore and Philadelphia, which last year sold over 60,000 tons of fertilizers. Dr. Gibson was sent here on a prospecting tour with a view of buying up lands in order to start works for manufacturing the phosphates into fertilizers, and he told our informant that the phosphate beds are very valuable and he thought extended from the Alabama river across to Eutaw. He went Friday to Eutaw to meet Prof. Smith to make an examination at that place for phosphates. An evidence of the importance of this discovery parties have already declined $25.00 per acre for lands that have for years been valued at about three dollars per acre and we are told that fifty dollars per acre has been offered for one tract.

Mr. Hewitt's Business and his Bill.

Washington, May 16.—Mr. Morrison to-day received a letter from H. W. Oliver, Jr., of Pittsburg, in which, referring to the Hewitt Tariff bill, the writer says: "The duty on wire is advanced half a cent per pound. The duty on iron rods, in coils or loops, is advanced from 6-10 of a cent to 12-10 cents per pound. Steel wire rods, in effect, are made free. Mr. Hewitt, therefore, modifies the duties on metals as follows: First—He increases the duty on wire, of which he is one of the largest manufacturers in the United States, half a cent per pound. Second—He doubles the duty on iron rods, of which he is the largest manufacturer in the country. Third—He places steel rods, of which he is a large consumer and which he does not manufacture, practically on the free list. With the exception of placing ore and tin plate on the free list, the foregoing are about all the changes Mr. Hewitt makes in the metal schedule." Mr. Oliver suggests that so far as the metal schedule is concerned the bill might be placed on the private calendar and entitled "A bill for the benefit of Cooper, Rew-

Farmer Notes.—Last Tuesday Sabbath school picnic came off May 31st. Also at an early hour the Rocky Mount Sabbath School, teachers and all, came in a beautifully organized march, to join with the happy throng of Jemisonites at the shady grove in front of Mr. Ira Campbell's dwelling, where all, old and young, spent a truly happy, bright and breezy day. They were called to order by Superintendent J. P. Allen, who read the programme of the day and offered an earnest prayer. After which, on the stand, he introduced little Leroy Campbell, of Jemison school, who gave a short, sweet speech. Followed by Rev. R. A. Miears, who was giving a beautiful metaphorical address, when he was compelled to succumb to sudden physical weakness, ere he was half way through. Next came Rev. Geo. Lee, of Helena, who, with much enthusiasm, for an hour told us of the importance, sacredness and grand beauty of Sabbath schools. And his remarks were so interlaced, and so intrinsic, that we felt a little nearer Heaven than previously. The services being interspersed by organ music furnished by Miss Bettie Anderson, and the sweet singing furnished by our choir, we must say that all and all made us wish for more Sabbath school entertainments. Next was the exquisite march taken up by one hundred and sixty school attendants, following a flag bearing the emblem, "No cross, no crown." Thence to the table which was bountifully spread, and where the keen appetites of all were satisfied. In the afternoon gleeful children, happy old folks, made more so by music by Mrs. Smith, of Jemison, and Miss Maggie Love, of Birmingham. There was one notable absence, for "Ono" could not get his peepers on the editor of the View in all the crowd.

How to Break a Boy.

LaFayette Sun.

To break a boy to work is as easy as training a mule to plough, if you begin right and commence in time. But the toughest job we ever undertook was to learn our lad the printer's trade. He vowed he was never cut out for a printer, and couldn't learn the trade. We tried to convince him that he bore many marks of his father, and endevored to coax and hire him to take hold. We gave him good clothes and pocket change, let him go to circuses and play base ball the entire season. Yet, with all this he never improved. At last we hit upon a new idea. So, bright and early one morning we called him in the office, and with all the tenderness of a father said: "My son, I'll bet you this new silver quarter that I can set a stick of type before you can." The little fellow was anxious for a bet as he had been very fortunate winning sweeps, and was just about the right age to think himself smarter than his "daddy," and sure enough he won the quarter. In 15 minutes he had finished a stick, correct to a letter.

"Now, my son, get your quarter, you won it fairly; you put up type at the rate of two columns a day; there was not an error in your stick; as a type setter you are superior to your "daddy", and, young man, from now on I want you to be the first one in the morning to hang your coat on a nail in this office and the last in the evening to take it off. Your failure to do this will call forth a thrashing of such a nature that your mother will have to wear spectacles to recognize her darling boy."

It is useless to add that our boy is now foreman in the office, and takes up collections at the church.

A Model Love Letter.

The following is published as a model for young gentlemen who are in doubt as to a proper expression of their sentiments of affections for their Aramintas:

"Dearest Mamie: My love is stronger than the smell of coffee, patent butter, or the kick of the young cow. Sensations of exquisite joy go through an army cracker, and caper over my heart like young goats on a stable roof. I feel as if I could lift myself up by my boot straps to the height of a church steeple, or like an old stage horse in a green pasture.—As the mean pup hankers after sweet milk, so do I hanker after your presence. And as the gosling swimmeth in the mud puddle, so do I swim in a sea of delightfulness when you are near me. My heart plays up and down like a churn dasher, and my eyes stand open like a cellar door in a country town; and if my love is not reciprocated, I will pine away and die like a poisoned bedbug, and you can come and catch cold on my grave.

"Yours, lovingly, J."

Mrs. May, living at Mountain Creek, a daughter of Judge Jefferson Falkner, was bitten on the hand by a ground rattle-snake one day last week. At one time her condition was considered critical, but we are glad to say that she is now recovering from the effects of the bite.

Summer is fast approaching. Small fruit is ripening. Spring chickens are growing and picnics on docket.

Small fires were found very agreeable the cold mornings of the past week.

Rev. A. L. Blizard, of Columbia, Ala., visited some of his old friends at this place last week.

We were in error regarding Mrs. A. J. Brook's illness. We should have said Mrs. Floyd Brooks. We regret that this lady is still confined by illness.

Mrs. J. A. Prescott, of Montgomery, spent a week with the family of her father, Mr. W. B. Strock.

Mr. J. W. Shores, Jr., with his bride, both of Autauga county, paid a visit to acquaintances at this place while on their bridle tour.

A party of young folks from here had a picnic at Oates' Mill last Saturday. They report a pleasant time.

Mr. R. L. Thompson, late night operator at this station, has been transported to New Castle where he will have the position of agent and operator.

Mr. Wm. McCord, of Pulaski, Tenn., is now working as night operator. We believe that he is the tallest man Verbena has ever had within her bounds.

Our "dear patient John" now walks along our streets with a look of mute suffering and calm resignation on his once ruddy face. He has found a man of higher statue than he himself could boast of.

The Baptist Sunday school will have a children's concert on the third Sunday of this month.

Mr. Josiah Morris and family, of Montgomery, have moved into their Summer cottage.

There is a growing sentiment among our people to select none but earnest prohibition workers for State and county officers.

Rev. J. L. Thompson preached a forcible sermon on the training of children last Sunday.

Verbena Academy closes with review exercises embracing three days ending on Friday June 13th. The public are invited to attend.

To the People of Chilton.

The undersigned desires herein to return to the people of Chilton county his sincere thanks for the favors received from them and for the kindness that has been shown to him during the past four years that he has been their servant in the office of Tax Collector. The term of my office soon expires, and I must say that I feel truly thankful for the success that I have met with during the time I have served. I have tried to do my duty, and if I have wronged any person or the State or county in any way, I am sure that it was not intentional on my part.

I have been solicited by many of my friends to offer for the office again, which I have consented to do and I feel assured that the people are acquainted with me sufficiently to know whether they want me to collect the tax another term or not. In submitting my name to the people as a candidate for the office again, I hereby pledge my word that if elected, I will do my duty as best I can.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilized man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and renew all these secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful restorative and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

Music—"Bo-Peep March"—Master Orman Duke.

Valedictory by Miss Belle Smith.

Music by Miss Scott:
"Arabesken"—"Lange."

Each pupil acquitted himself in a manner deserving of the highest eulogy, and Miss Scott had the pleasure of seeing her efforts, and the efforts of her pupils crowned with success. The music was rendered without a discord, and the recitations delivered in an intelligent and pleasing style.

The extreme illness of Miss Bessie Bivings prevented her attendance. But for which misfortune, she, with her music and recitations, would doubtless, as well as each of her schoolmates, merited a laurel wreath.

During the ten months term of Miss Scott's school, she has, with untiring energy and devotion to her work, given entire satisfaction to her patrons, both in music and the literary department; and the people of Mill Town will congratulate themselves, if, in the future, they are able to procure the services of so efficient a teacher.

In leaving the community Miss Scott carries with her the love and admiration of her pupils, the highest respect and gratitude of her patrons, and the esteem of many friends.

NORA ACKLEN.

A Correction.

In a recent issue of this paper the following was published as an item of genuine interest to the public:

"We learn of a most distressing death which occurred near Mountain Creek, about a week since. It was rumored here that two sisters became involved in a difficulty, and one of them was kicked to death by the other."

The above was the substance of the rumor as it appeared in these columns. We have since learned, from the very best authority, that the rumor was without foundation in fact, and that the deceased sister came to her death from an attack of congestion. We are glad, indeed, to be able to correct such a false and damaging rumor.

Lomax.

MR. EDITOR:—I had the pleasure a few nights since of being present at the closing exercises of Miss Lee's school at the residence of the hospitable Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Maull, Lomax. Not remembering the names of the little Misses and Masters who acquitted themselves so creditably, I cannot make personal mention of any. Suffice it to say, that each and every participant acted their parts in a very perfect and praiseworthy manner, and reflected great credit upon their fair instructress. The exhibition consisted of music, charades, recitations, &c. H.

True Heroism.

New York Morning Journal.

In the American navy the dying words of the gallant Lawrence, "Never give up the ship," have become historic. At Boston, a few days ago, as described in our dispatches yesterday morning, an humble pressman in a newspaper office uttered words that almost deserve a place side by side with those of the noble commander. Extricated from the whirling presses, he gasped with his last breath: "Go ahead with the press, boys. Get the edition off and don't lose any bundles." The readers of the paper a few hours later, little suspected that a life had gone out in the effort to bring it to them fresh with the story of the world.

ESTRAY NOTICE.

Take notice that on or about the 12th day of May, 1884, two certain mules found estray, were taken up by W. C. Hester. The value of said animals having been duly appraised according to law by two disinterested house-holders, summoned by J. P. Vanderveer, N. P. and ex-officio J. P. for said county and sworn by him and that said appraisers have certified to said N. P. and ex-off. J. P., the value of said animals to be sixty dollars, with the following description. Mare mules over medium size, with no marks except harness marks, dark bay color, in bad order, about 16 hands high, and between 12 and 15 years old.

Exciting Scene in Court.

A dispatch from San Francisco says: The court room during the trial of the Sharon-Hill case was the scene of a great commotion. Mrs. Shawan, a witness for the defence, was on the stand. Judge Tyler, attorney for Miss Hill, was subjecting the witness to a severe cross-examination. He said he proposed to show that the witness had dined at disreputable places and visited an assignation house with strange men. Mrs. Shawan manifested intense excitement, and hurriedly put her hand into her pocket as if to draw a revolver. She was checked, however, by the counsel for the defence, who implored her to keep cool. During the excitement which prevailed McOune Shawan, a man about twenty-three years of age, and son of the witness, approached Judge Tyler, but was stopped by the latter's son, who threatened to shoot him down if he attempted to draw a pistol. Judge Sullivan ordered the witness and her son to be removed from the court, and immediately afterward declared a recess. As the opening of the afternoon session the Judge refused to hear further testimony in the case until assured that every one in the court room was unarmed, and would present a certificate to the policeman at the door to that effect.

The Texas Rustler.

The rustler in Texas, says a local paper, is the cattle king's neighbor, but between them there is a wide gap in rank. A man may own a section of land and have 50, 100, or 200 head of cattle, but he is only a rustler. His herd is "on shares" and his stock is "in bunch." When he counts his pasture, cowpunchers hand up the section instead of by the acre, and he has got "a range," and when his stock is turned on by the thousand instead of by the hundred head he has "a ranch." Then he is a genuine cowman. He pays a live stock commission, he has his brand known and recognized from the Gila to the top tier of the Panhandle counties. He owns part in [illegible] and is a [illegible]

The Purchase of Cuba.

The subject of the annexation of Cuba to the United States was first mooted just after the French Republic was proclaimed, in 1848. The American government, while willing it should remain a Spanish colony, declared that no other foreign government should ever possess it. In 1825 Spain had proposed to cede Cuba to the United States in consideration of certain commercial concessions, but this was declined. In 1848 President Polk offered to buy the island for $1,000,000, but to this Spain would not listen. In 1849 a filibustering expedition under Lopez was prevented by the United States government. A second expedition got away successfully, but Lopez was defeated, and himself garroted and other leaders publicly shot. Since 1852 the question of the acquisition of Cuba has entered freely into American politics. In 1854 Buchanan, Mason and Soule, Americas Ministers at London, Paris and Madrid, drew up the celebrated Ostend manifesto, urging that Cuba should belong to the United States and that if Spain would not sell it it should be taken under certain contingencies, by force.

In 1858-9 the United States Senate considered a proposition to pay thirty million dollars for the island. This was the plan of Siddell, of Louisiana. It was finally withdrawn. The sum named in the bill, which was reported favorably by both the committees of the Senate and House, was proposed to be appropriated for no secret or disguised purpose, but to enable the President to make a payment to the Spanish government, on the full ratification of the treaty by Spain, without waiting for its ratification by the Senate and the appropriation of the money by Congress. A minority report was presented by the House committee which opposed the bill on the ground that Cuba would be an unprofitable acquisition, owing to the necessity of preventing internal disorders which would be sure to arise, and that it would be a dangerous precedent to allow the President to have the disposal of thirty million dollars for the settlement of a treaty before its ratification by the Senate.

The Government Printing-Office.

For producing the immense amount of printed material required by the Government, the Public Printer of the United States has under his direction a large and capable force; this is comprised as follows: One foreman, twelve assistant foremen, two preparers of copy; also fifty-eight proof-readers, at $5.30 per day; four hundred and thirty-five compositors, at $4.00; forty-five pressmen, at $4.00; one hundred and thirty feeders, at $1.87½; twenty-three makers-up, at $5.00; nineteen floor-hands, at $4.50; one hundred and fifty laborers, at $2.50; two hundred and fifty folders, at $30 per month; sixty-three apprentices, at $1.25 to $2.50 per day; sixty additional hands, such as clerks, engineers, watchmen, etc., are also included. The estimate for wages for the current year, for this branch of the department, is $978,190.44; for printing material during the same period, $147,707.00; for printing paper, $674,148.00. The bindery branch employs one foreman, and eight assistant foremen; also, two hundred and twenty-five rulers, at $4 per day; twenty-eight apprentices, at $1.25 to $2.50; twenty-five pagers at $3.12½; one hundred and eleven sewers, at $2.30 to $2.50; thirty-four feeders, at $1.66 2-3; fifty laborers, at $2.50; one hundred and twenty-seven sewers, at $40 per month, and twenty-two additional hands. The estimate for wages is, $462,785.27; for material, $311,750.00. The Congressional Record, for wages and material, is estimated at $245,078.00. The entire estimate for the various departments of the Government printing-office for the fiscal year is $2,500,000.

The Maine Girl's Chewing-Gum.

The Augusta (Me.) Journal says: It cost $2,000 a year to keep Augusta citizens in chewing-gum. Young ladies, especially those in school, are proverbially gum chewers, and it takes no small amount to keep them supplied. A Frenchman from Horeb Falls was in town and marketed 125 pounds of the spruce article. One druggist took 75 pounds. It cost in the neighborhood of $1 a pound. It was prime gum, white and pure from imperfections, was in lumps, and had been carefully scraped and cleansed. The man said that he had 200 pounds of gum at home which he proposed to market in Belfast. Gum from young trees is the best, being of a lighter color and of better flavor than that taken from old trees, which is of a darker shade and has a rank taste. There are men who make gum-gathering a business, and derive a snug little income from this source. But the spruce forests which grow this product are failing, and the day is not far distant when there will be a famine in genuine gum. The lumbermen is making enormous inroads into the ranks of the trees, and the spruce-worm has injured or killed thousands.

Old Tomato Cans Put to New Uses.

The gathering of old tomato cans, a New York paper says, pays handsomely. They are sent to Newark, where fifteen cents a hundred is paid for them. The number found daily in the garbage boxes of this city is tremendous, now that quart cans retail at eight and ten cents apiece. The Newark man gets the empty cans into a furnace, where the solder softens so that they can be rolled into plates. These plates are blackened and polished, and sold by trunk-makers to bind the edges of trunks and cover up defects in woodwork. The original price paid for the old cans is fully returned in the sale of the solder that falls from the cans into a receptacle beneath the furnace through a grating on which the cans are heated.

Pickles Smith in Trouble.

Pickles Smith was requested to walk up the hall, and when he had come to a halt before the platform Brother Gardner said:

"Brudder Smith, I has bin informed dat you has been sued by a grocer for a bill of fo' dollars."

"Yes, sah."

"De bill was fur oysters, dried peaches an' jellies?"

"Yes, sah."

"And why didn't you pay it?"

"Kase Ize hard up, sah."

"Now, Brudder Smith, de member of dis club who kin afford oysters on a salary of $7 per week kin afford to pay fur 'em. If dat debt ain't squr'd up befo' de nex' meetin' you will h'ar sunthin' drap!"

"Yes, sah."

"In bringin' dis performance to a close," said the President, as he nodded to Samuel Shin to strike the triangle, "let me say to one and all of you dat de present ailment of dis hentry am de want of common sense. De man who sires $7 per week wants to lib as well as de man who sires $12, an' dis piles up de debts an' brings about trickery, fraud an' communism. Nobody am satisfied to be what he am. HIS WIT DISCOVERED.—The Oshkosh (Wis.) Times tells the following story: A burglar stole several hundred dollars from a safe. He was caught and the money found on him. His lawyer knew he was guilty, but all the same did his best to clear him. The owner of the money could not swear to its identity, but could swear to a bogus $10 that was with it. The thief was sentenced, but before court adjourned his lawyer made application and received from the court, as attorney, the entire sum of money in question. Of course the owner of the money was [illegible]

The Jeannette Expedition.

WHAT ONE OF THE SURVIVORS SAYS ABOUT FOOD AND TREATMENT.

R. W. Spencer, a machinist, and one of the survivors of the ill-fated Jeannette, arrived in Wheeling W. Va., his home. Speaking of the management of the expedition he said: "I have spent 26 years in traveling about the Arctic Ocean and have taken part in three exploring expeditions, but the Jeannette was the poorest equipped vessel I ever set foot in. The stores we took aboard at San Francisco were frightful. As an example, out of 250 barrels of sugar-cured hams not 3 were fit to eat; they were alive with rottenness and the steward could not stay in the galley while cooking them. The flour, too, was mouldy and full of weevils and utterly unfit for food, I sometimes think somebody must have made a fat thing out of the contract for food, for although Bennett and the Government gave out money like water, we did not have enough good food to keep up our strength, and consequently most of us broke down and died after reaching the Siberian coast. In fact, the Government treated us badly all along, but, of course, the facts will never get out. Why, at St. Petersburg, on the homeward journey, we had to sign orders for our pay before the American Minister would give us transportation to Liverpool, and there we had to sign more orders before we could get passage to America. I have not drawn the rest of my pay yet, nor can I get it until my time expires next fall. We had far better treatment from the Esquimaux than from the Government at Washington."

Horse Notes.

The New York Driving Club will give a great trotting meeting in June.

A. C. Thompson, Odlin, Ill., has purchased from A. G. Barnes, Taylorsville, the bay mare Belle for $6,000.

A movement is on foot to establish in Chicago the American Jockey Club, with a capital stock of $200,000.

Mr. G. L. Lorillard has refused an offer of $15,000 for the bay filly Louisette, three years, by Glenelg.

Charter Oak Park offers the Guaranty Stakes of $10,000 for 2:19 horses again this year. The trot for these rich stakes resulted in a brilliant contest last season.

One of the wonders of the trotting circuit last year was the splendid young chestnut stallion, Duquesne, that made a record of 2:17¼ at Pittsburgh. John Murphy is to train the horse this season.

The stallion Voltaire, with a record within a few seconds of the fastest trotting stallion record in the world, died at Peoria, Ill. The horse was ill only fifteen minutes before his death. He was valued at $6,500

The National Horse Show Association of America will hold their annual show in New York, May 27 to 31. Over $17,500 in prizes are offered, exclusive of special prizes. The prize list has been revised and embraces liberal premiums for thoroughbreds, Arabs, trotters, roadsters, horses of all work, heavy draft horses, Clydesdales, Normans, coaching stallions, carriage horses, four-in-hand teams, saddle horses, cobs, ponies, hunters, fire engine horses, cavalry horses, donkeys and mules.

The Helen Jewett Tragedy.

Capt. Veal, a Texas pioneer, says a newspaper correspondent, was a near neighbor of Richard Parmelee Robinson, a young man of high family, who left New York a fugitive under suspicion of being the murderer of Helen Jewett. The tragedy had certain elements of mystery which made it a great sensation. In Texas Robinson was known only as Richard Parmelee. He kept a livery stable for many years, and his connection with the crime was a secret known to but very few people. In his escape and flight from New York, Robinson was assisted by a friend named Wadsworth, who afterward visited Texas, where Capt. Veal met him and talked over the Jewett case.

"In your conversation was there ever any question raised as to whether Robinson really killed the woman?" the correspondent asked.

"None whatever," replied Capt. Veal. "When we talked about the tragedy it was always upon the understanding that he was the one who did it. Parmelee, as we always called him, led a quiet, respectable life, and very few knew he was Richard Robinson. I recollect when I first met Wadsworth he wouldn't admit that he knew Parmelee by any other name, but when I had convinced him that through my family connections in New York I was intimately acquainted with Robinson's antecedents, he became more communicative."

"The finest hand organ in New York city," says a correspondent, "plays fifteen tunes, and when heard from a distance could easily be mistaken for a full brass band. Its owner became possessed of it in a peculiar manner. On last Christmas eve he appeared in front of the Stock Exchange with a well-worn instrument and began to play. Several hilarious young brokers rushed out and seized him and placed him on the floor of the Exchange. A scramble then ensued, all wishing to turn the crank at once, and in the struggle the organ was irreparably damaged. A well-known broker passed around his hat and obtained nearly $400 for the trembling owner. With this sum he purchased a new organ, and can be seen any day in the vicinity of Wall street. The brokers, I am told, take a sort of proprietary interest in the melodious machine, and the fortunate owner is rapidly making money."

"Do organ grinders ever become wealthy?"

"Well, from their standard of wealth, yes. I have known several to acquire as high as $10,000."

A TRAGIC EVENT.

A Robbery Discovered—Confession of Fourth Son—Parents Accuse, and Sons Deny Guilt—Sons Arrested—Parents Go Bail—Sons Abscond—Parents Die.

The graphic caption of this is descriptive of only one of the most remarkable episodes in the domestic history of America. It is also the truth which can readily be verified.

The inhabitants of the pleasant town of Cortland, N. Y., were shocked and alarmed by the announcement that Mr. Clinton Rindge, one of their most prominent citizens, had committed suicide. The news spread rapidly and aroused the entire neighborhood where Mr. Rindge was so well and favorably known. At first it seemed impossible that any one so quiet and domestic could do so rash a deed, and the inquiry was heard on every side as to the cause. The facts as developed on investigation proved to be as follows:

Mr. Rindge was domestic in his tastes and took the greatest enjoyment in the society of his children and pride in their development. And indeed he had good reason to be proud for they gave promise of long lives of success and usefulness. But an evil day came. His youngest son, William, began to show signs of an early decay. He felt unusually tired each day, and would sometimes sleep the entire afternoon if permitted to do so. His head pained him, not acutely, but with a dull, heavy feeling. There was a sinking sensation at the pit of his stomach. He lost all relish for food and much of his interest for things about him. He tried manfully to overcome these feelings, but they seemed stronger than his will. He began to lose flesh rapidly. The father became alarmed and consulted physicians as to the cause of his son's ills, but they were unable to explain. Finally, some more bright out on his arms and he was taken to Buffalo, where a painful operation was performed resulting in the loss of much blood but affording little relief. The young man returned home and a council of physicians was called. After an exhaustive examination they declared there was no hope of final recovery and that he must die within a very few days. To describe the agony which this announcement caused the father would be impossible. His mind failed to grasp its full meaning at first; then finally he managed to comprehend it, but the load was too great. In an agony of frenzy he seized a knife and took his own life, preferring death for himself than to survive his idolized son. At that time William Rindge was too weak to know what was transpiring. His face had turned black, his breath ceased entirely at times, and his friends waited for his death, believing that the fiend Bright's disease of the kidneys, from which he was a sufferer, could not be removed. In this supreme moment William's sister came forward and declared she would make a final attempt to save her brother. The doctors interposed, assuring her it was useless and that she would only hasten the end by the means she proposed to employ. But she was firm, and putting all back, approached her brother's side and administered a remedy which fortunately had on hand. Within an hour he seemed more easy, and before the day was over he showed signs of decided improvement. These favorable signs continued, and to-day William B. Rindge is well, having been virtually raised from the dead through the marvelous power of Warner's Safe Cure, as can be readily verified by any citizen of Cortland.

Any one who reflects upon the facts above described must have a feeling of sadness. The father, dead by his own hand, supposing his son's recovery to be impossible; the son restored to health to mourn the loss of his father and the agonized relatives with a memory of sadness to forever darken their lives. Had Clinton Rindge known that his son could recover he would to-day be alive and happy, but the facts which turned his brain and caused him to commit suicide were such as any one would accept as true.

However sad the case may be, the truth remains that thousands of people are at this moment in as great actual peril as William Rindge and in as great danger of causing misery if not death to their friends. Liver and kidney diseases are become the most common and most dangerous of any or all modern complaints. They are the most deceptive in their beginnings and horrible in their final stages. They are far more deceptive than consumption, and can rarely be detected even by skillful physicians unless a microscopic analysis be resorted to, and few doctors understand how to do this. Their slightest approach, or possibility of approach should strike terror to the one who is threatened as well as to all his or her friends. These diseases have no distinct symptoms, but come in the form of lassitude, loss of appetite, aching muscles and joints, dull headaches, pains in the back, stomach and chest, sour stomach, recurring signs of cold, irregular pulsations of the heart, and frequent dizziness. If neglected, these symptoms are certain to run into chronic kidney and liver or Bright's disease, from which there is sure to be a great amount of agony and only one means of escape, which is by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. The importance of taking this great remedy upon the slightest appearance of any of the above symptoms cannot be too strongly impressed upon the minds of all readers who desire to escape death and pain and prolong life with all its pleasures and blessings.

English Servants.

Arriving home rather late a few nights back I was accosted by a policeman who was hanging about outside my gate. "Beg pardon, sir; but are you aware of the goings-on of your servants?" "No; what do you mean?" I said rather sharply. "Well, sir, it's just this; there ain't one on 'em about the place." "Oh, nonsense," I said. "Why they've all been in bed and asleep these two hours."

"Excuse me, sir, but if you'll follow me I'll soon convince you that you haven't a servant in your house." Seeing that the man was serious, I followed him to a certain dancing saloon not very far away. I had little difficulty in gaining admittance, and there, sure enough, were cook, housemaid and nurse disporting themselves in the many valse. The nurse was the first one to "spot" me, and I at once began to demonstrate with her for neglecting her special charge—a child in arms. Imagine my horror when, in self-defence, she produced the pride of the family from a cupboard in the corner, where she had carefully stowed it away, so that the enjoyment of the dance might not be interfered with. —London Truth.

Tortured by Authority.

There was a tremendous row a short time ago in the Italian Chamber about the case of a man, accused of theft at Rome, who was tortured in the police-station by the gentlemen who had charge of him for thirty-six hours. They ironed his feet together, and then fastened him to a chain, head downward; and the officials gradually tightened the irons in order to extort a confession. The basis and halting explanation of the Minister excited general indignation. He could only say that "this regrettable act" was "exceptional."

No Rest Day or Night.

In the fall of 1875 my sufferings were terrible. I was swollen to such proportions that I feared my limbs would burst. I had the best medical talent obtainable, and at the worst stage of my illness, when my husband and many friends had given me up to die, the late Dr. John Woodbury made a thorough examination of my water, and pronounced my case acute kidney disease, bordering on Bright's disease, and accompanied by gravel, and recommended the immediate use of Hunt's Remedy. At this time I was suffering most terrible pain in my back, limbs, and head, and could find no rest day or night for weeks, and I was growing weaker daily until this kind physician ordered me to take Hunt's Remedy. Before taking half of one bottle I commenced to improve, and after taking six bottles was entirely cured. This was nearly eight years ago, and I have had no return of the disease. I have recommended Hunt's Remedy to others in similar cases, and it has never failed to cure. I have also used it for sick headache, and found in it a sure relief. I think it the best medicine made, and cheerfully recommend it to all.

THE BABY'S PRAYER.

She knelt with her sweet hands folded;
Her fair little head bowed low;
While dead vines tapped at the window
And the air was thick with snow.
Without, earth dumb with winter;
Within, hearts dumb with grief;
And up through the leaden silence
Rose softly the baby prayer.

"Bless all whom I love, dear Father,
And help me be good," she said.
Then, stirred by a sudden fancy,
She lifted the shining head.
Did she catch on the frozen maple
Some hint of the April green,
Or the breath of the woodland blossoms,
The drifts of the snow between?

"The beautiful trees," she whispered,
"Where the orioles used to sing;
They are tired of the cold, white winter,
Oh, help them to grow in spring;
And the flowers that I loved to gather,
Lord, bring them again in May,
The dear little violets, sleeping
Down deep in the ground to-day."

Ah, earth may be chill with snowflakes,
And hearts may be cold with care,
But wastes of a frozen silence
Are crossed by the baby's prayer;
And lips that were dumb with sorrow
In jubilant hope may sing;
For when earth is wrapped in winter,
In the heart of the Lord 'tis spring.

TAKEN AT HIS WORD.

A STORY OF REAL LIFE.

There was the case of General Chartus, who for nearly twenty years held his own against all sorts of odds in war, business and love. His was one of the brigades upon which the commander of the army in Virginia always depended when in extremity; his very retreats, when he was compelled to make them, were more defiant and glorious than other men's battles. In business he was as determined and unyielding as in war; he was courteous and considerate to all his rivals, but no one cared to provoke him to earnest opposition. In society all women were at his feet; nobody ventured to rally this handsome fellow, whose keen eye and firm mouth seemed to make him a king among his fellows; to receive a smile, a compliment, or a courtesy from him, was bliss supreme.

But one day the General got his match. He never had been in love—he never had flirted with any of the ladies, some pretty, a few sweet, many good, who had been almost thrown at him by their parents or themselves; but the very first evening he met Miss Leah Millisen his heart surrendered—nay, deserted in a manner most abject. Miss Millisen, although of pleasing face and figure, was no more beautiful than some of his acquaintances, but she impressed every one, including General Chartus, by her air of superb repose—an air the effect of which was enhanced by regular features, and by stature somewhat above that of most women.

Chartus adored Miss Millisen at sight, and with the characteristic impatience of the successful soldier and man of affairs, he made haste to tell her so. His statement did not seem to at all surprise the lady; neither did it appear to afford her any special pleasure. She acted very much as if such communications were too frequent to be startling. The General was astonished and provoked at her indifference. He had so good an opinion of himself as to have imagined that whenever he might offer his heart to a woman, the gift would be accepted with deep assurances of gratitude and humility. He felt piqued by Miss Millisen's demeanor; he wondered whether she knew that he was offering affections that never had been lavished on any other woman, and that he was guiltless of the faults that make many young men not desirable as husbands. Did she mistake him for one of the overgrown boys who infested society because they were not old enough to join clubs and go into business?

The General grew so angry that for a little while he forgot to be a gentleman. He said to himself that if that proud girl did not care for him he could manage to live without her. He had neglected to seek her out in social affair at which they [illegible] present. But when, again, he was brought face to face with her, as he was obliged to be at dinner one evening, for the space of two hours, he confessed, all to himself, to unlimited idiocy, and determined to make another attack. If Miss Millisen could not be conquered, why, then—the General would himself capitulate without regard to terms. It would be a new sensation, while to be the prisoner of such a being would be anything but uncomfortable, he thought.

So, again the General proposed, and again Miss Millisen listened politely but calmly. He asked if there was anything in his character or social standing to which she took exception, and she quickly assured him, with a smile—such a smile as that there was not. But love, she said, implied marriage—and she had so many friends who had been made unhappy by marriage, that she had determined not to imperil her own future by haste and thoughtlessness.

This very discreet speech only increased the General's eagerness, and caused him to multiply his importunities a hundred fold. He would spend his life work to minister to her happiness, he said. Upon which she told him that man's idea of what would make woman happy were often supremely ridiculous.

So Chartus solemnly promised that she should control her own life if she would marry him, and he would be obedient to her every wish. Then she expressed fear of poverty. She had known so many couples who began their married life amid comfort and luxury, and were reduced to misery and social ostracism by unwise business ventures. The suitor promptly agreed to make his wife sole owner of his house; to leave to her in undisturbed control of her own marriage portion, which she frankly admitted would be but a few thousand dollars; and to protect her against financial trouble in the possible event of his death, by insuring his life heavily for her benefit.

Miss Millisen listened attentively, looked thoughtful, felt pleased and did not hesitate to show what she felt. The General saw he was progressing well, so he followed up his advantage by asking—

"Is there anything else I can promise or do to gain your consent? You have only to name it!"

Miss Millisen thought carefully for a moment or two, but was obliged to answer:

"Nothing whatever. I will take you at your word."

"Then I hope to one day call you Mrs. Chartus."

At last Miss Millisen found her natural repose untrustworthy; she trembled a little, blushed a great deal, tried to speak but could not, noting which the General's mercy took the form peculiar to lovers on such occasions.

The wedding speedily followed. On this subject the couple were in entire accord. Where they were to go on their bridal tour was a subject of discussion for a little while—only a little while. The General wanted to travel westward—there he had large mining interests—but the lady preferred Europe and reminded her coming lord of his promise to further her happiness by consulting her desires. So to Europe they went; the cost in actual cash outlay and business losses consequent on long absence, being equal to about one-half the bridegroom's business capital.

When General and Mrs. Chartus returned to New York their friends remarked to one another that the bride was as stately, handsome and self-contained as ever, but that the General seemed rather older than before—as he certainly was, by a few months, and that he was not quite so positive as in his bachelor days. In society the change was declared beneficial; the same was said in business circles, for there was not the old trouble of being held at arm's length in everything that involved dollars and cents. At home, however, in the handsome house presented by the General to his bride, the change in the host and the lack of change in the hostess were most noticeable. Mrs. Chartus received all friends and visitors with her superb old-time repose; she never was more attentive to one guest than another, and she always was scrupulously respectful and courteous to her husband; but the General had lost his ancient tenacity of opinion; his apparent disregard of what other people might say or think; even on subjects which he fully understood he no longer expressed positive opinions, he seemed always apprehensive of what the effect of his words might be upon his wife. Ladies who had unsuccessfully aspired to Mrs. Chartus's position exhibited much malicious delight at the change in the General, but married women and Chartus's old friends pronounced it a burning shame that the General had deliberately wrapped himself around a woman's finger—around the finger of a woman who seemed unable to comprehend the honor imposed upon her.

Meanwhile Chartus devoted himself more closely to business than ever; he seemed almost frantic in his desire to make a great deal of money. So, like most men who are in too much of a hurry, he made some serious mistakes. He pinned his faith and his capital on the Twin Angel Silver Company; borrowed money when his own was employed in maintaining the stock at high figure, and lost nearly everything when the final and inevitable slump came.

He was ruined; he had absolutely nothing left but his office furniture and his wife. He devoted a wretched hour or two to reflection, but recovered his spirits quickly as he thought he saw a silver lining behind the edge of the cloud. His wife—his Leah—the fair woman whom he worshiped, yet, who, somehow, had power to feel hurt in him than an extremely civil and respectable acquaintance—his wife sustained to become wholly his, even if he had to [illegible] heard that trouble always breaks the bonds of a woman's heart. So he hurried to his home; he manfully, honestly told everything. His wife listened attentively, and he looked closely for a sign of sympathy, but he saw none. On the contrary, Mrs. Chartus's face grew hard and fixed, and at last she said:

"What are we to do?—how are we to live?"

"You must have considerable money in the bank, Leah," said the General; "I have added several thousand dollars to your own property, you know."

"Certainly," said Mrs. Chartus, "but you would be too proud to be supported by my money."

Chartus felt that he was sinking, but he recovered himself sufficiently to say:

"Of course not; I merely meant that [illegible] would save us from suspicion at home—until——"

"Remember," interrupted Mrs. Chartus, "that you promised I never should have any suspicion about money matters. I took you at your word."

"Thanks," said the General quickly, "for reminding me; a thousand thanks. But I suppose I may at least count on your sympathy?"

"Certainly—at least I suppose so," said Mrs. Chartus, "but this affair is going to be dreadfully annoying. People will talk about it; there are plenty of women who are hateful enough to come here for the sole purpose of making cutting speeches. Oh, dear—how did come you to do it?"

"Never mind," said Chartus shortly, and between his teeth, as he turned and left the room. The day was too far gone for regular business, but he determined to visit all the hotels where brokers and speculators congregated; he had no money—not enough, at least, to operate with; but he had knowledge of some things that were going on "in the street," and he was desperate enough to do anything for anybody or against anybody for the sake of recouping himself.

But fortune frowned on him; every one knew he had been "in" Twin Angel stock; everybody knew what had happened to Twin Angel, so everybody was too busy talking to let him alone. Down town next day he had a similar experience. Then he became desperate; he borrowed a thousand dollars from a personal friend who knew nothing about the stock market, and went into the Mining Exchange to make a "quick turn," but his hand seemed to have lost its cunning for he lost it all.

From being desperate he began to be frantic; looking his affairs squarely in the face, he found that all the money he had in the world, or was sure of having, was about fifty dollars. He was now quite equal to speculating with other people's money, but, unfortunately for him, his customers had deserted him.

The General locked himself in his office and subjected his memory to a searching interview. Something must be done or he would not be able to look his wife in the face. Had he ever imagined that she had been so literal at heart about the conditions of their marriage he would have—but never mind; she was his wife, and he adored her.

That evening the General made a careful collection of his most portable personal property—watches, diamond studs, gold-headed canes, etc., and early in the morning, before any one whom he knew was awake, he visited places where three gold balls indicate the nature of the business done within. At the end of his tour he had nearly three hundred dollars in his pocket, enough to operate slyly in securities in which he had faith. Suddenly he remembered that a payment on a life insurance policy was past due, so he hurried to pay it, and by so doing he almost emptied his pockets. What to do then he scarcely knew; he paced the floor of his little office, his brow contracted and his countenance so black that even the omnipresent match-vender was frightened away by his appearance.

Suddenly a telegraph boy entered with a message, and Chartus read: "Hurry home; have you forgotten this is my reception day? LEAH."

Chartus uttered a great oath, and then fell to the floor. The telegraph boy called for help, which soon arrived but was of no use.

Mrs. Chartus was remarkably handsome in full mourning, and she did not forget her husband's good qualities, for she wrote to a friend: "The General promised to be and do whatever I asked, and he always kept his word. An wasn't it providential, dear?—he paid a past due premium on a ten-thousand-dollar life insurance policy the very day he died!"—The Hour.

The People of Mexico.

The population of Mexico, says CHARLES A. DANA, is commonly estimated at nine or ten millions. No census has been taken, but this estimate is probably not exaggerated. The great mass of the inhabitants are Indians, and in race and habits they are similar to the Pueblo, Zuni, and Navajo Indians of New Mexico and Arizona. They are generally small in stature, sober, honest, industrious, temperate and intelligent. A more valuable peasantry can scarcely be found. Their virtues are their own; their vices are of European admixture. School education has done little or nothing for them; but of late years efforts have been made to establish schools for their benefit. They seem very capable of being instructed; and if, as we trust, there is a bright future for Mexico, it lies in the development and education of the native race.

The ruling classes in Mexico are mainly of Spanish and mixed blood. The late President JUAREZ was a pure Indian, but the number of educated people with nothing Spanish in their origin, must be very small indeed. Among the civil and military functionaries the Spanish element opposite to predominates, and the political temper of the country are decidedly Spanish to this nature.

SLOWLY BURNED TO DEATH

FOURTEEN INMATES OF A MICHIGAN ALMSHOUSE PERISH BY FIRE.

Awakened from Sleep by the Flames from Their Beds—Three Insane Patients Among the Number—All Assistance Rendered Impossible—A Chicago Hotel Destroyed.

Fourteen of the forty-five inmates of the Van Buren County Almshouse and Insane Asylum in Michigan, were burned to death on Wednesday morning. The buildings were completely destroyed and nothing was saved.

The asylum consists of a large two-story frame house, a two-story frame addition on the south, the latter recently erected, and a large building situated some little distance away, used as a residence for Superintendent Cash and his family, the keepers and the hired-help. The oldest building was denominated the jail, and in it were confined the violently insane. The middle or newest building was comparatively empty. The addition to the main building contained a better class of patients and it was here that the loss of life occurred. The fire was discovered about two o'clock and the alarm was given by a man named Halsey, who was sleeping in the main building, and who was aroused by the cries of the inmates in the addition. Hearing the roar of the flames he rushed to the door leading into the hallway and threw it open, when the smoke and flames burst into his face and nearly stifled him. He shut the door, and, running to the front part of the building, aroused the inmates, who only had sufficient time to escape in their night dress.

When those who had escaped had collected their scattered senses, it was found that the addition, in which were confined the paupers and more rational patients, was totally enveloped by the flames, and all thought of rendering assistance to the fourteen unfortunates confined therein was out of the question. The spectators were compelled to stand idly by and gaze at the onward course of the flames, above the loud, seething roar of which could be plainly heard the agonizing, blood-freezing shrieks of the poor idiots who were being slowly burned to death. Every now and then a figure could be seen at one of the upper windows, the night-dress already burned and the eyes of the unfortunate almost starting from their sockets and showing in strong relief to the face, already blackened and scorched by the flames. Of the two or three persons who were thus seen all appeared to be totally bereft by fright of whatever little sense they possessed, for after an agonizing glance out upon the crowd they turned and with a maddened yell fell backward into the angry furnace.

Soon the cries grew less frequent and after a time ceased altogether, and the spectators knew that the inmates were past all agony. The flames swept on, however, until the woodwork was destroyed and then began to abate. Finally, with the aid of the onlookers, but not until it had consumed everything within its hot grasp the fire was extinguished and the work of looking for the bodies began. With but one exception there was no recognition possible, all that remained of the bodies being a mass of charred and withered bones, which when put together, only partially filled a small box. It is now thought that there was less suffering among the inmates than at first supposed, as those who were seen at the windows are supposed to have been the only ones who were not smothered in their beds by the smoke before the flames had reached them.

The patients in the so-called jail building managed to get out alive. The buildings being of wood and very dry the flames seemed to envelop them in an instant and burn them out of existence almost as quickly. The superintendent's family had barely time to escape. His daughter was ill with typhoid fever, and great difficulty was experienced in removing her. A boy named Parker jumped out of a second-story window and received some slight injuries. The origin of the fire is unknown, but is believed to have been the work of a crazy pauper.

Titled Servants.

Lately in a Roman court a handsome young man of 26 and his wife of 17, were charged with theft. He had been cook and she housemaid in an Irish gentleman's family. A robbery having occurred, the young couple were suspected and imprisoned. When brought before the bench both burst into tears. As soon as they could be calmed, the young man, as usual, was asked his name, and, covering his face, he replied that he was Count Riccardo Strozzi, a legitimate descendant of one of the most illustrious families in Italy. The wife is also of a very good family. They had fallen in love with each other and run away, traveling about in disguise in order not to be discovered. At last, being penniless, they entered the above family as servants. Fortunately, their innocence was proved as clear as day. The coincidence of their flight with the day of the robbery was thoroughly explained, and they were set at liberty amid the cheers of the whole court.

Among the events of the year the political fence is being built a great many times.

THE HOT AXLE.

A Lesson in Real Life that May be Read to Advantage.

The express-train was flying from Cork to Queenstown; it was going like sixty—that is, about sixty miles an hour. No sight of Irish village to arrest our speed, no sign of breakdown; and yet the train halted. We looked out of the window; saw the brakeman and a crowd of passengers gathering around the locomotive, and a dense smoke arising. What was the matter? A hot axle!

I thought then, as I think now, that is what is the matter with people everywhere. In this swift, "express," American life, we go too fast for our endurance. We think ourselves getting on splendidly, when, in the midst of our successes, we come to a dead halt. What is the matter? The nerves or muscles or brains give out; we have made too many revolutions in an hour. A hot axle!

Men make the mistake of working according to their capacity of endurance. "Can I run this train from Springfield to Boston at the rate of fifty miles an hour?" says an engineer. Yes. "Then I will run it, reckless of consequences!" Can I be a merchant, and a president of a bank, and a director in a life-insurance company, and a school-commissioner, and help edit a paper, and supervise the politics of our ward, and run for Congress? "I can!" the man says to himself. The store drives him; the bank drives him; the school drives him; politics drive him. He takes all the scoldings and frets and exasperations of each position. Some day, at the height of the business season, he does not come to the store. From the most important meeting of the bank directors he is absent. In the excitement of the most important political canvass he fails to be at the place appointed. What is the matter? His health has broken down; the train halts long before it gets to the station. A hot axle!

Literary men have great opportunities opening in this day. If they take all that open, they are dead men, or worse—living men who ought to be dead. The pen runs so easy when you have good ink and smooth paper, and an easy desk to write on, and the consciousness of an audience of one, two, or three hundred thousand readers. There are the religious newspapers through which you may preach, and the musical journals through which you may sing, and the agricultural periodicals through which you can plow, and family newspapers through which you may romp with the whole household around the evening stand. There are critiques to be written, and reviews to be indulged in, and poems to be chimed, and novels to be constructed. When out of a man's pen he can shake recreation and friendship and usefulness and bread, he is apt to keep it shaking. So great are the invitations to literary work, that the professional men of the day are overdone. They sit, faint and fagged out, on the verge of newspapers and books; each one does the work of three. And these men sit up late nights, and choke down chunks of meat without mastication, and scold their wives through irritability, and maul innocent authors, and run the physical machinery with a liver miserably given out. The driving-shaft has gone fifty times a second. They stop at no station. The brain and the digestion begin to smoke. Stop, ye flying quills! "Down brake!" A hot axle!

Some of our young people have read—till they are erased—of learned blacksmiths, who at the forge conquered thirty languages; and of shoemakers, who, pounding sole-leather, got to be philosophers; and of milliners, who, while their customers were at the glass trying on their spring hats, wrote a volume of first-rate poems. The fact is, no blacksmith ought to be troubled with more than five languages; and instead of shoemakers becoming philosophers, we would like to turn our surplus of philosophers into shoemakers; and the supply of poetry is so much greater than the demand, that we wish milliners would stick to their business. Extraordinary examples of work and endurance may do as much good. Because Napoleon slept only four hours a night, hundreds of students have tried the experiment; but instead of Austerlitz and Saragossa, there came of it only a sick headache and a botch of a recitation.—T. DE WITT TALMAGE, in Home Science.

Our Actor Lawrence.

Lawrence Barrett's boyhood is mentioned in the Lyndon (Vt.) Union thus: "People familiar with Lyndon Corner in the years between 1840 and 1850 will remember Lawrence as one of the 'genius' of our street. His father was a tailor here, having his shop in a little room below the Gaboon office, while his family lived in the rickety basement below him. His two boys were George and Lawrence. Lawrence was a belligerent chap. When other boys were running away from obstreperous Lawrence was on hand, and seemed to enjoy it. A little before 1850 the family disappeared from the village, and that was the last heard from them till Lawrence began to appear in the theatrical world."

THE REVOLUTION IN SPAIN.

The Black Hand that is Causing the Government so Much Trouble.

In spite of the external appearance of tranquility which reigns throughout Spain, there are abundant symptoms that those who hold property and are on the side of law and order consider themselves by no means secure in the face of certain political forces which are at present making themselves felt in Spain. The fact is that widespread discontent is prevalent, and the sure consequence of discontent—the formation of secret societies—is progressing to an extent which has assumed a very serious appearance.

It may be remembered that in the early part of last year the attention of the Spanish authorities was called to the fact that a secret organization was in existence, which had for its object the overthrow of the present form of government and the substitution for it of a socialistic Republic. The name by which the society was known was the "Mano Negra." It came to light that the Mano Negra was divided into minor societies or circles, numbering 200 each, in every circle 190 members being the mere rank and file, bound to obey with the most unquestioning obedience whatever orders they might receive from their acknowledged chiefs. The remaining ten members formed a junta or committee, which would alone communicate directly with the Provincial Council, from whom it received orders. Last summer the government decided on bringing the leaders to trial, and in the result twelve were sentenced to penal servitude for various terms of years and fourteen were condemned to death. The latter sentence was appealed against, and, the case having languished for several months before the Supreme Court, the death sentence has been commuted, in the case of two of the offenders, to banishment for life to Fernando Po. Although the results of last summer's trials has given a severe check to Spanish nihilism, the society still exists; its objects are still the same, and in secret conclaves the leaders meet to discuss their plans of future action. The policy of the Mano Negra now seems to be to bide its time until the government is weakened by intestine commotions or by some military pronunciamiento, when, undoubtedly, the secret organization will be again galvanized into active life.

An uneasy feeling also prevails in diplomatic circles regarding the state of the army, on the fidelity of which the safety of the government absolutely depends. Very lately it became known to the military authorities that a secret society of a political nature existed in the different regiments, and, on a searching inquiry having been instituted, it was discovered that it already had its ramifications throughout the greater part of the army; and not only so, but that a considerable number of the junior officers had been affiliated. So far the objects of the society are the substitution of voluntary enlistment for compulsory service and increased pay for the different grades; but the fact is pretty apparent that the army is now master of the situation, and that whatever political party coquets with it successfully will for a time rule the destinies of Spain.

Throwing the Boomerang.

The boomerang is a piece of thin wood about an inch and a half wide, an eighth of an inch thick, and perhaps twenty inches long; its shape varies, sometimes being like the segment of a circle, at others like a man's arm bent at the elbow; but the way of using both these forms is exactly the same. The weapon is grasped at one end in the right hand, with the concave side uppermost, and the black man takes a run, such as the ordinary Englishman does when he is throwing a cricket ball. On a sudden he stops, and away flys the boomerang, not straight as one might suppose, but revolving on its own axis so quickly that in the air it looks like a circular piece of board; this motion gives it the wonderful power of flight which must really be seen to be believed. At first the course is in a direct line from the thrower at such a height as he may require, but as it draws toward the limit of its distance it swerves slightly to the right and making a semicircle coming back on an exactly opposite course to that which it took on the outward journey, generally falling within a few feet of the thrower. During the flight the revolving of the boomerang causes a peculiar purring sound, not unlike the hum of a top.

Another Mania.

Harper's Bazar says:—The smelling bottle craze has been a very fashionable one with young girls in Washington in the past few months. It is a costly fashion. One belle now has her second bottle presented within three months, each of which cost $30. The first was crushed under her carriage wheels in coming from a party one night, and its gold top with her initials on it alone escaped destruction.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

A FEW CLIPPINGS THAT WILL CAUSE A SMILE.

A GENTLE HINT.

Blink (an exchange fiend)—"That was rather a curious achievement for an editor."

Blank (an editor)—"What was?"

"I see by this paper that the editor of a Colorado journal has killed a common bear weighing 1,200 pounds."

"That bear must have come into the office to look over exchanges."—Phila. Call.

FEARFUL REVENGE.

Mr. Finks (reading)—"It is now learned that the bloated but blooming monopoly which controls the sausage business gets the finest skins from the natives for forty cents."

Mrs. Finks—"What?"

"Forty cents."

"Ah! cut that out, quick."

"But for what?"

"I want to send the item to that odious Mrs. Minks. She got a new sacque last Christmas."

HINT TO THE OVERWORKED.

Country Doctor—"What you need, sir, is outdoor exercise. You should walk thirty or forty miles a day."

Country Editor—"But it is impossible. I have my paper to look after."

Doctor—"If I am not much mistaken you recently engaged a stranger of exceptional intelligence to assist you with your writing and collect bills."

Editor—"Yes, that is true."

Doctor—"Well, let him do all the writing and you do all the collecting for a while."

TWO TIMES COMPARED.

They were sitting in the parlor and she was getting sleepy.

"What time is it?" she asked.

He looked at his watch and replied that it lacked five minutes of 11, and then, being struck with an idea, he asked:

"Why is my watch like you, my pet?"

"I don't know."

"Because it is very pretty," he replied.

"And why is my watch like you?" she asked.

"I don't know, I'm sure. Why is your watch like me, my dear?"

"Because it won't go," she replied with a yawn.

The young man then went home.—Oil City Blizzard.

A REASONABLE WISH.

The turtles drum in the paludous bay,
The crickets creak in the prickful hedge,
The bullfrogs boom in the puddling sedge,
And the whoopee whoops his vesper lay
Away
In the twilight soft and gray.

Two lovers stroll in the glinting gloam—
His hand in her'n and her'n in his—
She blushed deep—he is talking bis
They hug and pop as they listless roam—
They ream—
It's late when they get back home.

Down by the little wicket gate,
Down where the creepful ivy grows,
Down where the sweet nasturtium blows,
A box-toed parent lies in wait—
In wait—
For the maiden and her mate.

Let the crickets creak and bullfrogs boom,
The whoopee wail in the distant dell—
Their tuneful throbs will ne'er dispell
The planted pain and the rooted gloom—
The gloom
Of the lover's dismal doom.

"I think I can suggest a novelty which will be a change for both of us."

"That's a dear girl. What is it?"

"Try coming home sober."

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., JUNE 12, 1884.

The Greenbackers have nominated Ben. Butler for President, and Gen. West, of Miss., for Vice Pres.

There is a negro graduate at Harvard this year—Robert Hebberton of Tarbell, a Virginian, and the son of slave parents. He went to college as a waiter, and at that time was illiterate; but some of the white students took a fancy to him, and helped him through a preparatory course, after which he supported himself by teaching a Boston class of negro boys.

One of our state exchanges very truthfully says: "The status of journalism in the South, is a matter of no little importance. The progress which has been made in this line during the three or four years past, is an unmistakable evidence of a higher civilization, which must give no little pleasure to the entire community.—Indeed, the man who is identified with the institutions of his country, cannot fail to appreciate the advantage of dignified and progressive press.

We re-produce an extract from the Monroe Journal advocating the election of Hon. C. C. Shorter, of Barbour, for Speaker of the next House of Representatives. Mr. Shorter has been re-nominated by the Democracy of his county as a reward for efficient services in the last House of Representatives. Barbour being a thoroughly Democratic county, his election is assured. He is a young man of fine abilities, handed down from a proud and eminent ancestry, and he would make a good presiding officer. He will receive the support of the young Democracy of the State for the position.

The New York Sun in its Mid-Week of Echoes Thursday last, contains the following graphic account of the scene in the Stock Exchange on the preceding day: "Any person anxious to see a pandemonium on earth ought to have been inside the Stock Exchange yesterday morning. There was not the slightest danger of being ill used, as strangers usually are when they get by chance upon the floor of this curious institution. The brokers were so wild with excitement that a clown might have ridden a donkey around the big hall without being noticed. Nobody seemed to see, hear, or understand anything. In one and the same groups stocks were sold and bought at the same moment at 2 and 3 per cent differences. At times the quotations upon the stock indicator seemed to be three days old. There was often a difference of 5 per cent between the price recorded on the tape and the figures at which stocks sold upon the floor. The noise was perfectly terific and barely subsided at the sound of the chairman's gavel when he had to announce one failure after another. Seven failures of stock brokers' firms were announced in succession, not to speak of the wild rumors circulating about several banks and trust companies."

The Democratic State Ticket.

The State Democratic Convention has met and its work is done. It has placed a good ticket before the people and one which is worthy of the united support which it will undoubtedly receive. The new men on the ticket are Maj. M. C. Burke, of Marengo, for Auditor; Hon. T. N. McClellan, of Limestone, for Attorney-General; and Col. Sol. Palmer, of Marshall, for Superintendent of Education. The Montgomery Advertiser has this to say of the ticket:

The re-nomination of Governor O'Neal, Secretary of State Phelan and State Treasurer Smith, was in keeping with the fitness of things, for they have been faithful servants and deserved the tribute of re-election. The addresses of Governor O'Neal, and Treasurer Smith show a gratifying state of affairs, and that Alabama, in spite of the faithlessness of a former trusted State Treasurer, is in a good financial condition. Her schools, colleges, and charitable institutions are in a highly creditable condition, and reflect the highest honor upon the State.

Mr. M. C. Burke, of the Demopolis News-Journal, is a true and efficient man. He has always been modest and retiring—so much so that he has never wielded the force and influence which his high character and talents justified. He is honest, capable and faithful, and will give entire satisfaction in the discharge of the duties of Auditor.

Hon. T. N. McClellan, of Limestone county, is one of the most rapidly rising young men of the State. He is splendid lawyer, and can always command a large practice. He is a man of fine ability, and will make a good Attorney-General.

Col. Sol. Palmer, of Marshall county, is an experienced man of affairs. He has been a member of the Legislature and made a good one. As a teacher of schools he was an undoubted success, while in his chosen profession of the law he stands deservedly high. He has for several years done good service as editor and proprietor of the Guntersville Democrat. He brings to the discharge of the difficult duties of Superintendent of Education a level head, a well balanced mind, and fine administrative capacity.

The ticket, from top to bottom is a good one. There is no occasion for any Democrat failing to support it, while the opposition can lodge no just ground of complaint against it.

The affairs of State will be conservatively and prudently managed, and when the next nominating convention rolls around the condition of affairs will show that Alabama is still progressing upward and onward.

Something About the Republican Ticket.

ALBANY, N. Y., June 6.—The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in an interview this evening, said that he would not vote for Mr. Blaine for any office in the United States as long as he lives, and thinks the Republicans are making more promises than they can fulfill. He does not believe in a new party. He said: "If we can't elect a good Republican we will elect a Democrat."

NEW YORK, June 7.—Mr. Jackson S. Schultz, the largest leather dealer in the United States, and a gentleman who has for the past twenty years been closely identified with the interests of the Republican party, was indignant at the platform that has been adopted. For a quarter of a century he had given his vote and influence to the Republican nominee, but now he has turned his back squarely on the old party.

New York Times.]

"One word as to the position of the Times. It will not support Mr. Blaine for the Presidency. It will advise no man to vote for him and its reasons for this course are perfectly well understood by every body that has ever read it. Without the mention of names the course of the Times was foreshadowed in its issue of May 29, when it replied to the question of a correspondent in these words:

"If the nominee of the Chicago Republican Convention is a man worthy to be President of the United States the New York Times will give him a hearty and vigorous support. If he shall be a man unworthy to hold that great office, a man who, personally and politically, in office or out, represents principles and practices which the Times abhors and has counselled its party to shun, we shall watch with great interest the efforts of those responsible for such a nomination to elect their candidate, but we can give them no help."

The interest the Times will take in this canvass is that of a friend and physician. It is not with cynical indifference, but with unspeakable sadness, that it sees the Republican party perversely set its face towards error and its feet to vicious paths, for it has done some service to the party. But with patience and unfailing hope the Times will cheerfully and with sincerity labor to set the party right again, and when it shall have had its new birth to draw to it all that is soundest, best and worthiest to the manhood of this Republic."

ST. JOHNSBURY, VT., June 7.—The nomination of Blaine and Logan falls like a wet blanket on all classes of Republicans in this section of the State. Several Republican newspapers are threatening to bolt the nomination. All say the Democrats have only to make a good ticket to win.

That Eulogy.

Congressman Williams, of this Congressional District, has been subject to much unjust and undeserved censure and criticism by his speech upon the death of his late colleague, Hon. Thomas H. Herndon, of the Mobile District.

It has been said that Mr. Williams disclaimed the authorship of the eulogy, saying "that it was written by a lady and sent to him, and that, without previously examining it, he read two or three pages to the House and asked leave to print the remainder." This Mr. Williams flatly denies, saying that he did write the speech and that he had never said anything to the contrary. His colleague, Col. Herbert, writes to the Tuscumbia North Alabamian to say that injustice has been done Mr. Williams in the harsh criticisms of the press, and that while the eulogy was, perhaps, in some instances, extravagant, yet no one doubts that it was the outgiving of a true and noble heart, and that Mr. Williams was highly esteemed and respected not only by the entire Alabama delegation, but by every member of Congress with whom he was acquainted.

Mr. Williams is possessed of a kind heart and a most generous nature, and the words eulogistic of his dead friend come from a true and noble impulse, and we are not ready to condemn and censure him for what after all is a mere matter of taste. It is certain that he does not deserve the very severe criticisms which he has received.—Tuskegee News.

The Republican Ticket.

Blaine and Logan is the style of the Republican Presidential ticket, which the Chicago convention brought forth. It is composed of ex-Senator James G. Blaine, of Maine, and Senator John A. Logan, of Illinois. It is a strong ticket; and is so acknowledged by Democrats all over the country. But the Democracy if it works will win.

Senatorial.

We have been shown a letter written by B. J. Baldwin, Esq., in which he postively refused to entertain the idea of running for state senator. We feel that the successor belongs to Chilton county, and the favorable reception of Judge Falkner's name all over the district strengthens our hopes that the nomination will be made of a citizen of that county. Judge Falkner refuses to enter a scramble for the position, but will serve if he is the choice of the people.—Wetumpka Times.

For Speaker.

Hon. C. C. Shorter is a young man of genius and brilliancy, with a quick intellect and active mind, and possesses legislative experience and a thorough and practical knowledge of the rules of the house, and those high social qualities and dignity of character that always win friends and command respect. He possesses those qualities in an eminent degree that fit him for the speakership of the House, and if he would allow the use of his name in that connection and should be thus honored by the House, in honoring him the House would honor itself. There was no abler or more popular member of the last legislature than Hon. C. C. Shorter.—Monroe Journal.

Jemison Jottings.

On Monday morning Strasburg was visited by a severe wind. We havn't learned the damages. The roof of Mr. Green Collin's smoke house was torn off, and much of his fencing, fruit trees and shocks of wheat blown down. He has our sympathy for we saw him sad, but uncomplaining.

Miss Pardelia Davenport has returned home from a pleasant visit among relatives at Jemison and Calera.

It is said that Prof. A. E. Burns has had a happy smile since last week, when a baby visitor came to his house to stay.

Jemison is steadily improving. More than one new building is now going up. OCCASIONAL.

The Chicago papers contain columns of dispatches from the West and Northwest showing that the nomination of Blaine and Logan has been received everywhere with great enthusiasm. Some of the New York and Massachusetts delegates are dissatisfied with the ticket and predict that an independent Republican ticket will be put in the field in the course of the next month. The ratification Friday night developed features of the campaign. There were processions of clubs with long white plumes in their hats with every man carrying a torch.

The New York Herald says that the Republicans will be sorry before November for their fearful blunder in nominating Blaine, and advises the Democrats to nominate Tilden or Cleveland to insure success.

For Middle Beat.

MR. CHILTON VIEW:—It is noticed in a late issue of your interesting paper that Judge Jefferson Falkner is being prominently spoken of for the position of State Senator from this district. Judge Falkner is eminently fitted for the position. He represented Chambers county in the Alabama Legislature years ago (1846-7), when Tuskaloosa was the capital, and to Judge Falkner the city of Montgomery owes as much as she does to any other one man. As chairman of the committee selected to consider the question of removing the capital, he worked earnestly for Montgomery, against odds in favor of Selma, Mobile and Wetumpka, all of which latter places were larger trading points than Montgomery was at that time. Judge Falkner is known by all who know him to be a man of fine capacity. He is a retired lawyer of considerable experience at the bar, and he is still a diligent worker, though he is past his allotted three score and ten years. He worthily deserves the honor, and the people should unite in sending him to the State Senate from this district. He would get a strong support in Elmore county. CHILTON.

MR. EDITOR:—While ruminating between my plow handles this evening, it struck me very forcibly (as the election is drawing near) that it was high time the candidates for the different county offices should be made known. So far as the Senate is concerned, the next is to be one of the most important elections ever held in the county of Chilton, and every voter in the county should exert himself to elect a representative man to represent him in the Legislature, a man who is thoroughly identified with the interests of our whole people, and one that would make the most obedient servant to the public will. In viewing the matter from this stand, shall we search the ranks of the doctors, the lawyers, the preachers, or shall we elect a farmer.

It seems to me it would require but a single thought for the majority of our people to decide in favor of a farmer, one who is blessed with a good practical education, one who has a clear conception of right, and is ever ready to advocate it, is the man we want; and in looking over the ranks of our farmers, we find in the person of Mr. A. J. Hall, one who is eminently qualified to fill the position, and I dare say, if he should be elected, we will have no cause to feel ashamed, but ever be proud of our representative. The time has come that we need no more laws, but better ones. Laws that our farmers, mechanics, &c., can understand without applying to a lawyer. Farmers, what do you say to Mr. Hall as our next representative. FARMER.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

—:o:—

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

—:o:—

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

EDWARD

WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA AND POTASH

The three gigantic evils of civilised man are Scrofula, Chronic Rheumatism, and Neuralgia. EDWARD WILDER'S SARSAPARILLA and POTASH completely cures and eradicates all these. The combination which by his process is made between these two reliable medicines, is one rarely attained, but which brings out the most useful properties. They cleanse the entire glandular system; they purify the blood, whose impurity is at the source of all these afflictions; they increase and render all the secretions healthy. Numberless testimonials pour in upon him for their wonderful and strengthening effects from sufferers who have been benefited by this wonderful medicine. We need not say that in cases of MERCURIAL TAINT its effects are magical, for it removes all the bad blood, and re-invigorates the constitution by making it pure, and clean, and fresh. It is an unfailing and speedy cure for all Skin Diseases; it removes Tetter and Ringworm; prevents Falling of the Hair, and is a sure relief for Swellings, old Sores, Syphilis and Venereal Diseases.

Miss Fannie Reed Merriwether, one of Verbena's charming young ladies, visited Mrs. Felix Ashley at this place the past week.

Dr. J. S. Johnson, Jr., is fencing in his lot on Main Street. It would make a pretty park, should our town ever put on city airs.

Married, at the residence of Esq. S. L. Arledge, the officiating J. P., on Thursday, the 5th inst., Mr. Wm. T. A. Crim, and Miss L. P. Comer.

Mrs. Virginia Palmer's school is flourishing. We congratulate the Pleasant Grove neighborhood in securing the services of such a worthy lady.

It is suggested that the neighborhood of Wells' new saw mill be called Wellsville. Quite a little village is going up there. It is four miles west of Clanton.

A gentleman who has just returned from Montgomery, whither he went by dirt road to dispose of some fine beef cattle, reports crops all along the road in excellent condition.

Mr. R. Ehrman is building upon the lot adjoining his store. He is putting up a house for storing furniture and other heavy goods, which he proposes to handle largely as soon as his house is completed.

A very pleasant sociable was given at the residence of Mr. A. J. Hall, on Friday night last. It was largely attended, and with dancing and refreshments, was enjoyed "immensely" by the young people.

The following officers have been elected by Amand Lodge for the next Masonic year: P. C. Dennis, W. M.; K. Wells, S. W.; F. A. Gulledge, J. W.; W. N. Jones, Treas.; W. F. Claughton, Sec'y; E. E. Estes, S. D.; W. U. Acree, J. D.; G. B. Morgan, Tiler; W. A. Gullahorn and H. Evans, Stewards.

Three young gentlemen, Messrs. John Bateman, J. M. Kailin and Wm. Moore, of Verbena Academy, stood examination last Saturday before the county school board. They will start out as teachers in different portions of the county soon. They are a fine trio of young men, and the county is to be congratulated that they have decided to locate among us, instead of going farther from home to find a field for their great work. They each took a very high stand upon examination.

The Clanton planing mill is succeeding so well that another planer has been ordered, and one of increased capacity. The Messrs. Hunt are making things boom in their line, and their success is gladly noted.

The different beats of the county will be entitled to the same representations in the county convention, we understand, as they had in the last convention. This, with the exception of Kincheon and and Benson beats, which, we learn will be entitled to increased delegations.

Mr. Felix Ashley, who recently moved to Clanton, has three acres in fine cabbages which are now ready for shipping. He expects to get 30,000 head from the three acres. This number at 10 cents a head—the market price—will net quite a snug sum, and shows what can be done in our section, in the way of truck farming.

Rev. J. S. Allen, of Texas, a brother of Mrs. O. R. Bell and Mrs. James Bell, of this place, is visiting his sisters here. Mr. Allen is a student of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville. He filled the Baptist pulpit at this place on Sunday last, morning and evening, and was listened to by large and attentive congregations.

Died, at her home in this county, on the 29th day of May last, of heart disease, Mrs. Rebecca Davenport, wife of D. H. Davenport. A good neighbor, a loving wife, a kind and affectionate mother, a noble woman has gone to her last home. We mourn only for our earthly loss, and rejoice in that she was ready and willing to die.

E. D. C.

Prof. W. U. Acree is young in years, but ripe in experience. He continues to give satisfaction as County Superintendent of Education by his thorough business management of the responsible duties of his position. Last Saturday was a busy day with him. He settled twenty-five claims, and found time to throw in a pleasant word with every chinking silver dollar.

Verbena Views.

Rain! Rain! Corn and cotton growing finely, and the prospects are good for hard work in clearing the fields of the young grass that is fast springing up.

We are still on our lone search for the man who has consulted the interests of his country, and at the earnest solicitation of many friends has decided to accept any political honor that might be conferred upon him.

Mr. Jno. T. Wellls, one of our promising young men, has gone to Marion, to take in the "Howard" and "Judson" commencements.

A "bubble party," something new in the way of entertainments, came off at Mrs. Jackson's, last Thursday night. We did not learn who got the biggest bubble, but suppose the successful party took off all the honors of the occasion.

And now the boys are striking up their song with genuine melody:

Only a few more days,
So the "Professor" says;
Only to face that crowd,
And then if we're allowed,
One grand hurrah we'll raise,
And FREEDOM shout.

The Baptist church will be decorated, and every effort will be made to insure the success of the children's concert next Sunday.

Mrs. H. F. DeBardeleben, of Birmingham, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. S. T. Brittle.

The muddy appearance of our streets and sidewalks during rainy weather suggests that material improvement could be made by a good coat of gravel.

Miss Abbotte Spratlen, assistant teacher at our academy, will spend several weeks in Montgomery.

We are informed by a responsible man that Verbena pays more tax than all the other towns in the county put together.

Verbena has several good men whose capacity for the position and popularity throughout the county would give them great strength as legislative aspirants at the county convention, but these men will not sacrifice their private interests and absent themselves from their families, to discharge the onerous and poorly remunerated duties of a representative looking to the interests of his constituency.

With this issue of the VIEW we close our career as Verbena correspondent. We have endeavored to keep the paper well supplied with locals, and the many tokens of appreciation that we have received were all that we could desire for our humble services. If, in the discharge of what we considered our duty we have wronged any one, we simply ask that our error may be covered by the mantle of charity. Humanity is fallible, and we are no exception. We go forth to enter upon other duties; and, wherever on life's plain our feet may wander, we shall take with us the highest regard for those whom we consider our friends among Verbena's many noble hearted people.

BIJOU.

ED. VIEW:—The time is at hand for the selection of suitable persons to represent us in the next Legislature. In doing this we should select such persons as those who are identified with the public good and whose interest is in building up and developing our resources and common prosperity, and at the same time possesses the capacity for that purpose and has the moral courage to do right under any and all circumstances. In looking round for such a man, my mind has fallen on one who in my opinion possesses all the necessary qualifications in an eminent degree. Should he be selected and will consent to serve us, he will make a representative of whom we shall be proud. I have nothing to say against any of the worthy gentleman who have been spoken of in the same connection. The person to whom I allude is W. H. Lawrence, editor and publisher of the CHILTON VIEW. Now, Mr. Editor, while I feel disposed to congratulate you upon the success of your valuable paper, I will ask you not to throw this in the waste basket, but let it appear in the VIEW.

A VOTER.

The Courier-Journal sends forth these straws on the national Republican convention and its work:

"For verily what shall it profit the Republican party that it sat down on Powell Clayton and then sat up James G. Blaine?"

"The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the New York Swallow-tail has not where to lay his head."

"It was a great racket up at Chicago Friday, but it sounded as if the Republican party was beating its "last tattoo."

"As predicted, the Southern contingent as soon as they saw which way the wind lay, broke for the Maine chance."

"The nomination of Blaine was at once the most dangerous and the weakest, the Republicans could have made."

"We are inclined to stick to our first love, McDonald and Cleveland, both of whom are particularized by the work of the Republicans at Chicago."

"MUSIC HATH CHARMS."—We would recommend all who wish to secure a first-class piano or organ, to send for catalogue to the B. Shoninger Piano and Organ Company, of New Haven, Conn. Established in 1850. This house has the reputation of being one of the most reliable manufacturing concerns in the United States. We believe a large amount can be saved by ordering direct from the factory, over the usual retail prices, and purchasers will have the satisfaction of knowing that they will receive a first-class instrument fully warranted.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken out of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup For Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhoea, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructations of Food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

HE FEELS LIKE A NEW MAN.

"I have had Dyspepsia, with Constipation, two years, and have used one box of your pills, and TUTT'S are the first that have done me any good. They have cleared me out nicely. By appetite is splendid, food digests readily, and I feel like a new man." W. B. ROWLAND, Atlanta, Ga. Sold everywhere, 25c. Office, 39 Murray St., N. Y.

THE LOST CHILD.

"We ought her to the field and grove
Whereby they thought her feet might rove
Exploring every nook and cove;
And down within the shady dell
Where the wild lily hung its bell
And filled the air with pleasant smell;
And where wild rose and ivy made
Labyrinths obscure of sun and shade,
And the light chestnuts' tassels swayed;
And where the pale sweet May-pinks grew
And violets opened eyes of blue
Weeping bright drops of honeydew;
But all in vain! Then some one said:
"The river winds along its bed
Through meadows blossomed white and red.
Perhaps she wandered there." All fled
Were turned toward this last retreat
Where they might hope the child to meet.

And one along the river side
On white sand left there by the tide,
The prints of tiny feet espied.
And stooping down with straining sight
And eyes hand-shaded from the light,
Caught a faint glimpse of something white,
He raised it with a trembling hand,
And drew it heavily to land,
And laid the dead child on the sand.

NANCY A. W. PRIEST.

THREE MINUTES TO TWELVE

On a cold December night some twenty years ago, when the earth was bound in a black frost and the bitter wind blew strong and shrewdly, I was returning home from spending the evening at a friend's house, situated some three or four miles out of the town. The sky was so black, the country lanes were so dark, that I was truly thankful when the scattered lights of an outlying suburb began to twinkle in the distance; and it was with a sigh of relief that I stopped under the first lamp-post I came to and looked at my watch. It was no easy task, for the lamp-glass had a pane broken and the strong wind blew the gas in all directions and almost extinguished it.

I read the time at last—three minutes to twelve—and, looking up from my watch-face, I started to see a man standing close opposite me. I had heard nothing of his approach. We looked at each other but for a moment, yet it was time sufficient to imprint his features indelibly on my memory. A tall, shabby man, in a threadbare, black frock coat and a seedy tall hat, his face lantern-jawed and sallow, his eyes sunken and tearless, his beard long and ill-trimmed. In a tone of elaborate civility he asked me the time, thanked me for the answer, and, giving me good night, passed into the black darkness which seemed to engulf him like a grave.

I turned for a moment to think of his lonely walk in that grim obscurity, and resumed my homeward way, laughing at myself for the start he had given me, and reflecting that the strong wind had blown away the sound of his approach. I thought of him as I sat and smoked my pipe over my fire, and felt a comfortable shudder steal upon me as I imagined him facing the bitter blast in his insufficient clothing.

In the course of a week or two the incident—trifling enough, heaven knows—faded from my memory and I thought no more of it.

In those days I was actively engaged in the timber trade, and the course of my business took me a good deal about the county and brought me largely in contact with the agents of the different noblemen and countrymen of the district. With one of these agents, who resided in the county town of L——, I had numerous transactions and I used often to run down to L—— to meet him, for the town was only fifteen miles away and on a line of railway. It was a dull little hole enough, that only warmed up when the militia were out or the assizes were on.

One night I returned from L——, having just made a large purchase from my friend the agent, whose master, a sporting nobleman, was induced to cut down the family timber. When I fell asleep that night I had a very simple but vivid dream. I thought I was standing on a lofty hill. By my side stood a veiled figure who, with a commanding gesture, motioned me toward the town of L——, which lay in the far distance. Then I awoke.

Of course I explained the thing to myself easily enough. I had been a good deal engaged in the neighborhood of the place and had a large venture more or less remotely connected with it. Still the dream was so vivid that I could not dismiss it from my thoughts during the whole day, and when I went to bed at night I wondered if it would again visit me.

It did come again; precisely the same dream in precisely the same manner. Once more I feigned a convincing explanation. Doubtless I had been thinking too much about the first dream, and this had given rise to the second. But my explanation did not convince me in the least; again I was haunted by the thing throughout the day, and when I came home at night my preoccupation was so evident that it attracted the attention of my wife. She questioned me upon the cause, and, only too glad to unbosom myself of what was now almost a trouble, I told her about the dream and its repetition. She had the tact not to laugh at me, but was evidently little impressed by the narrative.

The third night it came again, if anything more vividly and startling than before. This time I was utterly unhinged; the pale face that fronted me in the looking-glass was hardly recognizable for my own. I went down to breakfast filled with a foreboding of some misfortune—bad news in my letters—I knew not what.

The maid entered with the letter-bag.

"There," said my wife, passing me a letter on which was the L—— postmark. "That breaks your dream, John."

I opened it hurriedly. It was from the agent, requesting me to meet him at L—— that day at 1 o'clock, to arrange a matter that had arisen in the purchase of his estate.

I was intensely relieved. Here was an opportunity to go to L——, and perhaps the very last of going until my business was completed. There were two fast trains to L—— in the morning, but I decided to go by the first, regardless of the fact that I should have some hours to wait. So I found myself shortly in a first-class compartment, speeding away toward my destination.

The carriage was full. Pipes exhaled their fragrance, newspapers were turned and fluttered and there was that leisurely kind of morning conversation that prevails among men going off by an early train to their day's work. I soon discovered that I had fallen amongst a party of barristers and their chief topic was a peculiarly interesting case which was to be finished to-day at the L—— assizes.

"He must sum up against the prisoner," said a gentleman with a fat, florid face and long sandy whiskers, who wore a light overcoat and shepherd's plaid trousers. "The defense was a complete failure and deserved to be."

"It was certainly rather audacious," returned a clean-shaven young man with a double eyeglass, who sat opposite me. "But I don't like circumstantial evidence."

"All evidence is more or less circumstantial," said he of the florid complexion; "and this man is as clearly guilty to my mind as if there had been a dozen witnesses to stand by and see him do the deed. That is my opinion, Heywood." And the oracle disappeared behind its newspaper.

Feeling glad to discover any topic that would divert my thoughts from their gloomy forebodings I addressed myself to Heywood, the young barrister, with whom I had a slight acquaintance.

"You seem to be much interested in this trial that is going on," I said. "May I ask if you are engaged upon it?"

"No," he answered. "But it is a curious case. A man, a clerk, dismissed from his employment, is accused of murdering the cashier of the firm. The evidence against him is entirely circumstantial, but the defense broke down at the most critical point, and the case certainly looks very black for the prisoner.

The train was now slacking speed, and there was a general rising. I arose too.

"Are you going to get out here?" said Mr. Heywood, opening the door as we glided into the station. "Have you come down so early on business?"

"Ye—es," I said, wishing to goodness I knew what the immediate business was. "Nothing very urgent, though," I added, half to myself, as I got out.

"If you have the time to spare you had better turn in and hear the end of the trial," said Heywood. "The court will be crowded with ladies, no doubt, but I can smuggle you into a corner."

Not knowing what to do with myself for the next two hours, I accepted the offer with gratitude. I was soon seated in an obscure corner of a dingy, ill-lighted, ill-ventilated court-house, which would have been ill-smelling, too, had it not been for the scent wafted from the numerous ladies who were present. One of these, a buxom female obstruction, who ought to have known better, was just in front of me and blocked my view with an enormous bonnet. I could not see the prisoner or his counsel, or even the clock over his head, at which the people kept looking eagerly as the hour fixed for the recommencement of the trial approached. At last there was a stir and bustle, caused by persons invisible to me, then a call for silence, and after a few preliminaries the summing up commenced.

I listened the more intently because I could see nothing. The clear, cold, telling sentences cut deep into my consciousness. How distinct and convincing it all was! How all those minute facts, the mute testimony of footmarks and the like, arranged and distributed by that powerful intellect, grouped themselves into the damning proof of guilt. I cared nothing for the prisoner, had no personal interest in the trial, but my mind was wonderfully fascinated by this tale of horror. At length the weighty tones ceased and a murmur of relief and expectation ran round the assembly. At this moment the woman with the huge bonnet shifted her seat and I obtained a full view of the prisoner. I started involuntarily. Where had I seen that face before?

The jury returned after a short absence; the verdict was guilty, accompanied with a recommendation to mercy. Again the judge's solemn tones sounded through the court, again they ceased.

There was dead silence. I sprang to my feet as if impelled to do so by some unseen power, and looked steadily at the prisoner. His face was averted from me for the moment, but the looks of the people showed that he was about to speak. Slowly he turned round and, in a voice whose deep, earnest tones could be heard all over the assembly, he said:

"There lives but one man who can prove me innocent—and there he stands."

With white face and outstretched arm he pointed—at me. I gazed at him with a sudden flash of recognition. It was the man I had seen under the lamp. And, by a strange coincidence, at this moment the court clock struck twelve.

The plea that had been set up by the defense was a—alibi. But there was a space of some two hours that could not be accounted for, and the theory of the prosecution was that the crime had been committed during that time. My evidence supplied the missing link; for the place in which I had seen the man was so far distant from the scene of the murder that it was impossible for him to have been anywhere near at the time of its commission.

And the dream? Only a coincidence, you will say, perhaps, or a fit of indigestion, or my timber contract. Nevertheless, as I have told it you, so it happened. Explain it away who can.

"Then lost her money," said the female stock broker, in court, "because she was a bull when she ought to have been a bear." A man loses his money on Wall street not so much by being a bear as by being a dyed-in-the-wool jobber.

A DETROIT woman wants a divorce because her husband, she has discovered, lied to her before he married her. He told her that he owned a horse and wagon, and possessed neither. But he claims that he told her the truth, inasmuch as he owned a wood-horse and a dog, and the latter's tail had a wag-on.

CLEANING TIME.

The smell of soap suds in the air,
The floors and walls entirely bare,
The piles of debris everywhere,
The housewife with a vacant stare,
And handkerchief tied o'er her hair,
Are signs which all men fear.
They know that when they stumble o'er
The pots and kettles on the floor,
They'll clutch a freshly-painted door,
And vainly, wildly thirst for gore,
Because, as in the days of yore,
House-cleaning time is here.

Severe Fines.

Inquiry was made at a late meeting of the Lime-Kiln Club for Brother Mo-Adamized Taylor, and when the member had stepped forward to the desk with the look of a man about to receive a silver medal for saving the life of an Alderman, Brother Gardner said:

"Brudder Taylor, at de las' meetin' of dis club you attempted to enter dis lodge-room in sich a drunken condishun dat you didn't know Giveadam Jones from Elder Toots."

"I'se sorry, sah."

"In so'se you is, but dat doan' alter de case in de least. In de fust place de man who gits drunk am an idiot. In de nex' place, de man who gits drunk an' fo'ces his company upon sober people ought to be taught a lesson. I shall fine you $637, an' in case you repeat de offense you will leave dis club in sich a hurry as will make things swim befo' yer eyes!"

FINES CANCELED.

The President announced that he had canceled the following fines for reasons specified:

Samuel Shin—$3,600 for breaking the stove door. Canceled on account of his wife running off to Canada with another man.

Equananimity Taylor—$1,450 for calling Elder Toots a liar on the alley stairs. Canceled because it was proved that the Elder did lie.

Put Back Hascall—$650.76 for raising the cry of fire during a regular meeting and pulling up fifty or sixty members at the foot of the stairs. Canceled because he was determined to commit suicide and beat the club out of it anyhow.—Detroit Free Press.

AGUERO'S FORCE.—The news has been received in Madrid from Cuba that Aguero's force now numbers 226 men. Of these forty-three are either ex-chiefs of late insurrections in Cuba or have been otherwise identified with those movements and the balance are escaped slaves. Four plantations in Cuba have been destroyed by Aguero. It is said that another filibustering expedition is now fitting out at Turks Islands for Cuba. These islands are under British dominion.

SEVERAL ladies who had been reading reports of Washington society, where Mrs. Senator, Mrs. Congressman and Mrs. So on were mentioned, attended an entertainment in Little Rock recently, and the next morning's paper contained the following notice: "Among the guests were Mrs. Justice of the Peace Jackalion, Mrs. Deputy Sheriff Pugelmore, Mrs. Policeman Lobcops and Mrs. Assistant Dog Catcher Bootjan."

DRIVEN OFF.—The Kentucky House of Representatives has passed a bill prohibiting the use of tricycles on the public roads in a large number of specified counties, the reason alleged being that they are dangerous to life and limb, and have caused much be frightening horses.

KNOCKED MANY TOBACCO.

What the Boys who Smoke Cigarettes have to Smoke.

"Just see them go for them! I suppose they enjoy the cold collation as much as we do our Havanas."

Two gentlemen had just cast their half-smoked cigars into the street, and the above remark was called out by seeing a couple of gamins dive in the gutter for the stumps.

"Enjoy them? Well, I guess not. Do you imagine that they smoke all of the old 'butts' they manage to scoop in about the city?"

"I never gave it a thought, but I don't see what else they want them for."

"You will be surprised then when I tell you that these old stumps which are gathered by the ton about the city, from hotel cuspidores, saloon ashboxes, railway waiting-rooms and public places generally, as well as from the gutters, are manufactured into cigarettes and smoking tobacco, but I am informed that such is the case, and that this 'second-hand' business is becoming quite an industry. Why, a dealer was explaining the process to me the other day. Of course you don't see any large concerns engaged in this business; the trade is carried on in obscure shops and tenement houses, and hence few people outside those who are engaged in it have any idea of its extent. There are probably hundreds of persons connected with the industry right here in Boston.

"The process of transforming the filthy accumulations of gutters and cuspidores into bright, finely-flavored smoking tobacco is thus explained: The old cigar stumps, after the charred ends are cut off, are soaked in a solution of ammonia and some other chemical, which takes nearly all the nicotine from the tobacco and removes all traces of smoke and creosote. The mass of pulpy tobacco is then pressed into cakes and sliced by a cutting machine, after which it is given a bath in a bleaching solution which removes nearly all the properties of which the weed is possessed when it comes from the plantation. It is now taken to the roof on trays and left to dry in the sun. When thoroughly dry it is carefully taken up on the trays and carried below, where it is passed under an atomizer, by which it is dampened with a preparation of glycerine and some flavoring extract, after which it is in shape to be made into cigarettes or put up in packages as smoking tobacco. The business is said to be perfectly legitimate, as the manufacturers comply with the requirements of the revenue laws, and the tobacco thus pays a double tax."

"It's a good thing that those who smoke this second-hand tobacco don't realize what it is, or its use might be lessened."

"I don't know about that. Those who ought to know say that the cigarettes thus made are far less harmful than many of those put up in more attractive shape, and that it would be a good thing for the youth of the country if all cigarettes were made of second-hand tobacco, prepared by this process."—Boston Globe.

The Right Kind of a Father.

A New York lady, the young and handsome daughter of a prominent and wealthy business-man, was engaged to the son of a wealthy Chicago machine manufacturer. Chicago came to New York a few weeks before the date of the wedding. He began to go around pretty freely with the boys, and did not devote much attention to his fair affianced. When he did call he offended the family by boasting of his wealth, and acting indiscreetly generally. He became actually offensive to the young lady and she told her sister she could never marry him, her father was absent from home at the time, but her brothers insisted that it would disgrace the family to break the engagement with Chicago, and won her reluctant consent to the marriage. The young lady's father arrived home a few days before the date of the wedding, and declared that if his daughter did not love the man she should not marry him. As for any disgrace involved in acting under such a rule, he, the head of the family, was prepared to meet it. Chicago was accordingly dismissed. Everybody whose opinion is worth having commends his action. Chicago soon after returned home.

He Left the Army.

The following story is told to illustrate Bismarck's hatred of the Jews: "A young Prussian army officer lately became betrothed to the heiress of a wealthy manufacturer. The family were of Jewish extraction, but all of its members, including the young lady herself, have long since become converts to Christianity. As soon as the fact of his engagement became known the bridegroom-elect was cut by one and all of his brother officers, who would cross the street when they saw him coming to avoid exchanging salutations with him. He applied to be appointed to another post, but through the influence of the Chancellor his applications were invariably refused. He has now resigned from the army and is studying law, preferring to relinquish his career as a military man rather than to break off his engagement."

He Got His Answer.

Jenny Lind once went to hear Father Taylor preach in Boston, but the preacher, ignorant of her presence, paid a glowing tribute to her powers of song. As the Swedish nightingale leaned forward with delight, drinking in this unexpected praise, a tall man, who sat on the pulpit stairs, began slowly to unwind himself, and when he had done so wanted to know whether any one who had died at Miss Lind's concerts would go to heaven. Father Taylor said: "Sir, a Christian will go to heaven wherever he dies; but a fool will be a fool, even though he be on the pulpit stairs. It would take more grace to save such a man as that than it would take plain milk to feed an elephant."

AN INDIAN ROMANCE.

A Singular Little Story of Liberty Sold in New York Centre.

Recently seven girls were sent to the Lincoln Institution, in Philadelphia, from the St. Regis Indian Agency, New York. Their history is interesting. The village of St. Regis, Franklin County, N. Y., stands upon a point of land running out into the St. Lawrence river. About one hundred and fifty years ago, while two boys and a girl were playing in a barn at Groton, Mass., some Indians suddenly appeared, seized the boys and fled, carrying them both to the Indian village of Caughnawaga, nine miles above Montreal. These boys were adopted by the tribe and in after years were married to Indian brides. In course of time jealousies arose which made it desirable for these white Indians to leave their adopted home. Accordingly they took their wives and children, embarked in canoes and paddled up the St. Lawrence to this beautiful spot, which they named "Akwis-sas-ne." This name was afterward changed to St. Regis, in honor of a Jesuit, S. Jean Francois Regis.

The little church of the village occupies a prominent place. Its spire is surmounted by a cross and its belfry holds the famous St. Regis bell. This bell was brought from France in the reign of the "Grande Monarque," but the vessel bearing it was captured by the English and carried as a prize to Salem, Mass., where the bell was sold to the inhabitants of Deerfield, who, after filing off the Romish motto around the rim, placed it over a house of worship under the direction of the celebrated John Williams. The news of the capture and of the position of the bell finally reached the ears of Father Nicholas and his Indians. These, late in the winter of 1704, with an expedition of French sent out by the Governor of Canada, fell upon the sleeping village at daybreak, massacred the inhabitants and bore off in triumph the long-coveted treasure. This village of St. Regis was ceded by the treaty of 1796 to the United States. It is now known as the St. Regis Agency. The Indians are all half-breeds, though originally of the Iroquois tribe. So it will be seen that seven girls from this famous village, descendants of the white boys captured in Massachusetts, also descendants of the Indians participating in the Deerfield massacre, will shortly be neighbors of the peaceful inhabitants of Delaware and Chester counties.

A California Romance.

Twenty-five or thirty years ago, says a California newspaper correspondent, I think, at Marysville, California, which was then an established yet shanty-like town, lived Judge Stephen Field, and in his law office was a young fellow named George Gorham, who boarded with a plain family, and at the table, another guest, was a florid, Welsh-looking stranger. In the same house, or the next house, lived an Irishman named Murphy, who had a bright, interesting daughter, but he was fond of paddling her when anything went wrong with him. This paddling had been going on for some time, and one day the boarders held an indignation meeting and resolved to go next door and see old Murphy, and tell him that if he did not stop correcting that child on every and all occasions they would take him down to the stream and duck him, etc. None of the guests were especially brave, but they put on a very brave front and held the indignation meeting. Several years afterward one of these parties, Field, was called to be Justice of the Supreme Court. Still later by several years, the Republicans in California nominated Gorham for Governor, and they put on the ticket with him the present United States Senator Jones. When Jones met Gorham he said: "Are you the little fellow from Long Island that boarded at Marysville with me? Don't you know me?" "No, I don't think I do." "Why, I'm Jones, the Welsh-looking fellow that formed one of the posse to go in and make old Murphy stop keeping that child screaming." They shook hands warmly and then Jones said: "Gorham, do you know what has become of that Mary Murphy?" "No." "Why, she is now Mrs. William Sharon."

My informant says that consequently there met at Washington City Jones and Sharon in the united States Senate, Gorham, Secretary of the Senate, and Field on the Supreme Bench—all brought out of that boarding-house. Mary Murphy grew up to be an interesting woman, and the paddling was only temporarily disadvantageous.

Elephants for Farm Work.

A private letter from a native of Hartford, now in the "British Straits Settlements," India, says: I am pulling along here very well; managed to secure several hundred bushels of coffee more than I had estimated, and this is pleasant. Value of our crop, about $3,000. Never had the pleasure before of working with elephants. Sent away our crop with them this season. I did not intrude myself too much upon their attention. You see I did not feel entitled to the honor of an intimate acquaintance. I treated them with great respect and deference, much the same as a street Arab does a policeman. I can't get over my antipathy to that "trunk." The Malay style of feeding elephants has certainly the merit of simplicity. When the day's work is done they are turned out into the jungle to find their own food; and so they go rambling about all night, pulling and tearing away at any tree they fancy. When morning comes the drivers, tracing them by their own apparent marks, put the driving hook over their ears and lead them off to work. Elephants seem to graze in a forest quite as contentedly as cattle in a pasture. Their ability to scramble up and down apparent impossible places is wonderful. I never saw any animal before show the intelligence to break a branch off a tree to fan away the flies. They keep at them to our endless amusement for this purpose.

"Do you think," asked a college student of a gentleman of theology, "that the lion and the lamb have ever lain down together?" "I don't know," answered the professor, "but if they have, I have no doubt the lamb was missing soon after that date."—Baltimore Day.

Good News From Texas.

Mr. Thomas A. Howard, of Honey Grove, Fannin county, Texas, under date of April 5, 1883, writes as follows:

I have been suffering during several years from severe illness, and a general breaking down of my physical system, and have tried the treatment and prescriptions of many doctors far and near, and traveled to the Hot Springs and other mineral springs famous for their remedial qualities, drinking the waters and bathing systematically in their healing depths, but all to no avail, as I steadily failed in health; and although informed by my physicians that my ailments and weaknesses were the result of kidney disease of a dangerous character, they could give me nothing to cure me. During the past two years my sufferings at times were dreadful, and I had the most indescribable pains in the regions about the kidneys, the paroxysms of which were so severe as to render it impossible for me to sleep. While in this deplorable and discouraged condition I was persuaded to try Hunt's Remedy, and after using less than half a bottle my great sufferings and paroxysms of pain were entirely relieved, and I could sleep better and longer than I had in two years before, and although I am now on my third bottle only my improvement is very remarkable, and I regret that I did not know of the wonderful curative powers of Hunt's Remedy before, as it would have saved me years of suffering. I heartily recommend it to all afflicted with any kidney disease or disease of the urinary organs."

"Hit My Case Exactly."

Please allow me to speak in the highest terms of "Hunt's Remedy," for it hit my case exactly. I had kidney and urinary trouble pretty bad. I was recommended Hunt's Remedy. I took one teaspoonful as directed. I felt a decided change at the first dose. I took two bottles, and have felt like a new man ever since. Please receive the sincere thanks of myself for the benefits which I sought vainly for and found only in Hunt's Remedy.

I will cheerfully give this same opinion of Hunt's Remedy to any one who wishes it, by addressing ROBERT D. ARCHER,

BABY LOUISE.

I'm in love with you, Baby Louise!
With your silken hair and your soft blue eyes,
And the dreamy wisdom that in them lies,
And the faint sweet smile you brought from the skies—
God's sunshine, Baby Louise!

When you fold your hands, Baby Louise—
Your hands, like a fairy's, so tiny and fair—
With a pretty, innocent, saint-like air,
Are you trying to think of some angel-taught prayer
You learned above, Baby Louise?

I'm in love with you, Baby Louise!
Why, you never raise your beautiful head!
Some day, little one, your cheek will grow red
With a flush of delight to hear the words said:
"I love you," Baby Louise,

Do you hear me, Baby Louise!
I have sung your praise for nearly an hour,
And your lashes keep drooping lower and lower,
And you've gone to sleep like a weary flower,
Ungrateful Baby Louise!

MARGARET ETTINGER.

A Wife's Charm

A pout upon the red lips of Gerald Sinclair's young wife—unmistakably a pout—for though a wife of almost two years, her fond, indulgent husband had for the first time said nay to an openly expressed wish.

The fancy ball of the season, a grand and fashionable assemblage, was to take place during his absence, and he had said that he should prefer she would not attend.

She was only 20. Let this much be said in extenuation of the two great tears that rose to the brown eyes and slowly trickled down the pretty face, splashing on to the dainty morning dress, which, clinging to the dainty form, revealed so perfectly its graceful outlines.

Certainly, Niobe had no reason to feel ashamed of this one of her children. But Gerald Sinclair had only stooped and kissed away the glistening drops, in a half-hurried manner, perhaps to hide his awakening remorse.

"Never mind, little wife. I'll make it up to you another time."

Then he was gone; but she sat still turning and returning her wedding ring, with eyes bent upon it. It was a curious ring—a solid band, set with five large diamonds.

It had been her charm, her talisman, not to be taken from her finger until soul and body had parted; but this morning it had lost its charm. If it failed to scatter the clouds, it failed to bring back the sunshine.

Even when the hour came round for Gerald's home-coming, he missed his usual warm welcome; but he thought that he might trust his wife's heart and said nothing. The next day he started on his journey.

"You're not going, my dear?" exclaimed Mrs. Martin, bursting in upon her friend on the morning of the ball. "And why not?"

"Gerald is away," replied Mrs. Sinclair, with some little show of wifely dignity, as though the fact were in itself sufficient explanation.

"And why need that make any difference?" pursued Mrs. Martin, a bewitching little widow, some years her friend's senior. "I will share my escort with you—Count Belsoni!"

Sophie Sinclair looked up amazed. She knew the man mentioned had but lately gained entree into society, and knew also that her husband disliked and distrusted him.

Once or twice she had seen his eye fixed admiringly upon herself, and had felt somewhat as the bird might feel beneath the basilisk glare of the serpent.

"Well, why don't you answer?" continued Mrs. Martin. "Will you go?"

"No, no," she replied, trying to speak with firm decision. "Besides, I do not think that Gerald admires the Count."

"Prejudice, my dear, all prejudice. The Count is the most charming and agreeable man I know. Indeed, I think I should be cancelled for my willingness to share his attentions, especially as I have heard him say all manner of pretty things about you."

"Nonsense, Ellen," retorted Mrs. Sinclair.

But she felt the ground slipping beneath her feet as she spoke.

After all Gerald had not said positively no! Had he thought it necessary after he had openly expressed his disapprobation of her going?

He had not known that she might be so sorely tempted. Besides she would wear a mask. No one would know her; and when she told Gerald he would forgive her. A sudden thought came to her.

"I will go," she said at last, after continued urging, and looking at the picture in all its bright-est lights. "On one condition, still that in that no one is to know me—not even the Count. Say that you have persuaded a friend to accompany you, who wishes to remain unknown. I will come to your house, where he will find me, and thus gain no clue."

So it was decided; but, in spite of her exquisite costume of a fairy as she completed it and herself beneath a huge domino, as the clock on her mantel chimed ten, it seemed to Sophie that every stroke said: "Stay! stay!"

She was almost tempted to [illegible] soul's arm, she entered upon the brilliant scene. So far he had not seemed curious to ascertain her identity. She experienced at this a singular sense of relief.

The ball was at its height when the clock rang out the hour of midnight, but for the first time in her life light and gayety were distasteful. A hundred times she wished herself at home.

"I will tell Gerald. I have already been punished," she whispered to herself, as she stood for a moment alone in a quiet corner.

"You look more like a nun than a fairy—rather like one who had foresworn the vanities of the world, than a siren to tempt men to their destruction," said a voice close to her, "though to the latter I know no one more fitted."

"Sir!" she exclaimed indignantly, recognising, as she spoke, the Count standing at her elbow.

"Ah, you thought I did not know you. I should penetrate any disguise you wore. Besides you have forgotten to remove a badge of recognition."

She followed with her eyes his downward glance, and saw that it rested on her hand, ungloved, as in better accord with the exigencies of her costume.

Involuntarily she drew it away, with the ring which had betrayed her.

Denial was useless.

"Since you know me, then," she said, "we will not further play a part. To the others we are masks, to ourselves we are ourselves."

"Ah, madame," he whispered, "let us rather say to the world we are ourselves, to each other we are a mask. Can men, think you, look coldly on such beauty as you possess? Can——"

Indignant and alarmed, she checked his further speech by starting forward to escape him. His hand closed on hers as in a vice. She wrenched it from him, sprang among a crowd of maskers, and so made her way to the door.

"Call a carriage for me," she directed.

Ten minutes later she was within her own home. Her first impulse was to tear off the hated costume which had caused her such trouble; her next to throw herself on the bed and sob out her excitement and contrition. The morning sun, streaming into her room, awoke her.

With a shudder, she remembered the events of the past night. She looked down at her hand—the hand which had been polluted by another's touch—as though in some way she expected to find the contamination brand on its soft white surface. It was all unmarred; but— She looked again—she rubbed her eyes and looked—the color meanwhile fluttering out of her cheeks, and her pale lips quivering, as if her heart seemed to stand still in a sudden agony of fear; for from the third finger was missing the talismanic ring.

When and where she had lost it, and how could she now find the courage to confess all to Gerald? She rose and dressed, revolving this problem in her mind.

At any hour her husband might return. For the first time she dreaded to meet him—dreaded to look into his kindly, handsome eyes and read there all his incredulous reproach, mingled perhaps with scorn and anger.

The day wore on. Her friend, Mrs. Martin, ran in to scold her for her desertion; but her pale face and trembling tones made good her plea of sudden illness.

At nightfall Gerald arrived. She threw herself into his arms in a burst of nervous weeping; but when he wonderingly asked its cause, her courage failed her.

Why was it that she never imagined that he might look stern until to-day?

A week passed, when one evening, sitting in the twilight, a step sounded close beside. She looked up to discover the Count.

"Pardon!" he began, in answer to her indignant, questioning look. "Why must you be so cruel? May I not now see you?"

"Sir, I command you to leave me. I am under the protection of my own [illegible]."

He was about to answer, when a latch key was heard inserted in the outside door.

In an instant he had sprung into some place of concealment, but the fact escaped Mrs. Sinclair in the young wife's sudden scourge, born of the moment's [illegible]. Her husband entering, appreciated [illegible] but she motioned him back.

"Gerald," she said, "I have a bitter confession to make. It is [illegible] you also [illegible] now."

He listened, with [illegible] upon his breast, while she told him all the [illegible] that night.

"And is this all?" he [illegible] bitterly, when she had paused.

"All," she continued, raising her voice. "My confession has another witness, who has forced his hated presence again upon me. The Count Belsoni is here again, Gerald."

As she spoke she drew aside the curtain; but the form she expected to disclose was gone, the open window attesting to its flight.

Silently she handed him a piece of paper from the pocket, that showed but a few [illegible] following a [illegible] of the [illegible]

THE PLEURO-PNEUMONIA BILL.

A Second Minister Attacks the Department of Agriculture.

When the U. S. Senate began the consideration of the bill to establish a Bureau of Animal Industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and provide for the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals, the House bill was substituted for the Senate bill. Mr. Plumb said that the cattle interests of the country were unanimously in favor of the legislation proposed by the bill.

Mr. McPherson stated that the alarming reports spread throughout the country and Europe some months ago had been discovered to be unfounded, and those reports had come principally from such people as the bill under consideration provided should be appointed as inspectors of meats for export.

Mr. Coke severely criticised the Department of Agriculture for spreading false reports of the nature of the disease among American cattle. This bill had already been twice kicked out of the Senate, and should be kicked out again. The States separately were quite efficient to deal with their own cattle, and should not be interfered with. If the Agricultural Department would stop libelling the cattle of the United States no more trouble would be found with the cattle business.

Mr. Williams regretted that the Senator from Texas, Mr. Coke, had been carried so far by the warmth of his feelings in the denunciation of those who desired the passage of the bill. Mr. Williams said he was himself a stock raiser, and he knew that nineteen-twentieths of all the stock raisers of the country favored this measure, "and," ejaculated Mr. Williams, "to say there is no pleuro-pneumonia in this country—My God!" It was, he said, in New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland and the District of Columbia. Mr. Williams himself had seen it.

Mr. McPherson said he had not been able to find any in New Jersey.

Mr. Williams acknowledged the eminence of "Dr." McPherson as an authority on constitutional law and matters affecting the Navy, but he did not think that that gentlemen could recognise pluero-pneumonia if he saw it.

The Pike County Trout.

Ed. Mott, the Pike county historian, tells of a monster brook trout that has tantalised the sportsmen of that section for ten years. It has been seen time and time again. "Crack fly-casters," says Mott, "have come from New York and Philadelphia every season to try their skill on him. Sometimes as many as half a dozen have gathered at the pool at one time. They fished singly, in pairs, by threes, and by sixes. They fished at daylight, at nightfall, by moonlight. Sunny days, rainy days, chilly days, were tried. They fished with the wind in the north, when no angler ventures forth. They fished with the wind in the west, when the trout will bite the best. The fished with the wind in the east, when the trout will bite the least. They fished with the wind in the south, which blows the bait in the fish's mouth. But the mammoth denizen of the pool trimmed his sail to no wind, and remained safely in port. One time a teamster, who had taken a day off to go trout fishing, came running helter to the Falls. He was as pale as a sheet. He carried a piece of his chestnut pole in each hand. He had half of his horse-hair line left.

"I hooked the big trout!" he yelled. 'I was baited with a picker'l's belly fin. I played him till he broke my pole as' my line, an' here they be!'

"People rather believed the teamster, and he was quite the lion of the backwoods. He was promoted to be sawyer. But a few days later Doc Jaggers trapped a mink on the creek that had a hook in its jaw and four feet of horsehair line hanging to it. Then that teamster lost caste. He was discharged from the mill. His old place as mule driver was refound him. He went away, and is believed by his former comrades to be a homeless wanderer on the face of the earth."

"Dearie, do you think smoking is [illegible]?" "[illegible] of course. Look at [illegible] don't [illegible]

THE KNOUT IN RUSSIA.

THE TERRIBLE PUNISHMENT INFLICTED UPON A CRIMINAL.

The Wonderful Powers of Endurance on the Part of a Russian Prisoner—300 Blows, and then the Mines of Siberia.

Mazof had murdered a man, a woman and a little boy. Before the magistrate he had made a full confession of his guilt. A determined attempt was made by the soldiers to mob him while he was making his confession, but it was repressed. He was reserved for a much more terrible punishment than that accorded by lynch law. He was sentenced to three hundred and ninety-nine lashes with the knout.

He was marched out to punishment in company with two forgers, all St. Petersburg turning out to witness the spectacle. This horrible show is thus graphically described by the old chronicle:

"The stake prepared for him was a strong block of wood fixed in the ground with three grooves at the top and two rings near the bottom; the middle groove was for the neck, and the two others for the armpits, the rings below to lock round the ankles; about the stake were laid coarse skins, especially where the knout-master trod, upon which lay his whips, marking irons, pincers, etc. An officer then read a paper to the people, signifying that forgery upon the Imperial Bank being a capital crime, two of the prisoners convicted of it were condemned to receive eleven blows with the knout, to have their nostrils pulled out and be banished for life to Siberia; the murderer of so many people to receive three hundred and ninety-nine blows, to be branded three times in the face, have his nostrils pulled out, and, if then alive, to be banished for the mines of Siberia.

"The executioner and his assistants then stripped him, tied his hands ac[illegible] and led him to the post. After fix[illegible] his ankles they bent his neck and a[illegible] over it, and drew the rope with w[illegible] his hands were tied through the rin[illegible] the opposite side, which seemed to stretch all the muscles of the back. [illegible] then retired about four or five y[illegible] from him, and, taking up one of [illegible] knouts, worked it with his hands to [illegible] it a proper elasticity. Walking tow[illegible] he criminal with four or five ste[illegible] steps, then taking a spring, he struc[illegible] perpendicular stroke with a heavy, l[illegible] crack. The first stroke cut from [illegible] right side of the bottom of the neck [illegible] the left armpit. The effect was visi[illegible] in a moment, and by the violence of [illegible] screams afforded reason to suppose [illegible] the pain was very great. The [illegible] was about half an inch below the first [illegible] and so on till twenty-five, when, changing the whip, the operator erased the former wound, striking from the left side to the right, and afterward quite perpendicular. The strokes were given with the greatest regularity. Between each a person might deliberately count eight, the executioner always walking slowly to and from the stake.

"His cries were now so terrible that some of the spectators were obliged to turn their backs and put their fingers in their ears. All was quiet and silent, and the crack of the knout was heard a great distance. After receiving three hundred lashes, the culprit's voice grew faint, and during the last one hundred he showed no signs of life whatever, the whole of the upper part of the back being beaten to a black mummy. After the last blow the assistants lifted up the face by the hair, and the executioner struck him three times with an instrument that left the initial of murderer, throwing each time a handful of black dust into the wound; after which, at two pulls, he tore the gristle of his nose, and loosened him from the block. The whole lasted about three quarters of an hour, and it was generally thought that he had been dead some time; however, he made a feeble attempt to put on his coat, and recovered sufficiently to be able to make some reparation to society by working the iron mines."

Only to Think.

A good story is told of the late Anthony Trollope, Norman Macleod, and John Burns, one of the Cunard Company. They were intimate friends, and made a tour in the Highlands together. Arriving at an inn late at night, they had supper, and after their repast told stories and laughed, as Trollope used to do over here, regardless of other visitors, half the night through. In the morning an old gentleman who occupied a bedroom just above them complained to the landlord that he had been so disturbed by the noise from the party below that he had been unable to sleep, and he greatly regretted that such men should take more than was good for them. "Well," replied the landlord, "I am bound to say there was a good deal of loud talking and laughing, but they had nothing stronger than tea and herrings." "Bless me," rejoined the old gentleman, "if that is so, what would Dr. Macleod and Mr. Burns be after dinner?"

"I open a Chestnut," said a contributor to a [illegible] book, "and find a worm[illegible] I open a book and find a worm, and [illegible] I open a man and find a worm, and [illegible] I open a woman and find a worm, and [illegible] I open a child and find a worm, and [illegible] I open a lawyer and find a worm, and [illegible] I open a preacher and find a worm, and [illegible] I open a politician and find a worm, and [illegible] I open a newspaper and find a worm, and [illegible] I open a dime novel and find a worm, and [illegible] I open a Chestnut and find a worm, and [illegible]

Hanged for Twenty Murders.

TWO MEN WHO MADE A TRADE OF KILLING EXECUTED IN VIENNA.

Hugo Schenck and Karl Schlossarek, who murdered twenty servant girls, were hanged at Vienna. An altar had been fitted up in the prison, and a mass was said, after which both the culprits partook of the sacrament and prayed earnestly and fervently. On the way from their cells to the place of execution the condemned men answered the responses to the office for the dead which the priests, who accompanied them to the spot, under the posts where the fatal nooses were adjusted, were reciting. The word was given, and the prisoners were drawn up and slowly strangled to death.

Karl Schenck, a brother of Hugo, who was also implicated to a certain extent with Hugo and Schlossarek, has been sentenced to life imprisonment.

The Schencks were the sons of a judge in Silesia, who educated them well. They associated themselves with Schlossarek, a confirmed criminal, and with other bad characters. It is not uncommon in Vienna for servants who have saved money to advertise for husbands. Hugo Schenck, a married man, living apart from his wife, used to answer such advertisements, sometimes under pretence of being an engineer in receipt of a good salary, and occasionally as a wealthy aristocrat with a contempt for class prejudices. He would meet the girls by appointment, and, after paying court to them, induce them to draw their money out of the bank and accompany him on a journey to get married. They would go to some retired spot where Schenck had arranged that his accomplices should be in readiness, and together they would strangle or shoot the girl, secure her property, conceal her body and return [illegible]

[illegible] house was formerly known as Miss Julia Crooks. Night and day two nuns kneel constantly before the Host. They all rise at midnight and pray for two hours. They then return to bed and sleep until 5:30 o'clock, when they rise and engage in prayer in their cells. At 6 o'clock they go to the chapel for private prayer and to assist in the mass. At 8 o'clock a little coffee and bread are partaken of, and from 8:30 to 10:30 the nuns work in the community room. Devotions follow till 11 o'clock, when a plain dinner is eaten. Meat is never eaten. From dinner the nuns go to the cloister or garden for recreation. Except at this time there is no conversation in the house, save such talk in undertones as may be absolutely necessary.

There are now in the monastery fifteen full nuns, who wear a white habit and a black veil; six lay sisters, who wear white habits and veils and black aprons, and ten postulants, who dress in black.

The Girl He Left Behind Him.

The Oglethorpe (Ga.) Echo says:—I heard a gentleman who was a member of Gen. Henry L. Benning's brigade tell the following: "One night during the war, while Benning's brigade was encamped in the Wilderness near Chancellorsville, the Second Georgia band, which, by the way, was one of the best bands of music in the whole army—if we are to believe those who listened to the sweet strains—went out to serenade their old General. The band played a great many fine pieces in their most accomplished style and then proposed to return to their bivouac, when Gen. Benning walked out of his tent in a very calm and dignified manner and exclaimed earnestly, 'Good! good! good! Now, boys, play "The Girl I Left Behind Me." That which made such an impression upon the soldiers who were witnessing the scene was that such an old, stern, warlike man as he was, at that time should be thinking of the girl he left behind him. He and the girl he left behind him are now numbered with the dead.

Revenue Receipts.

The collections of internal revenue during the first nine months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, were as follows: From spirits, $85,497,393, an increase of $3,102,449 over the corresponding period of the previous year; from tobacco, $18,854,526, a decrease of $13,710,981; from fermented liquors, $12,676,653, an increase of $605,775; from banks and bankers, $7,[illegible] a decrease of $[illegible]

Valuable Dogs.

While a group of spectators were examining the famous collie, Tweed II., at the New York Dog Show, Mr. F. C. Phebus, of Newmarket, Md., who has grown up with shepherd dogs, became enthusiastic in expatiating on the traits of these animals.

"If you once gain the affection of a collie," he said, "you may starve or abuse it, but he will never desert you. He will die at your feet or on your grave, if you die first. Their intelligence, when intrusted with the care of sheep, is beyond belief, except to those who work with them. This dog has taken a flock of seventy-five sheep from the stock yard at Baltimore, to a farm thirty-six miles away, without losing one of them. His endurance equals his sagacity. He will cross a road sixty-five feet wide twice a minute, and travel all day without resting. With a wave of the hand he will fly from the rear to the front of the flock. At another signal he will divide a flock into two, and if I hold my hand up thus, five fingers extended, he will separate that number out of the flock. He will take a flock of eighteen and divide them into three groups of six each at a word, and never touch one with his teeth. He once took seventy through the streets of Baltimore, a distance of four miles, without losing one. He will also separate chickens from hogs, and hens from roosters, at command."

WITH A GENTLE HAND.

The One Touch of Nature That Makes the Whole World Kin.

They were moving; not the ordinary and regular routine of May 1, when distressed families flock from one cramped and inconvenient dwelling into another of the same type, but this was a going "Out of the old house into the new."

And the mother's face was serious, for there was one of the little flock missing, not lost, but gone before into the new home, in the city whose walls lie four-square.

Thus it happened that one little room was left to the last and as a rough workman laid his hand on the door and pushed it open, the mother cried out as if he had struck her a blow:

"Oh, not there! Not there! I will move those things myself. You cannot touch them!"

"That was baby Grace's room and she died in that little bed," said one of the elder children.

The rough workman stayed his foot on the threshold. Then he touched his hat, and his tone was husky as he said:

"If ye please, ma'am, I'll handle them things gently. I've a little one of my own in glory—the heavens be her bed—and it's myself will see them not a bit damaged, and I'll settle it beyond with you."

It was the "one touch of nature" that "makes the whole word kin."—Detroit Free Press.

Lady Stradbroke Snubbed.

London Truth says: It is quite a mistake to suppose that "the lady of title" who is morally responsible for the London World libel has gone entirely unpunished. The Queen was exceedingly angry with her; and she received an unmistakable hint that she would do well not to attend the drawing room, and Her Majesty also crossed her ladyship's name out of the State ball and concert invitation lists. Indeed the name would have been permanently struck off the Buckingham Palace list but for the Queen's consideration for her ladyship's blameless husband, who has suffered as much mortification from the affair as did the Duc d'Ivry after his spouse's indiscretion at that Congress of Baden of which we read in "The Newcomes." "My lady" has also received the cold shoulder from Marlborough House, so that altogether her position has been by no means so satisfactory as most people suppose.

His Spirits Dampened.

The train halted for a few minutes at the station and a young man who had been entertaining two fair maidens with his cultivated conversation during the last run rushed out and disappeared behind the doors of an adjacent saloon. He swung himself on the car just as the train started and jauntingly resumed his seat and the abruptly interrupted chit-chat.

"Gracious!" exclaimed one of the girls. "How frightened you look!"

"Do I?" he gasped. "I don't feel as if only went out to save a friend."

"You must have met a wicked ghost," she said.

With a puzzled look he murmured: "Why, that's absurd. You know I don't believe in the supernatural."

"Perhaps not," she retorted, with the faintest suggestion of a sneer, "but your breath is awfully suggestive of bad spirits."

The youth muttered something about malaria, and concealed his pungent exhalations behind a paper.

Mr. Grasp—"That reminds me; I just heard the strangest thing. Old Brown recently returned from a visit to Uncle Joe and says that instead of being poor he is very rich and is becoming extravagant. He got into some speculations and made loads of money."

"Goodness gracious!" Who would have thought it? Extravagant, too. He will squander all his money. Don't you think Uncle Joe always was a little queer?"

"Why, so he was. I never thought of it. Poor Uncle Joe."

LEARNING WISDOM.

A Peasant who had Seven Dependents wearing out sole leather for him went to the Cave of a Wise Old Duffer, and besought his Advice as how to bring them up.

"Marry them off as soon as Possible, and you can then Break up Housekeeping and go Boarding among them."

After a few Months the Father returned to the Cave, and his plan had such a Lasting Impression that the Wise Man cried out:

"Ah, you must follow my Advice to learn Wisdom!"

"The Trouble is that I did follow it, but instead of having seven places to board around at I have seven Sons-in-law to board on me."

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., JUNE 19, 1884.

The Jefferson county grand jury has returned about 400 true bills at this term.

Felix L. Smith, of Rockford, is the democratic presidential elector for this (5th) district.

The Senatorial Convention for this Senatorial District will be held at Wetumpka, Tuesday, July, 1st.

The Second Regiment of State Troops will go into encampment at Pickett Springs near Montgomery, next week.

The father of Blaine was a rich man. No man has yet been elected president whose father was rich, and Blaine will not prove an exception.

The Congressional Convention of this, the fifth District, will be held at Verbena, as that place was selected at the called meeting of the Congressional Executive Committee.

The Fort Payne Journal thinks that the deliverance of the State Convention on the convict question was evidently framed with a desire to say as little as possible about an unsavory subject. We shall publish the entire platform as adopted by the convention in next week's paper.

Uncle Sammy Tilden has written a letter in which he postively declines to be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency. The office of President of the United States is neither to be sought nor declined. Mr. Tilden only declined to be a candidate for the position, and it is more than probable that he will distance all competition in the race for the nomination.

The election of Milton H. Smith to the presidency of the Louisville and Nashville is a wise one. He is an expert in his profession and an honest man. We venture to predict that Mr. Smith's absolute control of this system for two years will send its stock to par. Let our Louisville friends make a note of this. We trust Mr. Smith will remove his office to Louisville or Birmingham.—Chronicle.

Oscar Wilde, who was married last Tuesday to Miss Constance Lloyd, has written a silly and and thoroughly characteristic letter to a friend, in which he says he has not been disappointed in married life. He feels confident of his ability to sustain its labors and anxieties, and sees an opportunity in his new relations of realizing a poetical conception he has long entertained. He says that Lord Beaconsfield taught the peers of England a new style of oratory, and similarly he intends to set an example of the pervading influence of art in matrimony.

State Politics.

The following work of the recent State Democratic Convention, we did not find room to publish last week:

W. H. Barnes of Lee, E. W. Bowden of Talladega, were chosen electors for the State at large. The district electors are S. T. Prince for the First District, L. A. Shaver for the second, J. M. Carmichael for the third, G. A. Robins for the fourth, P. L. Smith for the fifth, J. J. Altman for the sixth, W. H. Benson for the seventh, R. A. McClellan for the eighth.

The delegates from the State at large to the Chicago Convention are Gen. L. P. Walker of Madison, Gen. Pettus of Dallas, H. C. Tompkins of Montgomery, Joseph F. Johnston of Jefferson.

The district conventions elected delegates to the national convention as follows:

First District—D. P. Bestor, C. S. Scott. [Jno. C. Webb of Marengo was elected but declined.]

Second District—J. T. B. Ford, J. H. Tisby.

Fourth District—J. E. Webb, J. P. Compton.

Fifth District—W. F. Wilkinson, S. J. Darby.

Sixth District—T. G. Clark, L. B. Musgrove.

Seventh District—J. A. Walden, J. F. B. Jackson.

Eighth District—Daniel Coleman, R. A. McClellan.

The State Executive Committee with N. H. R. Dawson of Dallas as Chairman is as follows:

From the State at large: H. C. Semple of Montgomery, N. H. R. Dawson of Dallas, H. C. Tompkins of Montgomery, J. W. Portis of [illegible] Hensley Grubbs of Marengo.

1st District—[illegible] Crowley of Mobile.

2nd District—[illegible] Miles of Marengo.

3rd District—J. K. Livingston of [illegible]

4th District—[illegible]

5th District—[illegible]

6th District—[illegible]

7th District—[illegible]

8th District—[illegible]

3rd District: W. A. McDougald of Russell, J. H. Ellmer of Bullock, B. F. Cassidy of Dale.

4th District: A. E. Caffey of Lowndes, W. R. Nelson of Dallas, J. B. Cooke of Perry.

5th District: J. N. Settle of Bibb, W. M. Lackey of Clay, J. B. Keller of Coosa.

6th District: J. J. Altman of Sumpter, A. B. McEachin of Tuscaloosa, A. O. Bane of Jefferson.

7th District: J. B. Martin of Etowah, C. G. Wagner of Shelby, J. B. Knox of Talladega.

Mr. Tilden's Letter.

In words that convey as well as words can the unalterable resolution of a mind lofty in its unselfish patriotism, Mr. Tilden repeats his message of four years ago to the Democratic party. The considerations that moved him then are those which now determine his course. Not because he is unwilling to sacrifice what remains to him of health and life, but because he feels himself unable to undertake and perform the duties of the great trust the foremost statesman of the Republic refuses again the nomination which the party stands ready to give him by its unanimous voice.

After sending his letter of declination to the New York delegates in the Cincinnati Convention of 1880, Mr. Tilden telegraphed to Mr. Daniel Manning this supplementary message: "No friends must be allowed to cast a doubt on my motive or my sincerity." From that time to this, no friend whom information has qualified to judge of Mr. Tilden's purposes has ever doubted for an instant that he regarded his difficult and enduring work in the public service as forever closed. The letter printed this morning has been written only because a great majority of the Democratic voters of the land still looked with a lingering hope to the man whom they elected eight years ago, and who personifies the vital principles and ideas that will prevail with Democratic victory. The nomination was his. He cannot accept it.

The honor, that is, the rich reward of noble services faithfully rendered was never brighter than at this hour. Mr. Tilden has once been elected President of the United States. Superior to all thought of personal ambition, he has twice declined a re-election, and the years of life that still remain to him will be made happy by accumulating acknowledgments of the nation's debt of profound gratitude and veneration.—N. Y. Sun.

THE MULLIGAN LETTERS.

What They Were, and How Mr. Blaine was Affected by Them.

James Mulligan had told a committee of congress that Mr. Blaine, acting as the broker of Warren Fisher, jr., a contractor, had tried to sell to friends in Maine $520,000 worth of stocks and bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company, and had received for that service $162,500 of the company's bonds as a commission; that the speculation had turned out badly, and Mr. Blaine was compelled to take back part of the securities. Mulligan had added to this story the statement that Elisha Atkins, then a director in the Union Pacific Company, had told him that Mr. Blaine had sold $75,000 of the Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds to Col. Thos. A. Scott, and that Col. Scott had made the Union Pacific Company take them at eight cents on the dollar.

When pressed for proof of his statement Mulligan had produced a number of letters and memoranda and declared that they would prove his story. At a subsequent examination Mulligan had told how Mr. Blaine had visited him in the Riggs House and implored him for the sake of his wife and child to show him the letters, and how, after he had gotten them, he refused to return them.

Mr. Blaine at the time was a candidate for the nomination for President. His friends on the committee tried in vain to shake Mulligan's testimony, and he took the witness stand himself and contradicted Mulligan's story. Not satisfied with the result of his work, he determined to make a bold attempt to turn the tables on his accusers in the house of representatives. His intention was made known, and on June 5, 1876, the galleries and the floor of the house were crowded by his friends. He obtained the floor on a question of privilege, and defended himself in a speech which elicited enthusiastic plaudits from his friends. After charging that the committee's inquiry had been turned into the investigation of his personal affairs, he drew from his pocket the Mulligan letters. Holding them up he said they had been wrongfully in Mulligan's possession, and charged that the committee, in trying to use them against him, had violated the personal and private right that belonged to every American citizen.

Then, holding the package high enough for the whole house to see it, he said:

"I thank God Almighty that I am not ashamed to show them. Here they are. There is the very original package! With some humiliation, with a mortification which I do not pretend to conceal, with a sense of outrage which I would justly rebuke in any person [illegible] I will read these letters."

As he finished the sentence the republican members who stood near him clapped their hands, and the throng in the galleries who had listened with rapt attention, applauded and cheered.

Mr. Blaine then read some of the letters and gave his own explanation of their meaning, and then said that they had been picked out of the most intimate business correspondence of his life. Then he faced his republican colleagues, and said:

"I ask you, gentlemen, if any of you could stand a closer scrutiny, a more rigid investigation of your correspondence?"

The republican members again applauded, and cheers went up from the galleries. When Mr. Blaine advanced from the aisle and accused Proctor Knott of suppressing a dispatch from Josiah Caldwell which exonerated him from Mulligan's charges. He concluded this remarkable speech by moving that the committee be compelled to report whether and why the dispatch had been suppressed, and then took his seat amid the applause of his friends.

A Bolt After Reflection.

N. Y. Evening Post.

The Morning News (rep.), of Wilmington Del., has taken down the names of Blaine and Logan and come out with an editorial headed "A Bad Start," showing a strong inclination to join the independents. The Morning News is the only morning paper in Delaware. It opposed Blaine vigorously before the convention, but fell into the traces afterwards, and only yesterday advised a bolting paper to "recognize that Blaine and Logan are the choice of the party in the fullest sense of that phrase, and therefore worthy and deserving of every republican's earnest support."

To-day the News says: "Those who regarded Blaine as an unavailable candidate are already justified in their judgment, their predictions and their fears." It points out the magnitude of the revolt headed by the New York Times, Evening Post and other papers, and says: "This movement on the part of the republican candidate is startling by its suddenness, its determination and its extent."

Lessons in History for the Boys.

From the New York Times, Rep.

Mr. Smith, of The Philadelphia Press, we notice, predicts a revival of the "Clay campaign." If he will consult a recent historical work, "Twenty Years in Congress," by J. G. Blaine, he will discover, what he appears never to have learned, that Henry Clay was not elected.

Maplesville Dots.

Crops are in fine condition. Rain every day since first of June. Oat crop very poor this year in consequence of the May drouth.

Mr. W. D. Lawrence, of Selma, spent two weeks with his parents at this place.

Rev. I. U. Wilkes, of Brierfield, preached to a good audience at the Methodist Church the second Sunday in this month.

Mr. Joel Griffin has been relieved of his cancer by a surgical operation of Drs. Armistead and T. E. Callier. We met him last week. He was very modest, and informed us in a confidential manner that he was the man we were looking for. He is a candidate, and a good Democrat, and will present his name to the county convention.

Our editor must not be burdened with small political honors. A man who has served the county three years with a good local paper is entitled to something more expressive of appreciation than a seat in the Legislature. We believe he would have strong support, but we prefer a good paper to all the representation any man can give us in our legislative halls.

We note with pleasure the many calls on Rev. Jefferson Falkner to enter the race for the Senatorial nomination. He is a man of great political strength with an extended experience, and is thoroughly informed on the political issues of the day. Keep the ball rolling and we will give him a [illegible]

Calliervillo Dots.

The pleasant weather still continues.

Our young folks had a pleasant picnic on the 7th inst., at Calliervillo.

The school here has closed its present session. Its closing exercises occupied three days, and wound up with a grand basket picnic.

Hurrah for Calliervillo! it can boast of having two active blacksmith shops, one shoe shop and a butcher yard, and still more, another family has been added to it. Mr. Smith, who has been residing at Clanton during the winter, has returned to his summer residence, with his interesting family.

Two aged people of this community, Mr. and Mrs. Odom, have departed from this wicked world, and gone to rest in their eternal home. Our sympathy is with the bereaved ones left behind.

We are having plenty of rain. Crop prospects pretty good.

"Bijou" preached for us last Sunday, we thought it a happy effort.

Married, near this place, on the 8th, Mr. Simpson and Miss Folanegan. They have located at Briarfield.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Parties will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction will be guaranteed.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Saturday, the 21st, is the day for the beat primary elections remember.

Died, in this place on the night of the 12th inst., of dropsy, Mrs. Martha Daniel, aged 53 years.

Mr. James Bell's new residence is about completed and is ready for the painter's brush.

Our correspondent "Julius" thinks it would be inexpedient to hold a county nominating convention.

Mr Willis Lowe has the thanks of the VIEW for several baskets of fine peaches. He has them for sale in the greatest quantity.

A cotton bloom and a boll were added us last week by Mr. N. Ware. They were taken from his farm. His crop prospects are flattering.

A blind preacher delivered a sermon at the Baptist church on Monday night. He reads with raised letters, is a well informed man, and gave a good talk.

An advertisement of the National House, Montgomery, rooms to let, appears elsewhere in this paper. Large rooms, comfortable beds, convenience of location, &c., are among the attractions of the National.

We are in receipt of a programme of the Commencement of the Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical College, which begins Sunday, June 22d. This is a noble institution, and one which the State should sustain with a liberal hand.

A public dinner and grand political hurrah by the darkies will come off near Verbena, July 4th. A number of Republican orators have been invited to address the gathering, so the posters say. A sweet time may be expected.

Read the advertisement of the wholesale drug house of Bains & Herring successors to Jones & Co., Birmingham. The new firm has increased their stock of drugs, &c., and are prepared to ship to country customers on easy terms. They ask for the trade of this section by their card.

A delightful sociable was enjoyed by the young folks at the residence of Mr. T. M. Terman, on Tuesday evening. Miss Teresa and her guest, Miss Hallis Ray, as hostesses, were admirable and graceful, and the evening was spent most pleasantly until the "wee small hours" called "to home."

J. W. Clary, the best photographer at Birmingham, can be found at the corner of Twenty-first Street and Second Avenue. Mr. Clary has succeeded Mr. A. C. Oxford in the business. He has had twenty years experience and has made the best of it. If you want a real good picture he can make it for you. More than satisfaction guaranteed.

No Bail for Ransom.

Ben Ransom, charged with the killing of Morgan Gruscomb, had a preliminary trial on Monday morning before Judge Callier. The prisoner was remanded to jail without bail to await the action of the Grand Jury at the Fall term of the circuit court.

Clanton Academy.

This school will close its present session on Friday, June 27th—The eficient principal, Prof. W. C. Carpenter, has given entire satisfaction to the patrons of the school. Prof. C. will resume control and reopen the school in the early Fall. Interesting and appropriate closing exercises will be held at the Court House on Friday evening, June 27th, at 7:30 o'clock.

Vote for Delegates.

Let every Democratic voter remember that next Saturday, the 21st inst., is the day selected for holding the primary elections for Beat delegates to the county convention, which is to meet at Clanton on Saturday, the 28th. Let every Democratic voter do his part in the selection of fit men to represent the Beats in the convention. It is an important matter to himself, to his neighbor and to the county.

Senatorial Convention.

The District Convention, of the Democratic and Conservative party of the Fifteenth Senatorial District is hereby called to meet in Wetumpka, Ala., on July 1st, next, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for the State Senate. The representation in said convention has been apportioned at double the representation of each of the three counties composing the District in the late State Convention, viz: Chilton 10, Coosa 14, Elmore 14.

Verbena Views.

Mr. T. Henry Motley, of Anniston, paid our town a visit last Saturday and remained over until Monday. We are always glad to see our old friend and former resident, but our pleasure is somewhat marred when we know that his frequent visits are made with a view of transplanting one of our loveliest young ladies.

Miss Anna McKenzie, of Dunham, spent last Saturday and Sunday in our village, the guest of Mrs. Dr. Williamson. Her many friends gave her a warm welcome. We advise friend T. when he walks with her again not to let her bear on the rail of a bridge when he has anything exciting to say, for alas! her beautiful parasol lies at the bottom of the pond. She has gone to Cave Springs, Ga., to spend the summer months.

Miss Abbotte Spratlen left last Monday for her home near Wetumpka, where she will spend her vacation. Her many friends regret her departure, but are consoled by a promise to return and spend a few weeks.

The Sabbath school concert came off at the Baptist Church last Sunday, but owing to the rain was only attended by a few. The church was beautifully decorated, and the concert bid fair to be a success, but the rain broke into all arrangements. We suggest that they try it over again.

Our village was honored last Thursday, by a visit from the much admired and distinguished Dr. J. B. Cottrell. He preached in the Methodist Church at night and notwithstanding the bad weather, he was listened to by a large and attentive congregation.

Henry Green, colored, a brakeman on the local freight, was killed at this place last Thursday while switching cars. He opened the switch, and as the engine passed in stepped on the brake-beam. His foot slipped off and the engine passed over him.

The exercises of Prof. Acree's school closed last Friday. The close contest for the prize medals show that all had been carefully trained and instructed by the talented Principal and his accomplished Assistant, Miss Abbotte Spratlen. The gold medal for the best declaimer was won by Master Frank Baldwin. The gold medal for excellency in arithmetic was more closely contested. It resulted in a tie between Messrs. John Bateman, Tobe McLemore, Osceola Brooks, Jim Adair and William Moore. They resorted to lottery and Mr. Moore won the lucky ticket. Youth [illegible] of the attendance [illegible] were attending from a distance have returned home. They have a long time to rest and recuperate as school does not open until on or about Sept. 15th.

MAR.

EDITOR VIEW:—I notice an article in the VIEW of the 5th inst., signed "B." discussing the subject of holding a convention for the purpose of nominating candidates for the Legislature, and also for the various offices of this county. I am inclined to the opinion that a convention for the nomination of candidates for the county offices is not desired by the people of the county, and that would be inexpedient to hold one.

However, if one should be held, I concur with your correspondent, that it be organized and conducted by the truly representative men of the different Beats in the county, and that we should be certain that the people desire it, and that the discussions be free and untrammeled, and in a spirit of open candor and friendly feeling, that all prejudices, bull-dozing and selfishness be left behind. That if gentlemen differ with each other in their convictions upon this subject, let them accord to each other honesty of purpose as readily as they themselves would wish to be considered honest. It is but natural that we differ in our views of local policy, in the managing of our public interests, as upon other subjects. Let there be no reading of men out of the party, because they cannot be controlled by men who wish to. Let there be no resolutions introduced to class all men who differ with us, with negroes and scalawags. This is all wrong, and should be carefully guarded against; it is the indulgence of this truly unfortunate spirit heretofore that has provoked the strong opposition to conventions that now exist.

We must remember that the Democratic party of to-day is not the old spread eagle Democratic party, that soared fully fledged in the days of President Buchannan, that Democratic party whose motto was "Rule or Ruin," and could handle the party lash with the dexterity that a Texas cow-boy handles his bull-whip; that Democratic party that had the fine drilled and disciplined political soldiers that our friend "S." desires, is dead. It swallowed the draught of secession, prepared by its own hands, and died the death of the wicked.

The Democratic party of to-day is the Democratic party of 1874; it is a party that stands on the color line, it is the honest, intelligent white men, who believe that the honest, intelligent white men shall rule this country. They believe in strict justice to the negro, but they want no negro domination, or what is worse, the drunken, out-cast white vagabonds who are found in their ranks.

The old soldier of the South cannot easily forget how dearly he paid for the vices and blunders of politicians and clearly sees that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and that there is no one who deserves to be so closely watched as the demagogue and political fanatic; he has seen something of conventions, he has seen communities convulsed with political excitement, heard the cheers and huzzas, and after the "mountain had labored and brought forth a mouse" some vain, empty-headed demagogue or highfalutin, besotted debauchee is presented as "Col. So and So," our gallant standard-bearer, who we must follow to victory, though a shameless libertine whose immoralities have often shocked virtuous communities, yet we must vote for him—but our eyes and swallow the pill though ever so bitter, or be read out of the party.

Now, Mr. Editor, as to county conventions, we see in them as in other conventions that the question of honesty and capability is but little considered. They are of secondary consideration. The first question considered in conventions is: Which is the most available man? Can he carry Red Bone Beat or Brush Creek Beat?

Another serious objection to county conventions for nominating county officers is that they invariably result in the formation of what is known as courthouse rings. Show me a county that pursues the practice of nominating candidates for county officers, and I will show you a county that has court-house ring.

It gives the shrewd, artful fellows an opportunity of log-rolling, and wire-working, they can better manipulate things, and if they find a man too strong and popular for them, they can combine against him and work him into a convention and induce him to pledge himself to support the nomination, they have him where they want him, and can soon dispose of him.

Counties are of limited territory, and it is an easy matter if a man has any merit that it be known all over the county, and the people are judge of his qualifications and decide for themselves directly. But, sir, with the objections to conventions that I here offer, I would cheerfully submit to them rather than to negro domination. The question now presents itself, is there any danger of negroes or scalawags being elected to any of the offices of this county? Some may say that there is such danger, but there is scarcely ever an election but what we hear the old story that this is the most important election that has been held for years, and yet we see that Chilton county has prospered as well under the independent system, as ever under the system of conventions. It may be well enough to nominate a man for the Legislature, and I believe the people would elect him; but the nomination of candidates for every office in the county will only "Tear agape the healing wounds afresh." This being a new county and its territory pierced by new railroads has brought together different elements of society, people of culture and refinement as well as ignorant and vicious have come among the original population, here we have them together, the late secessionist and the union man, the old web-footed soldier, butternut rangers, mose-backs all in confusion, out of which we must try to bring order. We are all white men and have to live here together, and it is but natural that we as a people look at things from different stand points, and entertain more or less prejudices one towards another. It is plain that these prejudices are rapidly subsiding. Let us not provoke them anew, but indulge in a conservative and conciliating spirit, and when you light your cigars and throw your feet upon the table like ole Mam Ulysses say, "Let us have peace."

JULIUS.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

To me directed, as Sheriff of Chilton county, I have in my hands issued from the Circuit Court of Chilton county against J. O. Smith, C. H. Smith and L. J. Hand, and in favor of Mrs. Martha Cameron, I will proceed to sell, on the first Monday in July, 1884, (it being the 7th day of said month) at the courthouse door of Chilton county, between the legal hours of sale, the following described real property, levied on as the property of said J. O. Smith, viz: All of section 31, township 21, range 16, and all of section [illegible] township [illegible] range [illegible].

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them unclaimed for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. Of the symptoms indicate the existence of Torpid Liver: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, Nausea, Dizziness, Constipation of body or mind, Dyspepsia, Blues, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Dizziness at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Highly colored Urine, SOMETIMES PILES, and the most effectual remedy in the world for all these troubles is TUTT'S PILLS. One dose will convince you of their value. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt, removing all impurities through these three great scavengers of the system, producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and vigorous health. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

HE WHITES LIKE A NEW MAN.

"I have had Dyspepsia, with Constipation, two years, and have taken many kinds of pills, and TUTT'S are the only kind that have done me any good. They cleansed me and nicely. By continued use my appetite, food digests readily, and I have natural passages every day."

KINDNESS AND APPLES

KINDNESS TOWARD TEACHING CIRCUS HORSES LUDICROUS TRICKS.

What is to Say If the Teacher Knows His Business, and Has the Disposition to Attend to It.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

A short, black-mustached gentleman, with a long whip in his hand, was standing in the centre of a ten-foot ring talking to a gray stallion. The animal stood fully sixteen hands high, was powerfully built as a Flemish draught horse, and had a coat that glistened like satin. Its white tail swept the sawdust in the ring, and its head and neck were as clean cut and graceful as a swan's.

"Whoa, there! Whoa, my beauty!" Then he approached and stroked the creature's neck, while it whinnied softly and pawed the sawdust with its off forefoot. The man was Hiram Marks, ring-master with John Robinson's show, and this was his school of horses.

"I am just giving this stallion his lesson, now," he said. "He is a beginner, fairly well advanced in the 'First Reader,' we may say. I advanced him from the 'Primer' last week, and I find that he has so much intelligence that it is pretty clear I will be able to carry him through the High School and graduate him as a No. 1 trick horse. When he came to me he had been handled enough to bear the girth and the bit. I satisfied myself that he was a beauty and had a certain degree of intelligence before I began to handle him, as it is time thrown away to educate an ungainly horse or one that is not exceedingly bright. I put a girth on him, slipped a bit into his mouth, put the bridle over his head fastened the over-check and side lines to his girth, and led him into the ring. The ring, as you see, is a regular circus ring, with raised circumference and a centre pole. I buckled this lunge cord into the ring at his bit, and there he was, ready to take his first lesson.

"The first thing to teach him is to go around the outer edge of the ring, instead of running across it; as it is his first impulse. By threatening him with the whip, I keep him from the centre of the ring, and by pulling on the lunge cord I hold him from going too far and climbing the embankment. In the course of a week or two, by working twice a day, my horse can learn to lope or gallop about the ring, either way, as commanded. Have you ever noticed that all circus riders ride around the ring from right to left? No? Well, they do. An Italian by the name of Jannery was the only rider I ever knew who rode from left to right.

"After this stallion had learned to go around the ring when commanded, I started in to teach him to come to me at a motion of the whip. I have reached that stage now. You can see for yourself how I go about it."

He crooked the whip and the beautiful horse set off on a trot only to stop short when the whip cracked again.

"Come," said the trainer, pulling gently on the lunge cord and motioning with the whip handle. There was a second pause, and then the steady strain of the cord told the animal what was wanted, and he walked slowly toward his master. When he had reached the centre I point an apple and a carrot were given him, and then the entire act was repeated.

"With plenty of apples and candy the right kind of a horse can be taught anything. No, they neither need nor get any whipping at all while their education is in progress. They may be tapped occasionally with the whip handle or brushed with the lash, but the main use of the whip is to tell them when to move by its cracking, and to tell them how to move by its motions. The principal signals to a horse are made with the whip handle; when the voice is used it is done more to beguile the audience than to enlighten the horse. For instance, when I say 'Come,' I move my whip in a certain manner, and the horse comes. Without the motion of the whip he would not understand me, while without the word 'come' my wants would be perfectly clear to him, and he would obey by the whip alone.

"Dan Rice had one of the very few horses that have been broken to the voice, and that happened only by accident. When Dan began with him the peg had perfectly good eyes, and was broken to the motion of the whip, but while the training was in progress it went stone blind. It was such a beautiful and intelligent creature that Mr. Rice did not want to give it up, and, reasoning that if a cart horse can be taught to 'gee' and 'haw' by sound, his horse could be taught other things in the same way, he went to work and broke the animal over again to the voice. For the rest done by this blind horse and master, Dan Rice used to get $1,000 every week that he exhibited them. The figures are not exaggerated. I know this to be a fact."

"You say that with apples the right horse can be taught anything. Will you explain?"

"Yes, it is all clear. What I say the right horse I mean a nag like this one here—a horse that moves quickly, has eyes that keep his eye constantly on you, and understands your motives. There are men, you know, who are incapable and dull of perception—what is called by phrenologists and those are just that kind of horses. Such a nag I could hardly teach to run around the ring in the same time that I could give an entirely unbroken to an alert and intelligent animal. Then there is another kind of horse that may be intelligent enough, but which will never suit me, and that is a vicious beast.

"Some years ago among the horses of a roaming equestrian was Mr. [illegible]. I think he is living in [illegible] Park Row now. He [illegible] while I was about [illegible] a vicious and cunning [illegible] but he was a splendid [illegible] and I thought I could [illegible] him. I satisfied myself that something had disturbed it in the stable, so that when it danced into the ring its little black eyes glittered like a snake's. I expected trouble, but North knew his business, and the 'rise' of an contested exercises with looking on. I had turned my head to say something to one of the boys when I heard a shriek. I wheeled around, and there was North whirling around that stallion's head as a boy whirls a hankie. The beast had caught him with its teeth by one wrist, and after a couple of whirls it sent him crashing through the ropes on the other side of the ring. His [illegible] was broken, and he is crippled to this day. No, I thank you; no vicious stallion for me.

"Now, in teaching an animal to pick up a handkerchief, for instance, let me show you how the apple works. That act is pretty well along—in the 'Sixth Reader,' say; but my beginner here will do it for you this once."

The trainer broke a small russet apple in two pieces, and wrapped one of the pieces in his handkerchief. This he placed to the horse's nose long enough for it to get the scent of the apple, and then, walking to the other side of the ring, he placed the handkerchief and apple together on the sawdust there. The alert animal watched him like a cat, and no sooner was the handkerchief on the ground than he trotted to it, picked it up, and shook it until the apple became disengaged from its folds.

"Horses are taught to fire pistols in precisely the same way. An apple is fastened to the end of a line attached to a pistol's trigger. The animal tugs at the line to get the apple, and fires the charge. In the course of time the apple is discontinued; but tugging at the line has become second nature with the horse, and he pulls it as a matter of course."

Dynamite in Vienna.

During the last few weeks the Vienna police have made the discovery that there must be a quantity of dynamite and other explosives in the hands of the Austrian anarchists not inferior to that discovered in London. Some portion of this, it is conjectured, has been fabricated in Vienna, while the rest comes from America via Switzerland, which is kept until wanted by the anarchists in Austria or in other portions of Europe, perhaps even in London, so that it would not be amiss for the English police to extend their observation to the imports from all continental ports. Concerning the manufacture of these explosives, the police claim to have discovered that during last autumn regular lectures were delivered in the workmen's quarters on the best methods of making and safely storing dynamite, nitro-glycerine and other explosives. On receiving this intelligence the detectives made a raid on certain houses and discovered three laboratories completely fitted with all the articles necessary for the fabrication of explosives, together with large quantities of dynamite in different forms of nitro-glycerine and of its components—sulphuric acid, nitric acid, glycerine and kieselguhr. The police are convinced that many similar [illegible] and therefore the Vienna press has been ordered to publish nothing on the subject. Recently a workman was caught endeavoring to smuggle a basketful of small explosive bombs from a suburb into Vienna, the contents of the basket being detected by an excise man searching for spirits. These small dynamite grenades, all of Vienna make, are picked up in the streets almost daily on the tramlines, but hitherto without having done damage, the makers being probably not sufficiently skilled.

A Mysterious Fire.

What poets and scientific optimists are fond of telling us about the beneficence of nature is only partly true. In another aspect, nature seems to wage perpetual war with man, and to be forever tirelessly and stealthily seeking out new sources of offence or harm in this irrepressible conflict. A singular instance of this unrelenting hostility is given by a correspondent of the American Architect, who points out an unsuspected and remarkable source of mysterious fires. In a room with a southern exposure smoke was seen to be rising from a table covered with a woolen cloth on which stood an ink-well supported on four glass spheres. Upon investigation it was found that these spheres, acting as burning glasses, had focused the rays of the sun so strongly as to scorch the cloth badly in several places. Fish globes, glass vases and paper weights have been known to act in like manner, and a correspondent of a French newspaper the other day reported a case where a fire was started by the focalization of the sun's rays in a globe of gold fish.

The Pastor's Story.

A Boston pastor, who enlivens his Friday evening talks with anecdotes, is so fond of a joke that he would rather tell one at his own expense than not tell one at all. This is his latest:

"I was writing by my study window, and a little Irish child was busying himself by throwing beans at the window. Losing all impatience, I rushed out of the house, determined to frighten the boy. It happened that his mother was coming after him at the same moment, and we met by his side. I shouted at the child, and then, as the mother seemed excessively stupid, I gave her a piece of my mind. Finally, in a grand and overwhelming conclusion to my scolding, I said: 'A little discipline now with your children will save you much pain, if not disgrace, in the future. Think of that, madam; that is, if you ever go think.' 'Think, is it?' she replied; 'I think if you'd go back to your bookses and wipe the ink off ye'r nose you'd be prettier, even if you didn't make so much av a scrawlion.' It was not a soft answer, but it had the effect of turning away wrath."

President Heard, of the Northwestern Dairymen's Association, thinks it is strange that not one in a hundred of the patrons of the cheese factories of the Northwest ever attend a dairy convention. The President forgets, says an exchange, that the dairy has very little to do with the manufacture of cheese nowadays.

A Good Clerk.

A good clerk is a prize too rarely found, and when found often unappreciated. When a man has a clerk in whom he can place confidence, he may regard himself as extremely fortunate. One good clerk will do more, and do it better, than two poor ones. He does not require constant looking after. When he does anything there is no necessity for his employer to do it over again. He will always take pains to treat customers well, and serve them with exactly what they want. He never acts as if he owns the whole establishment, and a very large portion of the world outside of it. He is polite, unassuming and anxious to forward his employer's interests. He is sufficiently level-headed to recognize the fact that the more his employer's business increases the better is his own chance for advancement. With this end in view, he naturally takes a close personal interest in the business. When a man is fortunate enough to get such an employee, he would do well to endeavor to retain him. If he wants a holiday once in a while, let him have it. He will appreciate it, and make it up to you. Should he ask a favor of you, grant it, as by so doing it will make him regard you as his best friend, and the bond between you will be one of friendship as well as business interest. Many employers overlook the fact that a good clerk is a power of some influence. He can always bring trade with him, and could never bought here by employers. If he leaves such employ he can easily obtain a position with a rival, probably in the same line carried on, and, despite his late employer. When you get a good clerk keep him. You can feel a sense of security when you are in search of all evening's recreation, if such a person has charge. Your business will be well attended to, and even if you pay him a liberal salary, your gain will be a hundred in the long run.—Bazaar Mercantile.

SAVED BY A SERVICE.

A Well-Known Actress Tells of the Great Debt She Owes.

"You think me rather young for such a responsible position? Well, perhaps, for I am nothing more than a boy, being less than twenty years of age. But what think you of this white hair which I have had for four years? It looks strange to one unaware of its origin, and when I call to mind the circumstance that caused it I only wonder that I am alive to-day."

The speaker, a mere child in appearance save for his white hair, stood with his right index finger and thumb grasping the key of a telegraph instrument which had just ticked off to him an account of a terrible railroad accident. Resuming he said:

"I have had some trying experiences in my life as an operator. Four years ago I was telegraph operator at a small country station on a southwestern railroad. I had little to do, the dispatches sent and received not averaging more than two a day, and those confined almost entirely to railroad matters. To enable me to leave the office at will I had attached a large bit cup to the sounder of my instrument so I could hear my call 'Q,' from any part of the village. When the south bound train arrived at noon one Saturday I hurriedly communicated with the conductor, and learning that he had nothing to send I prepared to quit my office for the afternoon, as no other train was due until seven o'clock. Locking the door I went away leaving the train standing at the depot, hot boxes detaining it longer than usual. Luckily I did not go beyond earshot of my instrument, repairing to a field near by to witness a base ball game. I frequently left the office for hours, but always kept within hearing distance, the tin cup sounder enabled me to distinguish my call several hundred feet away. Somehow I had misgivings on this occasion. I had an indefinable dread of some impending trouble. I was so ill at ease that I took little interest in the game. I kept my ears open, expecting, for some reason I will not attempt to explain, to be called at the office. Before I had been absent ten minutes, and while the train still stood at the depot, I heard my familiar call repeated in what seemed to me unusually rapid succession. Instead of walking leisurely, as was my wont, I ran to the office as fast as I could, and heard as I entered: 'Hold No. 4 at your station until special going north passes.'

"Involuntarily I glanced out of the window and saw the train I was ordered to hold disappearing around a curve a short distance away. I was not told at what time the special left the station south, which was only ten miles away, and I saw in my mind's eye the two trains rapidly approaching each other, quickly followed by a crash, screams of pain and flying debris. Suddenly I remembered, while tearing my hair and cursing my negligence, that No. 4 had to stop at a wood yard two miles down the road to take on fuel. That would take a matter of five minutes, and if means of conveyance were at hand I might overtake it and avert a disaster. My first thought was a hand-car, my second a horse, but I did not know if the first was at the station, or the second to be had in the village. Rushing out of the office I stumbled over my bicycle. Without a moment's thought I shoved it out of the door before me, and was on it in less time than it takes to count ten. In my odd moments I have practiced, and had become quite an expert bicyclist. The country road paralleled the railroad for several miles, and the former was down grade the entire distance. I put my whole strength into the effort of propelling the machine, and had the satisfaction of attaining a speed I had never accomplished before. My hat blew off and my coat was dotted [illegible] that it would retard my speed. I got within perhaps fifty yards of the now stationary train, when the engine-whistle blew and the train started. I redoubled my efforts and came alongside the rear platform of the last car, just as the train was getting under full headway. With a falling side motion I threw my wheel against the side of the car just forward of the platform and grasped the hand-rail as it came within reach, at the same time letting go my hold on the bicycle. I caught the ball cord and gave it one vigorous pull, and as the train came to a halt I gave the cord three jerks, the signal to back, and fainted. The conductor found me where I had fallen. Suspecting something wrong, he permitted the train to back to the station, getting there just as the special, loaded with the directors of the road, and their families, swung around the curve into the station. I had been found and came near dying, not regaining my reasoning faculties for five weeks after my terrible experience. But the conductor said my hair was white when he found me on the rear end of his train."—Chicago News.

The Origin of the Irish Potato.

A fact that the common or Irish potato was first discovered in Virginia, taken from there to Ireland, cultivated, and brought back to us improved varieties, thus making it a natural product of America.

D bets that the common or Irish potato is a native of Ireland, and was introduced into this country from there. Who's wise?

Neither were. Sir Walter Raleigh took the potato to England from Virginia in 1586, but it had been carried to Spain from Quito years before that, and taken from Spain to Italy where it was a common article of food before Raleigh found it in Virginia. It was sent to Florence from Italy. Its encouragement in Virginia, it is thought, was due to a recent introduction by the Spaniards. There is no proof that it was in cultivation by the aborigines of this country or those of Mexico. It grows wild in Peru and Chili, and elsewhere.—N. Y. Sun.

AN ARMY EXPERIENCE.

How an Old Virginian Received Annihilation and Lived to Report a Wrinkle to Others.

A pleasing circumstance which has just come to our notice in connection with the New York State meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic is so unusual in many respects that we venture to reproduce it for the benefit of our readers.

Captain Alfred Benson, of New York, while pacing in the lobby of the armory previous to one of the meetings, suddenly stopped and resumed the role of a gentleman, and in earnest conversation with one of the Grand Army officers. It seemed to him that he had seen that face before, partially obscured by the smoke of battle, and yet this "bright and pleasant countenance could not be the same pale, and death-like visage, which he so dimly remembered. In the recollection, like Banquo's ghost, would not "down" at command and haunted him the entire day. On the day following he again saw the same countenance, and ventured to speak to its owner. The instant the two veterans heard each other's voices, that instant they recognized and called each other by name. Their ages and forms had changed, but their voices were the same. The man whom Captain Benson had recognized was Mr. W. K. Sage, of St. Johns, Mich., a veteran of the 23d N. Y. Light Artillery and both members of Burnside's famous expedition to North Carolina. After the first greetings were over, Captain Benson said:

"I hardly seems possible, Sage, to see you in this condition, for I thought you must have been dead long ago."

"Yes, I do not doubt it, for if I am not mistaken, when we last met I was occupying a couch in the hospital, a victim of 'Yellow Jack' in its worst form."

"I remember. The war seems to have caused more misery since its close than when it was in progress," replied the captain. "I meet old comrades frequently who are suffering terribly, not so much from old wounds as from the malarial poisons which ruined their constitutions."

"I think so myself. When the war closed I returned home and at times I would feel well, but every few weeks that confounded 'all-gone' feeling would come upon me again. My nervous system, which was shattered in the service, failed me entirely and produced one of the worst possible cases of nervous dyspepsia. Most of the time I had no appetite: then again I would become ravenously hungry, but the minute I sat down to eat I loathed food. My skin was dry and parched, my flesh loose and flabby. I could hold nothing on my stomach for days at at a time, and what little I did eat failed to assimilate. I was easily fatigued; my mind was depressed; I was cross and irritable and many a night my heart would pain me so I could not sleep, and when I did I had horrid dreams and frightful nightmares. Of course, these things came on me one by one, each worse than the other. My breath was foul, my tongue was coated, my teeth decayed. I had terrific headaches which would leave my nervous system completely shattered. In fact my existence, since the war, has been a living death, from which I have often prayed for release."

"Couldn't the old surgeon do you any good?"

"I wrote him and he treated me, but like every other doctor, failed. They all said my nerve was gone and without that to build upon I could not get well. When I was at my worst, piles of the severest nature came upon me. Then my liver gave out and without the use of cathartics I could not move the bowels at all. My blood got like a stream of fire and seemed literally to burn me alive."

"Well, you might better have died in battle, quick and without ceremony."

"How many times I wished I had died the day we captured Newberne!"

"And yet you are now the picture of health."

"And the picture is taken from life. I am in perfect condition. My nerve tone is restored; my stomach reinvigorated; my flesh is hard and healthy; in fact I have new blood, new energy and a new lease of life wholly as the result of using Warner's Tippecanoe. This remarkable preparation, which I consider the finest tonic and stomach restorer in the world has overcome all the evil influences of malaria, all the poison of the army, all traces of dyspepsia, all mal-assimilation of food, and indeed made a new man of me."

The captain remained silent for a while, evidently musing over his recollections of the past. When he again raised his head he said:

"It would be a godsend if all the veterans who have suffered so intensely and also all others in the land who are enduring so much misery could know of your experience, Sage, and the way by which you have been restored."

And that is why the above conversation is recounted.—National Tribune, of Washington.

She Says She Won't.

"When she will she will, and when she won't she won't, and there's an end on't." This grim old adage was verified in the Surrogate's Court in New York in a disputed will case. Miss Rebecca Jones, a spinster of 60, took the stand and the oath was read, but she neither kissed nor otherwise touched the Bible. When asked, says the Mail and Express, if she understood that she had been sworn she said her name was Rebecca Jones, and should always be. After some discussion the witness said she would tell the truth in three words, and the court considered her sworn. Counsel asked if she had known Mr. Kearney alive. "Now," repeated Miss Jones, jumping up excitedly, "I am going to do just what Mr. Gordon Kearney and his son would tell me to do if they were alive. They would say 'Becky, keep still.' I am not going to answer any question. I respect the dead and I say I will not answer. It is no use of asking me another question, for I will not speak." The lawyer was about to put another question, when Miss Jones screamed out, "I told you I will not say anything." Her counsel advised her to answer, but she declared that she would not, and when he remarked to the court that he thought she was laboring under a delusion, she yelled out, "It is no delusion. I have told you all I have to say." And there she stopped and said they might send her to jail if they wished to do so.

Tax Whitehall Times observes: "At twenty man theorizes, at forty he philosophizes, and at sixty he realizes." Alas, at twenty he scrutinizes—the young ladies; at twenty-two he idolizes—the claims of some other fellow; at twenty-four he paralyzes—the old man by asking for his hand in marriage, and at twenty-six he jeopardizes—his neck by staying out with the boys until midnight. In fact, his life is full of "fuss."—Morristown Herald.

There are 100,000 deaths yearly in London, and all the bodies are buried in the suburbs and around the city; that is in thirty years 3,000,000 bodies. In twenty years, says Mr. Spurgeon Wells, a body becomes clay, and London has therefore, always 2,000,000 bodies undergoing "harmful decay."

Pickles Colored by Copper.

Dr. Cyrus Edson, of the New York Sanitary Bureau, recently purchased samples of bright green pickles, bottled by five firms, had them analyzed by the department chemist, Professor Waller, to ascertain how much metallic copper was used in coloring them. The result was given to the Board of Health. It said:

"The pickles contained a much larger proportion of copper than the liquid surrounding them, a fact which converts the idea that copper can be removed from pickles by soaking them in water or weak vinegar."

When more than one part in 100,000 in preserved vegetables consists of copper there is proof of artificial coloring with copper. Of the samples some contained more than three parts to the 100,000 and one had seven parts. Dr. Edson did not think that they contained enough copper to poison a person, but the Board concluded to give a mild warning to the manufacturers.

It is truly wonderful to see how the name of Mrs. Pinkham is a household word among the wives and mothers of our land. Alike in the luxurious homes of our great cities and in the humble cabins of the remote frontier one woman's deeds have borne their kindly fruit in health for others.

"There is one thing I want you to remember while you are on your travels," said Rollo's father, as he bade his son good-bye. "And what is that?" asked Rollo. "Remember the waiter," replied his father, with a mocking laugh.

His Son's Advice.

I have been troubled for over twelve years with a weakness of the kidneys and bladder, which the doctors said was diabetes. I could not at times stand up, and would have to continually use the urinal both day and night, with intense pains in my back and sides; there was brick-dust deposits in my water; I could not rest well or lie easily in bed in any posture. I was at that time employed by the Maine Central railroad, and had to give up work for a time. Fearing that it would sooner or later turn to that dreaded Bright's disease, I called in my son in Lewiston, who is in the drug business, and after consulting with him as to my case, he advised me to use Hunt's Remedy, as he knew of so many successful cures that it had made in Lewiston and vicinity. I at once commenced using it, and began to improve. I had less pain in my back and sides, my water was passed naturally with less color and no pain, and after using several bottles found that my pains were all gone and the weakness of the kidneys and bladder were cured, and I have no trouble with them now, and can attend to my business; and for one of my years I am enjoying good health, and thanks to Hunt's Remedy for it, and I consider it a duty and pleasure to recommend so good a medicine as Hunt's Remedy, and I have taken pains to recommend it to others in this vicinity.

You are at liberty to publish this acknowledgment, hoping it may be the means of helping suffering humanity.

A Case of Pneumonia.

Mr. D. H. Barnaby, of Owego, N. Y., says that his daughter was taken with a violent cold which terminated with pneumonia, and all the best physicians gave the case up and said she could live but a few hours at most. She was in this condition when a friend recommended Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and advised her to try it. She accepted it as a last resort, and was surprised to find that it produced a marked change for the better, and by persevering in its use a cure was effected.

WHY IS IT SO?

Some find work where some find rest,
And so the weary world goes on;
I sometimes wonder which is best—
The morner comes when life is gone.

Some eyes sleep when some eyes weep,
And so the dreary night hours go.
Some hearts beat where some hearts break,
I often wonder why 'tis so.

Some hands field where other hands
Are lifted bravely in the strife;
And so thro' ages and thro' lands
Move on the two extremes of life.

Some feet halt where some feet tread,
In the tireless march, a thorny way;
Some struggle on where some have fled;
Some seek, when others shun, the fray.

Some sleep on while others keep
The vigils of the true and brave;
They will not rest till roses creep
Around their name above a grave.

THE NEIGHBORHOOD OF POINT BARROW AS DESCRIBED BY LT. RAY'S PARTY.

A Primitive Lot of Innocents—Their Ways and Habits—Utensils—Babies.

The Ooglaamiemeuns are the tribe of natives in the immediate vicinity of where Lt. Ray's Signal Service station was at Ooglaamie. The tribe consists of 130 souls. A few miles distant is another tribe, called the Noowookmeuns, numbering 140 people, but the relations existing between the two are not so harmonious as one would be led to believe was due to neighbors where acquaintances are so few. There have not been any open outbreaks between the tribes, and they often mingled together near the station, but each eyed the other suspiciously, and the members of the two tribes were observed to breathe more freely when they were surrounded only by their own people. Neither tribe holds allegiance to any chief or ruler. No congresses or legislatures have as yet broken in upon the rude mode of living. They are anarchists in the full sense of the word. Each man is his own chief and, strange as it may seem, Lieutenant Ray pronounces them the best governed and happiest people in the world. There appears to be no clashing of interests among them, and no bully has ever yet come to the front and bulldozed the tribe by asserting that might made right. Fighting and quarrelling are unknown. Ray says he never saw a child punished in any form, and yet he reports the children as well behaved, modest and honest. As high as twenty-five children have visited the station at one time, and their deportment would be such that he could not help but notice the striking contrast between them and the children who had all the advantages of civilization. However small the child might be it never intruded itself into univited places. No matter how many tools, articles of clothing or provisions were scattered around, the Lieutenant never saw them touch a thing, much less to try to appropriate or steal them. If anything was given a child it showed its appreciation thereat, sometimes in words but more often in smiles, and by informing its playfellows that he or she had been shown especial favors by the great white Captain. The only time Ray ever saw struck in these tribes was by a husband, who beat his wife's ears for supposed infidelity.

THEFT AND QUARRELS.

Thieving is seldom known among the men or women of the tribes, and when it does occur there is no punishment for the crime. The thief makes no secret of his act, and will deliberately expose the article taken to the whole tribe in a few minutes after appropriating it to his own use. The petty thief will take a hatchet from its owner, and in half an hour loan it to him to do some work, and the owner is in honor bound to return it to the scamp who stole it. A case in point is as follows: One of the tribe stole a tent from another one. He "pitched" the tent a few minutes later, and in half an hour had as his guest or dinner the original owner. The owner knew the tent, and yet came within its folds and partook of the hospitality of the thief. Possession appears to be nine points of law with them. A police court would soon become bankrupt there. Neither tribe appears to have any marriage ceremony. If the man is willing and the woman also, there is no legal impediment and the knots ceases ever. There is but little funeral ceremony. When a male dies his body is sewed up in canvas or a deer skin, placed on a sledge and moved out on the tundra, where it remains. The deceased's effects are all broken up over the body. If a woman dies the only change in form of burial is in simply breaking in bowl over the body. Having no implements to prepare the sod frozen ground and there being a scarcity of lumber wherewith to build coches, the above manner of disposing of their dead seems to be the only practicable way. Many persons have accused these tribes of having no feeling for their dead, not stopping to consider the difficulties surrounding them and the utter impossibility of giving them decent sepulture. Ray says the memory of the deceased is ever cherished with the liveliest feelings, and when they speak praise of departed it is with a reverence and clarity not surpassed by the white race.

BAD'S SUPERSTITIONS.

The Ooglaamiemeuns and Noowookmeuns are full of superstitions ideas, and have a god of fire, one of water and one of almost everything else, even a god of the north wind, and so on for the eight principal points of the compass. These gods they often supplicate for assistance, and should the prayer be heard it is all right, but should the prayer be unanswered in their simplicity they merely consider the god angry or too busy to attend to their present wants. At one time one of these pow-wows (or prayer meetings) was in progress, the object being to have the god of the east wind drive away the ice pack that they might hunt for seal, when Lieutenant Ray called one of the old men of the tribe to him and, marking the outlines of the Asiatic coast upon the sand, told the Innu (for such they call themselves) that across the great water was a larger body of land and many, many more people than the Ooglaamiemeuns had; that these people also wanted seal, and the god of the west wind was providing for them, as they had undoubtedly prayed harder to have their wants supplied. The Innu was satisfied when informed by Ray that he had been there and seen this large body of people. The Innu departed to where his people were in such a sober manner that it showed he was deeply impressed with the Lieutenant's words. Soon the tribe were seen to go to a higher elevation and there the pow-wow commenced with redoubled fury. The ceremony was kept up until late in the day and that evening an east wind prevailed and broke up the pack. The next day the old Innu called upon Ray, and with the solemnity of a Quaker, said:—"I told you we could outpray those fellows on the other side!" When they go for a whale or during the time the flesh of that animal is on hand, seal, walrus, reindeer hunting and so on must be entirely abandoned by all the relatives of the participants in the first hunt. This same superstition is also found among the Esquimaux on the other side of the continent. Boys are thought more of than girls, yet both sexes are so scarce that when a couple is blessed with more than one child the children are distributed around to the other families who are childless. A child is considered a great blessing among them, and is thought more of than anything else which they possess.

PECULIARITIES OF LIVING.

As a rule these natives do not eat blubber. When provisions become scarce they will eat it, but never by itself. The same can be said of oil. A food is prepared in a large wooden bowl, consisting of a little seal oil and deer tallow beaten together to the consistency of thick cream. Boiled deer meat is then stirred in by a woman with her naked hand until it becomes like pemmican. This is thier chief traveling food, and is always used when a journey is to be performed. No part of the animal is allowed to go to waste. Even the bones, after being picked bare, are pounded up and boiled and the marrow extracted for pemmican food. Ray says it is a common occurrence for them to take a little seal oil and thoroughly mix it with reindeer droppings, and eat it with an apparent relish. They crave vegetables, and would always carefully gather up the potato peelings around the station, boil them and consider they had dined like a king. When traveling they eat but one meal a day. When they arise in the morning they start on their journey without breakfast, will travel all day, and when they strike camp at night will gorge themselves and go to bed. They have no sleeping sacks or deerskins. When the igloo is built and the slab of snow cut out upon which they are to rest, a tanned walrus hide is thrown over the cold slab and they lie down in the clothes in which they have traveled all day.

WONDERFUL FOR TOBACCO AND WHISKY.

They are crazy after tobacco and will do almost anything to obtain it. The blacker the tobacco and the more adulterated it is the better the Innus like it. The common natural leaf brands and the fine-cuts are not so eagerly sought after as the "black Jack," with its copperas taste. They get the full value of the tobacco in chewing, and after the juice is yielded to the mouth it is carefully looked behind the ear for some future occasion, the ladies, no doubt, fearing that a "cold day" in the article might befall them. The Innuits are their appetites in this respect that they would often come to the station and crave the privilege of cleaning out the men's pipes of their refuse—scrape the inside of the bowl and steal of nicotine and, mixing the ashes and other debris together, take it to the mouth and absolutely eat it. Tobacco appears to have no effect upon their systems; unless it is overindulged in, then the after effects of their feasts upon the ward the Innus appear to have more vitality and seem all happier. Even children and infants come to take to it naturally. Ray says he has seen a babe three years old taken from its mother's breast, its mouth filled with tobacco, and the infant would smile away at the rough, dirty mass enjoyment than it did its natural food, until it fell asleep. They are literally tobacco eaters. The same may be said about whisky. The more fiery it is in its mild the harder they will strive to obtain it. The first drink the writer ever caught after, but was proud drink of old "Jamaica Rum," which contains equal parts of aquafortis, nitro-glycerine and ammonia, will make a native happy as a coon at high water. Alcohol, in its pure state, is their high-toned drink, and the native's idea of good time is a bottle of alcohol and a plug of "black Jack." It is impossible to get these people to travel with you in the long Arctic night. They will not leave their huts as long as the sun is below the horizon. They are generally a very healthy people and consumption is unknown among them. There are no traces of lingering sickness or hereditary disease, and the people are mostly affected by bronchial ailments, caused by sudden exposure. Their snow huts are not exactly like the Esquimaux of the Hudson Bay region, being shaped more like a tent. Ray says he has slept in one of these "igloos" when it was so crowded and poorly ventilated that his cooking lamp refused to burn, yet in the morning he felt well and was prepared for a long journey.

FLOWERS BLOOMING AMID THE SNOWS.

As far north as this station was it was not without its signs of civilization in the spring and summer. The old-fashioned dandelion was found here in abundance, about the same in size and as strong in growth as in the Eastern States. Several species of wild sea-drops grow in this region. The latter has been found in bloom in early spring, the plant being in some favored place where the sun scorched it and where projection of snow protected it from the cold wind. A blue-bell similar to our own grows on the low lands, while several species of poppies are found, the most prominent of which is a small yellow variety. This poppy blossoms and fades quickly, and while the flower is passing away a small yellow butterfly frequents the bloom and feeds thereon. The Indians believe the poppy changes into the butterfly, and hence both are called "Inuky-puky-Inuksoo." A small Arctic willow grows under the surface of the moss, and one shrub will sometimes cover an area of several rods. No grass can be found, except along the seashore, where a small, coarse, wiry species is found.

Meade River is sixty miles from the station, and there we find a small, scraggy willow about four feet high. This river is torturous, about two hundred yards wide at its mouth and flows northeasterly into the Arctic Ocean. Ten miles further on is the Ice-pick-pong River (the river of big cliffs) and the same willow is found there. In both of these rivers whitefish, trout and a few salmon trout are found. Large game is seldom seen in that locality. Occasionally a stray deer wanders there. Ray says he does not believe the ground caribou deer is ever found north of latitude 70 degrees. The large gray (or white) wolf is seen at intervals, and the white fox is found early in winter, but as the weather becomes more severe entirely disappears. Only five polar bears have been killed in that neighborhood in two years. Ray saw but one during his stay there. The black and red fox do not inhabit that region, but the natives have their skins, which are brought from the south.

BIRDS OF THE FROZEN ZONE.

Of the eider duck there are five species—the Pacific, king, spectacle, old squaw and stellar's eider. The brant, white-fronted and Arctic geese frequent this locality. The Canada goose has been seen about one hundred miles further south and west. These and other birds migrate northward at a definite time each year. In 1882 they appeared on the 12th of May, and in 1883 they came one day later. In their flight they drew across the American continent, and it is Ray's opinion that they go to Prince Patrick's Land. Ray also believes there is no habitable land due north for man, beast or fowl, as there is no migration in that direction in the spring, nor do the birds return from due north in the fall. Birds return in July in small flocks passing south, although the king and Pacific remained near the Point as long as there was open water. A few straggling geese and ducks built their hatcheries near the Point, along the seacoast, and in less than six weeks from the time the bird is hatched out it is strong enough to fly southward with the older ones. Of the small waders the fallaropes and sand pipers hatch in immense numbers on the mainland, coming in May and leaving about the 1st of September, and all departing at once. The murr—the small Arctic diver—remains longer than any other bird. They have been frequently caught in the breathing holes of the seal in November. There are three species of the loon—the guest North diver, the red throat and the black throat. The little snow bunting comes early in April, a forerunner of spring. Ray describes this bird with a note like a skylark—a single bar—and the bird towers when it sings. It is the only place he ever heard them sing so sweetly. A few specs of the Richardson sparrow are found here, and several species of the seagull—the burgomaster, ivory, sand bird wing, several species of the tern and shearers, waldron, and sooegull. The large, white Arctic owl was found, but few in number. The owl is a very bird, and rises in that region as well by day as by night, and consequently was the most difficult to capture. Lemmings were also found in goodly numbers, but the marmot was very scarce. A large collection of specimens have been made for the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, including every animal and bird seen in that section, and the eggs of all the birds. In this respect Ray has secured all others.

CURIOUS PHENOMENON AT SEA.—The officers of the British bark St. Lawrence, from Demerara, report a remarkable experience during the voyage. When about 500 miles off Cape Hatteras the air suddenly became very dense and great difficulty was experienced in breathing. A strong odor as of burning pine timber was also perceptible. The misty mass is described as of a light-bluish tint, forming a zone extending from the horizon toward the zenith about 15 degrees. Within the radius of a mile the water was inky black.

In the 'Squire's Office.

There was a wedding in the 'Squire's office, the high contracting parties being a cowboy and a pretty country girl. The room was well filled with reporters, officials, curiosity-hunters, and policemen, and after the ceremony the groom remarked:

DYNAMITERS AT WORK.

Attempt to Blow Up the Ontario Parliament Buildings—Several Cartridges Found.

A great sensation was caused in Toronto by the discovery of a number of cartridges of dynamite secreted under the Parliament buildings where sessions of the Ontario Legislature are held. A son of one of the caretakers, Willie Macdonald, was playing around the western end of the building in which is situated the Crown Lands Office, containing all documents and records of the department from the earliest settlement of the province. In a ventilator under the window lighting the office of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, he saw a roll of paper containing two dynamite cartridges of the most powerful kind. A wire and fuse were attached, and there is not the slightest doubt that they were ready for explosion at very short notice, should the desired opportunity occur. The mingled consternation and excitement, as may be judged, was great in the extreme, and word was immediately passed around the buildings to make a careful examination. Under the chamber of the Speaker of the Legislature were discovered similar cartridges containing dynamite. Preparations had here been made for attachment, which lay a short distance from the cartridges, thus demonstrating that the miscreants had been disturbed in their foul purpose and compelled suddenly to abandon it. Had the conspiracy trial been in progress the Speaker would doubtless have occupied his chambers, and the attempt has therefore a dreadful as well as peculiar significance. The safe containing the records of the Registrar General's department is in close proximity to the place where the destructive agent was discovered, and this furnishes additional incentives to perpetrate the outrage.

The officials at Parliament Buildings say that they have not seen any suspicious characters about the buildings. The cartridges, however, must have been placed in the ventilators lately, else they would have been discovered before.

The cartridges found are about six inches long by an inch and a half in diameter, and weigh between a quarter and half a pound. They are called Ætna No. 2, and are manufactured by the Ætna Powder Company, of Chicago. Across the end of the shell of each cartridge is printed in large type, "forty per cent.;" this doubtless, being the proportion of nitro-glycerine. The shells appeared to have been newly oiled, as if to keep out the moisture. There is enough in any one of these cartridges to blow up either the east or the west wing of Parliament Buildings. A piece of fuse, about two yards in length, was found by the gardener lying on the lawn in the neighborhood where the cartridges were afterward discovered. The gardener was at work with his lawn mower when he picked up the fuse, and, not knowing its use, he thought it had fallen from a window above, and it therefore excited no curiosity in his mind. Another piece of fuse was found under the steps near by.

Little Children Tied Together.

A novel sight was witnessed at the Union Depot, Milwaukee, a few days ago. There arrived on an early morning Chicago train an immigrant family from Denmark, consisting of husband, wife and fifteen children. When they alighted from the cars the man and woman each carried in their arms an infant, and were followed into the depot by the remainder of the numerous family. The thirteen children were all joined together by a small-sized rope, which was fastened around the arm of each child. They were tied together in Denmark, and in this manner the long journey was made. The strangers remained at the depot until afternoon, when they departed for Minnesota, where they will settle upon a farm. All were comfortably clothed, and the happy father appeared to be well supplied with money. The father and mother were apparently about forty-five years of age. The visitors attracted considerable curiosity during their brief stay at the depot.

To Make Salt-Rising Bread.

Two and one-half quarts of flour, three teaspoonfuls of sweet milk, three tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful of salt, three teacups of boiling water. Pour the boiling water on to the milk, mix altogether except the flour, let stand ten minutes in a cool place, then gradually stir in the flour until it is a smooth batter; put in a tin basket and set in warm water to rise; keep the water the degree above blood heat. When perfectly light measure out two and one-half quarts of flour, rub into it half a teacup of lards and a tablespoonful of salt; make a hole in the middle, put in the yeast and work to a smooth dough; then put into pan well-greased, warm pans and bake slowly.

A FRENCHMAN, having insulted an editor, was precipitated down the editor's stairs. The Frenchman appealed to the law. The offense was not denied. The justice asked the foreigner what his impressions were, and if he was much hurt. "Sir, now," replied the Frenchman, "I have not been hurt—at all, but I have been surprised and considerably astonished."

A Lesson in Farm Harrowing.

A good deal is written and said about plowing, but little in regard to harrowing. But harrowing is even more important than plowing. Plowing cannot bring the soil into a good condition for the seed. It merely prepares it for the more important work of harrowing, and unless this is rightly done the soil is wholly unfit for sowing or planting. On light land, by the skillful use of the plow, the soil may be very nearly prepared for the seed, but one indispensable requisite is wanting which the harrow only can perform, and that is, the consolidation of the ground to preserve it from drying out too much after it is sown. But on heavy land the soil is utterly unfit for the seed until it has been pulverized and made fine as deeply as it has been plowed. The plow turns over, the furrow slices, at times hard and compact and almost as solid, when dry, as stone. It is the purpose of the harrow to reduce this cloddy soil to a fine condition and to fit it for the seed.

There are two ways of harrowing, good and bad, and the bad sometimes appears to be better than the good work. Let us first consider the good work. The harrow should have sharp, long teeth, and be hitched by a chain sufficiently long to permit the harrow to be dragged level and to avoid lifting up the corner by which it is drawn. It then works its way through the soil, diverging from a straight line at every obstacle met by each tooth, and is thus forced through the furrow slices in all directions, and quickly reduces the compact earth into a fine mellow condition. The lumps which it cannot break it brings to the surface and there leaves them, and is so doing it works the fine soil down to the bottom. This is very quickly done in light, sandy soil, but requires more working to effect it in hard, stiff land. When the work is done, if the soil is stiff and clayey, the surface will be covered with lumps all the harder and larger if the harrowing has been delayed until the soil has become dry, and all the smaller if it has been done on the newly plowed land. But down below the soil is fine and mellow and in good condition to receive the seed and cause it to sprout and take hold with its roots and make a vigorous growth. This, however, cannot be done with one or two strokes of the harrow, but it requires repeated harrowing and even cross-harrowing to do it well.

Bad harrowing can be done very quickly, as other poor work may be done. The harrow is hitched short, and rides on a few rows of the hinder teeth. The teeth are short and blunt, and penetrates but a very little way into the ground. It scratches the surface and does not work its way tortuously through the soil down to the bottom. It leaves the top fine, perhaps, but it also leaves the bottom loose and open even in light soil; while in heavy soil the furrow slices lie upon each other unbroken, with vacant spaces at the bottom. An inexperienced man walking over the field may think it well harrowed, but if he tries to push a cane into the soil here and there, in one place it will go down suddenly of its own weight in a vacant space six inches or more, and in another it cannot be pushed down more than two inches. The seed sown upon such soil is either barely covered, or it falls down into the spaces, where it lies and rots, while the other sprouts, but soon fades and dies, because there is no soil for the roots to penetrate with sufficient ease.

Perhaps the farmer has a roller, and thinks the roller will make up for these deficiencies. But this is a mistake. Where the harrowing has been good the roller will do good service. It will crush the lumps left on the surface and finish the good work of the harrow. But on the badly harrowed land the roller merely packs the surface over the arched clods below, which are not crushed, because the weight of the roller does not reach them, and makes the matter worse, because the thin skin of soil packed by the roller soon dries and bakes into a crust, and the young plants rooted in it very soon die.

A Sad Fate.

The funeral services held in the church of the Annunciation, New York city, and the subsequent burial in Woodlawn Cemetery, of the body of a beautiful girl only twenty-two years old, were the last sad rites extended to one who fell a victim to the Langtry craze, the belief that physical beauty merely was a sufficient passport to fame and fortune on the stage.

John Stetson, the theatrical manager, says: "She was one of the most beautiful women I ever saw in my life. She was tall and perfect in form, with oval face and classic cast, velvety and as rosy as peaches. She gave me her name as Ivy Hughes, admitting at the same time that that was her maiden name. She told me that she had recently come from England, where she had moved in the highest circles of society. She was given a minor part and failed, then became an artist's model, had a long struggle with poverty and died to be buried at public expense. Her fate was a sad one."

"Now," said a boy to a companion; as they were playing, "I'll all here and you come up and see if you've got a ball you could use to play." "No, no! you've got to be it now." "No, I won't be it now." "Yes, you will." "No, I won't." "Yes, you will." "No, I won't." "Yes, you will." "No, I won't

WHY IS IT SO?

Some find work where some find rest.
And so the weary world goes on;
I sometimes wonder which is best—
The morrow comes when life is gone.

Some eyes sleep when some eyes wake;
And so the dreary night hours go.
Some hearts beat where some hearts break,
I often wonder why 'tis so.

Some hands fold where other hands
Are lifted bravely in the strife;
And so thro' ages and thro' lands
Move on the two extremes of life.

Some feet halt where some feet tread,
In the tireless march, a thorny way;
Some struggle on where some have fled;
Some seek, when others shun, the fray.

Some sleep on while others keep
The vigils of the true and brave;
They will not rest till roses creep
Around their name above a grave.

THE POLAR REGIONS.

THE NEIGHBORHOOD OF POINT BARROW AS DESCRIBED BY LT. RAY'S PARTY.

A Primitive Lot of Indians—Their Ways and Habits—Diseases—Babies.

The Ooglaamiemeuns are the tribe of natives in the immediate vicinity of where Lt. Ray's Signal Service station was at Ooglaamie. The tribe consists of 130 souls. A few miles distant is another tribe, called the Noowookmeuns, numbering 140 people, but the relations existing between the two are not so harmonious as one would be led to believe was due to neighbors where acquaintances are so few. There have not been any open outbreaks between the tribes, and they often mingled together near the station, but each eyed the other suspiciously, and the members of the two tribes were observed to breathe more freely when they were surrounded only by their own people. Neither tribe holds allegiance to any chief or ruler. No congresses or legislatures have as yet broken in upon the rude mode of living. They are anarchists in the full sense of the word. Each man is his own chief and, strange as it may seem, Lieutenant Ray pronounces them the best governed and happiest people in the world. There appears to be no clashing of interests among them, and no bully has ever yet come to the front and bulldozed the tribe by asserting that might made right. Fighting and quarrelling are unknown. Ray says he never saw a child punished in any form, and yet he reports the children as well behaved, modest and honest. As high as twenty-five children have visited the station at one time, and their deportment would be such that he could not help but notice the striking contrast between them and the children who had all the advantages of civilization. However small the child might be it never intruded itself into univited places. No matter how many tools, articles of clothing or provisions were scattered around, the Lieutenant never saw them touch a thing, much less try to appropriate or steal them. If anything was given a child it showed its appreciation thereof, sometimes in words but more often in smiles, and by informing its playfellows that he or she had been shown especial favors by the great white Captain. The only blow Ray ever saw struck in these tribes was by a husband, who heard his wife's cars for supposed infidelity.

HABITS AND CUSTOMS.

Thieving is seldom known among the men or women of the tribes, and when it does occur there is no punishment for the crime. The thief makes no secret of his act, and will deliberately expose the article taken to the whole tribe in a few minutes after appropriating it to his own use. The petty thief will take a hatchet from its owner, and in half an hour loan it to him to do some work, and the owner is in honor bound to return it to the scamp who stole it. A case in point is as follows: One of the tribe stole a tent from another one. He "pitched" the tent a few minutes later, and in half an hour had as his guest or dinner the original owner. The owner knew the tent, and got some within its folds and partook of the hospitality of the thief. Possession appears to be nine points of law with them. A police court would soon become bankrupt there. Neither tribe appears to have any marriage ceremony. If the man is willing and the women also, there is no legal impediment and the twain weave one. There is but little mourning ceremony. When a male dies his body is sewed up in canvas or a deer skin, placed on a sledge and moved out on the tundra, where it remains. The deceased's effects are all broken up over the body. If a woman dies the only observance in form of burial is in simply breaking to bowl over the body. Having no implements to penetrate the hard frozen ground and there being a scarcity of lumber wherewith to build coffins, the above manner of disposing of their dead seems to be the only practicable way. Many persons have accused these tribes of having no feeling for their dead, not stopping to consider the difficulties surrounding them and the almost impossibility of giving them decent sepulture. Ray says the memory of the deceased is ever cherished with the fondest feelings, and when they speak of the departed it is with a reverence and charity not surpassed by the white man.

MARITAL RELATIONS.

The Ooglaamiemeuns and Noowookmeuns are full of superstitions about [illegible] have a god of fire, one of water and one of almost everything else, even a god of the north wind, and so on for the eight principal points of the compass. These gods they often supplicate for assistance, and should the prayer be heard it is all right, but should the prayer be unanswered in their simplicity they merely consider the god angry or too busy to attend to their present wants. At one time one of these pow-wows (or prayer meetings) was in progress, the object being to have the god of the east wind drive away the ice pack that they might hunt for seal, when Lieutenant Ray called one of the old men of the tribe to him and, marking the outlines of the Asiatic coast upon the sand, told the Innu (for such they call themselves) that across the great water was a larger body of land and many, many more people than the Ooglaamiemeuns had; that these people also wanted seal, and the god of the west wind was providing for them, as they had undoubtedly prayed harder to have their wants supplied. The Innu was satisfied when informed by Ray that he had been there and seen this large body of people. The Innu departed to where his people were in such a sober manner that it showed he was deeply impressed with the Lieutenant's words. Soon the tribe were seen to go to a higher elevation and there the pow-wow commenced with redoubled fury. The ceremony was kept up until late in the day and that evening an east wind prevailed and broke up the pack. The next day the old Innu called upon Ray, and with the solemnity of a Quaker said:—"I told you we could outpray those fellows on the other side!" When they go for a whale or during the time the flesh of that animal is on hand, seal, walrus, reindeer hunting and so on must be entirely abandoned by all the relatives of the participants in the first hunt. This same superstition is also found among the Esquimaux on the other side of the continent. Boys are thought more of than girls, yet both sexes are so scarce that when a couple is blessed with more than one child the children are distributed around to the other families who are childless. A child is considered a great blessing among them, and is thought more of than anything else which they possess.

PECULIARITIES OF LIVING.

As a rule these natives do not eat blubber. When provisions become scarce they will eat it, but never by itself. The same can be said of oil. A food is prepared in a large wooden bowl, consisting of a little seal oil and deer tallow beaten together to the consistency of thick cream. Boiled deer meat is then stirred in by a woman with her naked hand until it becomes like pemmican. This is thier chief traveling food, and is always used when a journey is to be performed. No part of the animal is allowed to go to waste. Even the bones, after being picked bare, are pounded up and boiled and the marrow extracted for pemmican food. Ray says it is a common occurrence for them to take a little seal oil and thoroughly mix it with reindeer droppings, and eat it with an apparent relish. They crave vegetables, and would always carefully gather up the potato peelings around the station, boil them and consider they had dined like a king. When traveling they eat but one meal a day. When they arise in the morning they start on their journey without breakfast, will travel all day, and when they strike camp at night will gorge themselves and go to bed. They have no sleeping sacks or deerskins. When the igloo is built and the slab of snow cut out upon which they are to rest, a tanned walrus hide is thrown over the cold slab and they lie down in the clothes in which they have traveled all day.

WORTHLESS FOR TOBACCO AND WHISKY.

They are crazy after tobacco and will do almost anything to obtain it. The blacker the tobacco and the more adulterated it is the better the Innus like it. The common natural leaf brands and the fine-cuts are not as eagerly sought after as the "black Jack," with its copperas taste. They get the full value of the tobacco in chewing, and after the quid has yielded its substance it is carefully tucked behind the ear for some future occasion, the nerve, no doubt, having that a "comfy" in the particle might hold place. So insatiable are their appetites for tobacco that they would often come to the station and crave the privilege of cleaning out the men's pipes of their refuse—scrape the inside of the bowl and steal the nicotine and, mixing the ashes and other debris together, take it into the mouth and absolutely eat it. Tobacco appears to have no effect upon their systems; unless it is to strengthen them, for all of their feasts upon the weed the Innus appear to have remarkably fine muscular development. Even children and infants seem to take to it naturally. Ray says he has seen a babe three months old taken from its mother's breast, its mouth filled with tobacco, and the infant would smile away as the [illegible] drew enjoyment therefrom. It is not the natural food, until it fell asleep. They are literally tobacco eaters. The same may be said about whisky. The more fiery it is in its taste the better they will relish to obtain it. Tea they [illegible] are not sought after, but one good drink of old "Jungle Juice," which contains equal parts of [illegible], nitro-glycerine and ammonia, will make a native happy as a clam at high water. Alcohol, in its pure state, is their high-toned drink, and the native's idea of pure bliss is a bottle of alcohol and a plug of "black Jack." It is impossible to get these people to travel with you in the long Arctic night. They will not leave their huts as long as the sun is below the horizon. They are generally a very healthy people and consumption is unknown among them. There are no traces of lingering sickness or hereditary disease, and the people are mostly affected by bronchial ailments, caused by sudden exposure. Their snow huts are not exactly like the Esquimaux of the Hudson Bay region, being shaped more like a tent. Ray says he has slept in one of these "igloos" when it was so crowded and poorly ventilated that his cooking lamp refused to burn, yet in the morning he felt well and was prepared for a long journey.

FLOWERS BLOOMING AMID THE SNOWS.

As far north as this station was it was not without its signs of civilization in the spring and summer. The old-fashioned dandelion was found here in abundance, about the same in size and as strong in growth as in the Eastern States. Several species of the saxafrage grow in that region, and the little buttercup is a common thing. The latter has been found in bloom in early spring, the plant being in some favored place where the sun reached it and where projection of snow protected it from the cold wind. A bluebell similar to our own grows on the low lands, while several species of poppies are found, the most prominent of which is a small yellow variety. This poppy blossoms and fades quickly, and while the flower is passing away a small yellow butterfly frequents the bloom and feeds thereon. The Indians believe the poppy changes into the butterfly, and hence both are called "lucky-pucky-Jackson." A small Arctic willow grows under the surface of the moss, and one shrub will sometimes cover an area of several rods. No grass can be found, except along the seashore, where a small, coarse, wiry species is found.

Meade River is sixty miles from the station, and there we find a small, scraggy willow about four feet high. This river is tortuous, about two hundred yards wide at its mouth and flows northeasterly into the Arctic Ocean. Ten miles further on is the Ick-pick-pong River (the river of big cliffs) and the same willow is found there. In both of these rivers whitefish, trout and a few salmon trout are found. Large game is seldom seen in that locality. Occasionally a stray deer wanders there. Ray says he does not believe the ground cariboo deer is ever found north of latitude 70 degrees. The large gray (or white) wolf is seen at intervals, and the white fox is found early in winter, but as the weather becomes more severe entirely disappears. Only five polar bears have been killed in that neighborhood in two years. Ray saw but one during his stay there. The black and red fox do not inhabit that region, but the natives have their skins, which are brought from the south.

BIRDS OF THE FRIGID ZONE.

Of the eider duck there are five species—the Pacific, king, spectacle, old squaw and stellar's eider. The brant, white-fronted and Arctic geese frequent this locality. The Canada goose has been seen about one hundred miles further south and west. These and other birds migrate northward at a definite time each year. In 1882 they appeared on the 12th of May, and in 1883 they came one day later. In their flight they draw across the American continent, and it is Ray's opinion that they go to Prince Patrick's Land. Ray also believes there is no habitable land due north for man, beast or fowl, as there is no migration in that direction in the spring, nor do the birds return from due north in the fall. Birds return in July in small flocks passing south, although the king and Pacific remained near the Point as long as there was open water. A few straggling geese and ducks built their hatcheries near the Point, along the seashore, and in less than six weeks from the time the bird is hatched out it is strong enough to fly southward with the older ones. Of the small waders the dollarone and sand pipers hatch in immense numbers on the mainland, coming in May and leaving about the 1st of September, and all departing at once. The auks—the small Arctic diver—remain longer than any other bird. They have been frequently caught in the breathing holes of the seal in November. There are three species of the loon—the great North diver, the red throat and the black throat. The little snow bunting comes early in April, a forerunner of spring. Ray describes this bird with a note like a skylark—a single bar—and the bird bowers when it sings. It is the only place he ever heard them sing so sweetly. A few geese of the Richardson species are found here, and several species of the seagull—the burgomaster, ivory, and blue wing, several species of the tern and cormorants, eiderus, and sea gull. The large, white Arctic owl was found, but few in number. The owl is a very kind, and sees in that region as well by day as by night, and consequently was the most difficult to capture. Lemmings were also found in prodigious numbers, but the marmot was very scarce. A large collection of specimens have been made for the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, including every animal and bird seen in that section, and the eggs of all the birds. In this respect Ray has excelled all others.

The misty mass is described as of a light-bluish tint, forming a zone extending from the horizon toward the zenith about 15 degrees. Within the radius of a mile the water was inky black.

In the 'Squire's Office.

There was a wedding in the 'Squire's office, the high contracting parties being a cowboy and a pretty country girl. The room was well filled with reporters, officials, curiosity-hunters, and policemen, and after the ceremony the groom remarked:

Then they all stepped up, the reporters as if they were accustomed to good living, the officials with a diffident manner, the curiosity-hunters with a don't-care-to air, and finally the policeman made a break, as if they were going to make an arrest; but the cowboy put out his hand.

DYNAMITERS AT WORK.

Attempts to Blow Up the Ontario Parliament Buildings—Several Cartridges Found.

A great sensation was caused in Toronto by the discovery of a number of cartridges of dynamite secreted under the Parliament buildings where sessions of the Ontario Legislature are held. A son of one of the caretakers, Willie Macdonald, was playing around the western end of the building in which is situated the Crown Lands Office, containing all documents and records of the department from the earliest settlement of the province. In a ventilator under the window lighting the office of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, he saw a roll of paper containing two dynamite cartridges of the most powerful kind. A wire and fuse were attached, and there is not the slightest doubt that they were ready for explosion at very short notice, should the desired opportunity occur. The mingled consternation and excitement, as may be judged, was great in the extreme, and word was immediately passed around the buildings to make a careful examination. Under the chamber of the Speaker of the Legislature were discovered similar cartridges containing dynamite. Preparations had here been made for attachment, which lay a short distance from the cartridges, thus demonstrating that the miscreants had been disturbed in their foul purpose and compelled suddenly to abandon it. Had the conspiracy trial been in progress the Speaker would doubtless have occupied his chambers, and the attempt has therefore a dreadful as well as peculiar significance. The safe containing the records of the Registrar General's department is in close proximity to the place where the destructive agent was discovered, and this furnishes additional incentives to perpetrate the outrage.

The officials at Parliament Buildings say that they have not seen any suspicious characters about the buildings. The cartridges, however, must have been placed in the ventilators lately, else they would have been discovered before.

The cartridges found are about six inches long by an inch and a half in diameter, and weigh between a quarter and half a pound. They are called Ætna No. 2, and are manufactured by the Ætna Powder Company, of Chicago. Across the end of the shell of each cartridge is printed in large type, "forty per cent.," this doubtless, being the proportion of nitro-glycerine. The shells appeared to have been newly oiled, as if to keep out the moisture. There is enough in any one of these cartridges to blow up either the east or the west wing of Parliament Buildings. A piece of fuse, about two yards in length, was found by the gardener lying on the lawn in the neighborhood where the cartridges were afterward discovered. The gardener was at work with his lawn mower when he picked up the fuse, and, not knowing its use, he thought it had fallen from a window above, and it therefore excited no curiosity in his mind. Another piece of fuse was found under the steps near by.

Little Children Tied Together.

A novel sight was witnessed at the Union Depot, Milwaukee, a few days ago. There arrived on an early morning Chicago train an immigrant family from Denmark, consisting of husband, wife and fifteen children. When they alighted from the cars the man and woman each carried in their arms an infant, and were followed into the depot by the remainder of the numerous family. The thirteen children were all joined together by a small-sized rope, which was fastened around the arm of each child. They were tied together in Denmark, and in this manner the long journey was made. The strangers remained at the depot until afternoon, when they departed for Minnesota, where they will settle upon a farm. All were comfortably clothed, and the happy father appeared to be well supplied with money. The father and mother were apparently about forty-five years of age. The visitors attracted considerable curiosity during their brief stay at the depot.

To Make Salt-Rising Bread.

Two and one-half quarts of flour, three teaspoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful of salt, three teacups of boiling water. Pour the boiling water on to the milk, mix altogether except the flour, let stand ten minutes in a cool place, then gradually stir in the flour until it is a smooth batter; put in a tin bucket and set in warm water to rise; keep the water one degree above blood heat. When perfectly light measure out two and one-half quarts of flour, rub into it half a teacup of soda and a tablespoonful of salt; make a hole in the middle, put in the yeast and work to a smooth dough; then put into two well-greased, warm pans and bake slowly.

A Lesson in Farm Harrowing.

A good deal is written and said about plowing, but little in regard to harrowing. But harrowing is even more important than plowing. Plowing cannot bring the soil into a good condition for the seed. It merely prepares it for the more important work of harrowing, and unless this is rightly done the soil is wholly unfit for sowing or planting. On light land, by the skillful use of the plow, the soil may be very nearly prepared for the seed, but one indispensable requisite is wanting when the harrow only can perform, and that is, the consolidation of the ground to preserve it from drying out too much after it is sown. But on heavy land the soil is utterly unfit for the seed until it has been pulverised and made fine as deeply as it has been plowed. The plow turns over, the furrow slices, at times hard and compact and almost as solid, when dry, as stone. It is the purpose of the harrow to reduce this cloddy soil to a fine condition and to fit it for the seed.

There are two ways of harrowing, good and bad, and the bad sometimes appears to be better than the good work. Let us first consider the good work. The harrow should have sharp, long teeth, and be hitched by a chain sufficiently long to permit the harrow to be dragged level and to avoid lifting up the corner by which it is drawn. It then works its way through the soil, diverging from a straight line at every obstacle met by each tooth, and is thus forced through the furrow slices in all directions, and quickly reduces the compact earth into a fine mellow condition. The lumps which it cannot break it brings to the surface and there leaves them, and in so doing it works the fine soil down to the bottom. This is very quickly done in light, sandy soil, but requires more working to affect it in hard, stiff land. When the work is done, if the soil is stiff and clayey, the surface will be covered with lumps all the harder and larger if the harrowing has been delayed until the soil has become dry, and all the smaller if it has been done on the newly plowed land. But down below the soil is fine and mellow and in good condition to receive the seed and cause it to sprout and take hold with its roots and make a vigorous growth. This, however, cannot be done with one or two strokes of the harrow, but it requires repeated harrowing and even cross-harrowing to do it well.

Bad harrowing can be done very quickly, as other poor work may be done. The harrow is hitched short, and rides on a few rows of the hinder teeth. The teeth are short and blunt, and penetrates but a very little way into the ground. It scratches the surface and does not work its way tortuously through the soil down to the bottom. It leaves the top fine, perhaps, but it also leaves the bottom loose and open even in tight soil, while in heavy soil the furrow slices lie upon each other unbroken, with vacant spaces at the bottom. An inexperienced man walking over the field may think it well harrowed, but if he tries to push a cane into the soil here and there, in one place it will go down suddenly of its own weight in a vacant space six inches or more, and in another it cannot be pushed down more than two inches. The seed sown upon such soil is either barely covered, or it falls down into the spaces, where it lies and rots, while the other sprouts, but soon fades and dies, because there is no soil for the roots to penetrate with sufficient ease.

Perhaps the farmer has a roller, and thinks the roller will make up for these deficiencies. But this is a mistake. Where the harrowing has been good the roller will do good service. It will crush the lumps left on the surface and finish the good work of the harrow. But on the badly harrowed land the roller merely packs the surface over the arched clods below, which are not crushed, because the weight of the roller does not reach them, and makes the matter worse, because the thin skin of soil packed by the roller soon dries and bakes into a crust, and the young plants rooted in it very soon die.

A Sad Fate.

The funeral services held in the church of the Annunciation, New York city, and the subsequent burial in Woodlawn Cemetery, of the body of a beautiful girl only twenty-two years old, were the last sad rites extended to one who fell a victim to the Langtry craze, the belief that physical beauty merely was a sufficient passport to fame and fortune on the stage.

John Stetson, the theatrical manager, says: "She was one of the most beautiful women I ever saw in my life. She was tall and perfect in form, with coal black eyes and silvery soft, velvety and as rosy as peaches. She gave me her name as Ivy Hughes, admitting at the same time that that was her maiden name. She told me that she had recently come from England, where she had moved in the highest circles of society. She was given a minor part and failed, then became an artist's model, had a long struggle with poverty and died to be buried at public expense. Her fate was a sad one."

A FEW NOTES FROM THE PHILADELPHIA "EVENING CALL."

WHAT THEY FEAR.

Oleomargarine Man—"These people will ruin our business before long."

Customer—"What people?"

"The dairymen."

"The dairymen! In what way? By getting laws passed?"

"Oh, no; we do not fear that."

"Then what is the trouble?"

"Well, you see, they make such bad butter."

"But how can that affect you?"

"People who get it think it must be spurious, and that gives oleomargarine a bad name."

WHAT CAUSED IT.

Smithers—"Do you see that man with the haggard face, a look of abject misery and despair over his features, and a coating of yellow mud over his boots? Don't speak to him. He is mad, dangerously mad."

Blithers—"By Jos, I thought so. Looks as if he had just escaped from a lunatic asylum."

Smithers—"Not quite so bad as that."

Blithers—"What a fearfully miserable look he has. Do you know him?"

Smithers—"Yes."

Blithers—"What has caused that wreck?"

Smithers—"He has been out in the country all day looking for a cottage."

CHALLENGING FOR CAUSE.

"Now, then," said the Judge to the prisoner who had been arrested for murder, "you have a right to challenge through your counsel any of these gentlemen before they can be placed on the jury, either peremptorily or for cause. Mr. John Smith it is the first name on the list."

The prisoner here whispered to his counsel.

"Your honor," said the lawyer, "my client challenges Mr. Smith for cause."

"State the cause," replied the Judge.

"My client asserts that within the past two days he has heard Mr. Smith complain bitterly of a dullness in his business. Mr. Smith is an undertaker. Hence the challenge."

"Mr. Smith is excused," said his Honor.

A MOTHERLY HINT.

Lillian—"What a queer title for a book, ma!"

Ma—"What title?"

Lillian—"'Not Like Other Girls.'"

Ma—"It is rather odd. Is it a novel?"

Lillian—"Yes. I wonder what the heroine can be if she is 'not like other girls!'"

Ma—"I don't know, unless she goes into the kitchen and helps her mother instead of staying in the parlor to read novels."

Medical Graduate—"Oh, it is, is it? Well, just wait until I have been here a while."

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.

Mamma—"I fear you have been guilty of great, very great rudeness and vulgarity."

Little Jack—"I sin's. What did I do, anyhow?

Mamma—"Mary states that you used some low expression as 'let her rip' in speaking of your aunt."

Little Jack—"Aunt is up-stairs in the sewing-room, ain't she?"

Mamma—"Yes, but——"

Little Jack—"And what is she doing?"

Mamma—"She is ripping up my old dress."

Little Jack—"Well, let her rip. That's what I said."

A correspondent of a leading religious paper in this city asks: "Shall I feed candy to the dogs when there are children near by?" Yes. Dr. Sturge, a medical missionary to Siam, relates how a native doctor administered an emetic to a love-sick lady who had swallowed a quantity of opium with suicidal intent. The scientist of Siam took a live eel, clipped off a part of his tail to make him squirm in a lively manner, and then pushed him, tail first, down the romantic damsel's throat. When the eel returned to the stream of running water near which the girl was made to recline, the opium quickly followed him.

The new Press Bureau at Constantinople, which is under the direction of Madjid Pasha, has, since its establishment, made the task of conducting a newspaper upon the banks of the Bosporus exceedingly difficult. A long list of subjects, the discussion and even the bare mention of which is interdicted, has lately been issued to the newspapers. The journalists of Stamboul are forbidden to mention Eastern Roumelia or the Soudan. They are not to discuss Ismail's chances of re-ascending the Khedivial throne, and they are to be silent about the illness and death of Midhat.

Somebody asks the New York Herald what is Blaine's religion, to which the Herald responds as follows:

We do not know. We advise our correspondent to apply to Jay Gould and Russell Sage, or to Robert G. Ingersoll. Mr. Ingersoll put Mr. Blaine in the Cincinnati convention of 1876, and the others also appear to be in intimate relations with him. When our correspondent has ascertained what he wishes from these authorities we shall be pleased if he will drop us another line, reporting his intelligence. Mr. Ingersoll is an infidel and Messrs. Gould and Sage both are worshippers of the golden calf.

The Texas Grangers, a large part of the voting population of the State, are said to be a good deal dissatisfied by the arguments of those who insist that we need Blaine for the sake of a "vigorous foreign policy." They say that they left Germany because the foreign policy of that country was too vigorous for them, and came here under the idea that the citizens of this country were not to be disturbed by foreign broils of commotions, or taken away from their homes and business for the Monroe doctrine, the Balance of Power below the equator, or anything of the sort. A German who left his own country to save himself from fighting for Bismarck would hardly care to go to the same lure for Jim Blaine.

The Democratic Platform.

The democracy of Alabama in convention assembled congratulate the people upon the results of our party's legislation for the state.

FINANCES.

Ten years of democratic government has brought us from a condition of bankruptcy and general disquiet to our present most gratifying state of peace and financial prosperity.

Ten years ago with a tax rate of 7½ mills there was produced only about eight hundred thousand dollars of revenue, and the expenses of government were about a million and a half dollars; while now, with a rate of 6½ mills, we have raised and expended for the past year about one million one hundred thousand dollars, and the result is that notwithstanding the large amount lost by the late state treasurer's default, there is now in the treasury a larger amount, over and above liabilities, than at any previous time in the state's history, and this is attributable to the steadily increasing prosperity of our people and the honesty and economy of our public administration in all its departments; the sole lamentable exception being the individual wrong doing of a too much trusted servant of the people. And even this most grievous loss is not without its compensation, it having occasioned a system of thorough examination of the accounts of all officers of the state handling its revenue and a rigid enforcement of the laws for collecting and securing the state's money, by means of which incalculable future advantages will ensue.

CONVICTS.

The management of the state convicts, a most troublesome and difficult matter theoretically and practically, though new and imperfect in some respects, is approaching a solution in a manner consonant with the humane ideas of the age; at the same time that justice is done to the guilty, the state's financial interest guarded, and the health and comfort of convicts being now carefully protected.

EDUCATION.

Our educational system, from the common school up to the university, is in better condition than at any previous period. We have during the past year had a larger number of schools, and better schools than ever before. The Normal schools for both white and colored pupils, the Agricultural and Mechanical College and the University, are each and all in a condition of most gratifying prosperity.

UNION AND HARMONY.

Under these circumstances we confidently appeal to the people for their continued confidence, and remembering the past and mindful of the terrible danger to be apprehended from dissension among ourselves, we urgently ask for a continuance of that harmony and union that has brought such beneficial results, and we declare that the purpose and policy of the party shall be to continue to use care and economy in appropriations and to hold to rigid accountability all who receive and pay out the money of the state.

TARIFF AND TAXATION.

Enjoying and appreciating these blessings derived from democratic rule, in our own state, we contemplate with pleasure the prospect of a like happy consummation in national affairs, from the return of the national democracy to its old position at the head of the general government, thereby securing a thorough cleansing of the federal offices and the bringing to justice of those who have so long run riot in the public treasury. And we trust and believe that among the first results will be a great lightening of public and private burdens; the beginning of the end of that system which exacts tribute from one citizen to enrich another, and a return to the simple principles and practices of the fathers; the government taking from the people by taxation only so much as is needed for an honest and economical administration.

ALABAMA'S ADVANTAGES.

Rejoicing in the blessings of a fruitful soil, salubrious climate, and mines of untold wealth, we heartily offer to good people of other states and countries a share in these bounties of providence; and we recommend to our state legislature to take all lawful steps to encourage immigration to the state; so that the vast material interests of our country may be developed, and Alabama may take that position to which our unequalled advantages entitle us; and for the purpose of accomplishing this end we recommend the adoption of all such additional legislation and the making of such appropriations as may be necessary for the purpose.

EDITOR VIEW:—The question of county conventions in Chilton county has not in the past been a popular one, but I think that had the good people stopped to think, and properly analyzed the question it would have been so.

What are conventions? They are the will of the people expressed through themselves.

Why have they been unpopular in Chilton county? Because the people have remained at home on the days appointed for beat meetings, and let a few who are always looking for the spoils, send themselves as delegates, and when the ticket has been put in the field, those who remained at home cry out, "Wolf! Wolf! All a trick fixed up by the ring and we will not support the ticket."

Who is to blame for this "ring ticket" so-called? Nobody but the men who remain at home from the beat meetings. If they look after their interest and thus help they all would have been well and the ticket would have been alright. This is plain talk but facts.

How shall this be remedied? Simply by every man doing his duty. Go to the beat meetings. Send your best men to Clanton on the 28th, and this evil nonsense of bosses that all good and true citizens will support, and it will be cleared.

When the Convention assembles let it nominate good men, regardless of the fact as to whether they are candidates or not, for it often happens that men offer for office who do not suit. It must not be understood that because a man has announced himself as a candidate that he must be nominated, but on the contrary the best men should be selected without regard to their candidacy.

Our county is rapidly filling up with blacks, and if we would retain our county among the prosperous of our State, we must do it by organization, and the most effectual way is by conventions as proven by long experience. Then let us have a rousing, enthusiastic one, and let every true conservative put his shoulder to the wheel, and we can and will elect the ticket put forth by the convention. TRUTH.

[The above was intended for last week's paper but came too late. It contains some good points, and is published for that reason.—ED. VIEW.]

ED. OF THE VIEW:—After reading the article signed "Julius," in you issue of the 19th, I still adhere to the opinion that nomination by convention is the best way to secure efficient and trustworthy men to fill the several county offices. My object in writing before was to encourage and promote, if possible, a full attendance at the primary or beat meetings. I am not informed as to whether my effort was successful; and I am not vain enough to think that any action I could take would influence a county convention to make nominations in direct opposition to the expressed wishes of the people. I would not even take the responsibility of suggesting such a course. It remains to be seen, however, what has been done by the beats, and if it should chance that a majority are in favor of making nominations, then it behooves the minority to yield gracefully, and casting away all prejudice and selfishness, accord the ticket that hearty and undivided support which will insure us immunity from negro and scalawag domination. I do not agree with "Julius" that the Democratic party I desire is dead. On the contrary it was never in a sounder, healthier condition—numbering in its ranks 1,000,000 majority of all the whites in the Union—with a majority of the State governments, and also a majority in the House of Representatives, and the time is not far distant when its edicts and doctrines will be issued and promulgated by a President of its choosing, from the presidential mansion itself. Secession has not caused it to die the "death of the wicked." If the Democratic party ever had for its motto "Rule or Ruin," it was before I knew it. One of its youthful follies laid aside before it and I became acquainted. It seems to me to be a fact beyond question, that we owe whatever of prosperity we have to-day to this party, and to it organized by this very system of conventions which "Julius" opposes. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that "Julius" views are correct—that men are not selected for honesty and capability—that the result of coventions is the formation of courthouse rings, etc., would the situation be better under this "every man for himself and God for us all system" he advocates? I think I showed very clearly in my former letter that the only way to get at the choice of the people was by means of convention, and that even on election under the other plan was no evidence of choice. If the people will attend their primaries and see that they are properly represented, they need fear no court-house rings, nor devices of the "artful dodgers" alluded to by Julius. But if he is correct, are court-house rings to be dreaded so much after all? He says: "Show me a county that pursues the practice of nominating candidates for county offices, and I will show you a county that has a courthouse ring." Why I am under the impression that a large majority of the counties pursue this course, and I've yet to learn that they are injured thereby. It is worth while to inquire just here, whether there is a different state of things there from that which exists elsewhere, and, if so, whether the interests of the convention counties are detrimentally effected. Is there less security to life and property? Are the laws badly administered? Are the people trammeled in the pursuit of happiness? If not, then what dark deeds do the courthouse rings perform that "Julius" dreads so much? I was under the impression that our finances were improving, that laws were enforced, order preserved, and everything prospering generally, and this state of affairs was the direct result of official efforts on the part of men selected, if you please, by conventions manipulated by courthouse rings and artful designers. I am afraid that "Julius" has had to bear an undue share of the penalty for the vices and blunders of politicians, which brought about the late civil war, and hence his cry for "peace." If so, I extend him my deep and heartfelt sympathy.

But, I am not prepared to admit that the war was the result of the "vices and blunders of politicians"; on the contrary, it seemed to me at the time to be the will of a vast majority of the people that we should secede from the Union. As "an old soldier," I have no wish to erase from my mind one memory of that dark and gloomy period. It is not unpleasant to me to recall whatever penalties I may have suffered for the small share I bore in its passing events, and I can say that in relation to it, at least, it is my philosophy "never to regret." Instead, I would prefer using my energies in striving to remove and prevent the recurrence of some of the evils resulting from that war. It is a matter upon which we may well congratulate ourselves that we have, by the aid of conventions which nominated good men for office, overcome many of them; and it is well for us to consider whether we are to lightly abandon a system under which we have prospered so greatly. It is too late now to affect the action of the beat meetings, and I regret that Julius' communication did not appear sooner. I earnestly desire a full and fair discussion of this question, and there is much to be said which want of time prevents me from saying, but which others better fitted might more ably say. Let us at some future time hear from them. "Truth is mighty and will prevail."

Whatever may be the action of the convention I shall still believe that the wisest and best plan is to nominate. In the absence of any expressed wish of the people—in the event of a predominant sentiment to the contrary—I think it would be impolitic for this convention to take such a step; but if, as I stated in the outset a majority desire it, let not the minority oppose it. As "Julius" intimates the area of the county is small, and the materials are easily known throughout its length and breadth. Now then, why should local rings be made?

A Gala Day.

The closing exercises of the Gallierville school, deserve something more than a brief notice, as it not not only reflected credit upon students and teachers, but was, indeed, an honor to the community. Patrons of the school and many citizens from all directions, with well-filled baskets, repaired to the pleasant school house, anxious to witness the performances, and hear declamations and essays from the students, who had hoisted above the tastefully arranged stage their greeting, in evergreen letters, "WELCOME." At ten o'clock, a. m. the pupils marched in, and took the positions assigned to each, with as much dignity and precision as could be. After a melodious song by all, even the least, Master Henry Keyser, delivered an appropriate "Salutatory." Then followed many declamations. The valedictory was delivered by Miss Sadie King, a child of only ten summers. With due deference to each and all, I venture the prediction that little Sadie will never act more gracefully nor speak more eloquently when she receives her diploma, and that Miss Lillie McGee's graduating essay will not excel the one she read. "Coming events cast their shadows before." Master Harvey Huckabee deservedly gained the first prize, as being the most eloquent declaimer among the boys. His subject: "The Baron's Last Banquet." The second prize was awarded to Master Oscar White; his subject: "The Frog." Rev. Mr. Mills presented the prizes with an instructive and amusing address.

The close attention, the approving smiles, and cheering applause by the audience, proclaimed their great appreciation. Well, the tables did not "groan under their weight of luxuries," but you may guess about the eaters, for I cannot say more than that it was a fine and abundant dinner and much was left.

As it was a preacher's examination, and another preacher was present, and still another preacher preaches in that house, I will not state more. MIDA.

Maplesville Dots.

A few hot days the past week. Thin clothing and umbrellas in demand.

We find the oat crop very good in the corners of Dallas, Autauga and Chilton; most of Chilton, however, made a failure in this crop.

Mrs. M. A. Berrey, of Orrville, is on her usual Summer visit to relatives at this place.

"Julius'" article on the convention strikes a responsive approval through West Chilton.

Through the printer's mistake two of our last week's items were run together, by which an innocent old man was charged with being a candidate. The candidate alluded to was not named.

Mrs. W. W. Berrey, of Orrville, spent one week here at her old home.

Delegates to the county convention were appointed with instructions to oppose all nominations except for representative.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large, sixteen page, sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

Lumber! Lumber!!

Attention Farmers!

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products—corn and cotton—in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail. Orders will be courteously waited upon and satisfaction, will be guaranteed.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county at the election in August next, and respectfully solicit the support of my friends and fellow-citizens.

EDMOND H. LOWE, Jr.

We are authorized to announce

Dr. T. E. CALLIER

as a candidate for State Senator from the district composed of the counties of Chilton, Elmore and Coosa, subject to the action of the Democratic nominating convention.

We are authorized to announce

WILLIAM C. HESTER

as a candidate for the office of Tax Collector, of Chilton county, at the approaching August election.

We are authorized to announce

RILEY M. HONEYCUTT,

as a candidate for the office of Tax Collector of Chilton county, at the approaching August election.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Pay what you owe the printer.

A good newspaper belongs in every household.

Miss Essie Adams is on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Dr. Stewart.

Last Saturday, the 21st inst., was the longest day of the year.

Master David Bell Adams sends the VIEW a plate of very fine wild goose plums. We bow.

A new and fine Shoninger organ for sale. Will be sold very low. Apply early at this office.

Miss Mattie Thornton, of Birmingham, a charming young lady, is visiting relatives at this place.

The beat primary elections were not as well attended as they should have been, and a very light vote was polled.

Thanks to Master Walter Barnes for a lot of fine peaches. They were the very best we have seen this season.

The entertainment by the pupils of Clanton Academy to-morrow evening will be both entertaining and instructive.

Several communications of recomendation and inquiry having been received, the editor of the VIEW deems it proper to say that he is not a candidate for the Legislature.

J. P. Vanderveer, Sam Curry and Mr. West were the delegates elected at Providence box to the county convention. Jemison in the same beat also elected delegates. See "jottings."

Fletcher Maddox was arrested at Lomax, on Sunday last, by Sheriff Garner. He was brought to Clanton and jailed on a charge of assault. On Wednesday he was given a hearing and placed under a $100 bond to keep the peace.

Delegates to the District Senatorial Convention, which meets at Wetumpka next Tuesday, will leave Clanton Tuesday morning on the early train for Elmore Station in order to reach Wetumpka in time.

Remember the Exhibition to-morrow night. The small amount of twenty-five cents for grown persons and ten cents for children will be charged to defray the expenses necessary in public entertainments. A few reserved seats can be obtained at the drug store.

The delegates from Cullierville beat to the county convention are: T. E. Callier, W. L. Parnell, A. L. Stokes, Joseph Ratliff, J. E. Parnell. The beat committee in its report to the Secretary of the county committee-beat to say: "We also certify that it is our opinion from the expressions we hear of the people in this beat, that they favor the nomination of a candidate for the Legislature, but oppose the nomination of county officers."

Judge Jefferson Falkner filled his regular appointment at the Baptist Church on last Sunday. Next Sunday is the appointment of Rev. J. W. Cheves at the Methodist Church.

A new night operator arrived at the residence of Mr. W. J. Simpson on Tuesday. He is said to be a fine specimen of the "genus infantum," and a good performer with his lungs during the late small hours.

A pig-field "jamboree" between two prominent citizens was the excitement on Tuesday morning. No one doing their time was not called until both performers had exercised themselves to their own satisfaction.

A stage has been built and other temporary arrangements have been made in the county court house for holding the closing exercises of Clanton Academy to-morrow night. A very attractive programme will be given and everybody should attend.

The delegates that have been elected to represent the different beats in the county convention, are all prominent representative citizens, and we can rest assured that whatever the convention may do, will be well done, and there will be no grounds for complaint.

The delegates from Benson beat to the county convention are: Dr. J. S. Johnson, Sr., B. T. Rasberry, D. A. White and Jasper Giles. No instructions as to nominations. The sense of the meeting was taken on the Senatorial question and developed strength for Judge Falkner, 16 to 1.

The delegates elected on last Saturday to represent Clanton beat in the county Democratic Convention which meets next Saturday, are: W. H. Lawrence, J. H. Chandler, A. J. Marlar, John Callen, J. A. Rodgers, Wm. Mahan, Ben Scarbrough, M. DeJarnette, J. R. Jones, A. C. Oates, L. B. Wells, Anderson Baker, Sr. The delegation is uninstructed.

Basket Picnic.

Mr. W. A. Gullahorn requests us to announce that a basket picnic is to be held at Cooper's, July 4th. A fine band of music and public speaking will be among the attractions. Every body is invited to attend and bring a basket. Good order will be maintained by a special deputation of citizens.

Jemison Jottings.

Health of the community good. Farmers are very busy and crops are looking well.

Messrs. A. D. Robinson & Co. have got their new saw mill in operation.

Politics are receiving considerable attention just now. We hear the name of Mr. W. F. Claughton, of Verbena, favorably spoken of for the office of Tax Collector.

The election of beat delegates to the county convention was held on Saturday, and was very well attended. Messrs. J. P. Allen, I. Lawhorn, and J. J. Green, were elected delegates to the county convention, and Messrs. G. W. Deramus and W. E. Lowery were elected alternates. No instructions, but there is a general preference here for Mr. Johnson, of Clanton, for representative.

Verbena Views.

Capt. J. L. Tiernan and family, of Fort Barrancas, Pensacola; Mrs. Wisdom, of New Orleans, and Mr. J. D. Beale and family, of Montgomery, are stopping at the Clifton House for the Summer.

Mr. Wilhite, of Cullman, was sent to succeed Mr. McCord, as night operator, at this place. As it would place both young men nearer their homes, Mr. Wilhite of this place and Mr. Oscar Dhu, operator at Cullman, exchanged offices. Mr. Dhu is an excellent young man and we welcome him to our town.

The citizens of Verbena, are indebted to Mr. J. F. Thornton, for the excellent service he rendered in starting Brookstreet. It was sadly in need of repair but thanks to Mr. Thornton it is now in a passable condition.

Mr. J. B. Dell, of Benton, Ala., stopped over and spent Wednesday and Thursday in town, the guest of Prof. Acree. He was on his way home from Tuscaloosa where he has been attending school at the University. Mr. Dell was formerly connected with the school here as assistant to Prof. Acree, and while here formed many friends who will always give him a warm welcome.

Prof. Acree left last Monday for Auburn, where he has gone to attend the Commencement exercises of the A. & M. College.

Miss Virginia Powell, of Montgomery, and Miss Carrie Robeson, of Ft. Deposit, are spending a few weeks at the Clifton House.

At the last meeting last Saturday Messrs. B. B. Baldwin, A. J. Brooks, W. N. Jones, W. B. Crook and Joel Deanis, Sr., were elected delegates to the county convention.

Mr. Haskell, the blind preacher, paid our village a visit last Friday and preached in the Baptist church at night. He has been blind from infancy and reads the Bible by means of raised letters. He is a very good preacher and was listened to by a large and attentive congregation.

Verbena continues to improve. Mr. F. A. Gulledge is going to tear away his old store and build a much larger one, two stories high, in its place. He will occupy the Mullens store house while his is being built.

Mr. Wm. Thornton, of Montgomery, has accepted the position of assistant book keeper at the Pratt saw mill. Mr. Thornton is a nice young gentleman and we hope he may like up here well enough to make it his permanent home.

Mrs. S. T. Brittle, who for some time has been quite ill, we are glad to note is much better.

MAX.

Cullierville Doin.

The pleasant excitement of the 18th has left us feeling rather lonely, especially as some of our brightest associates have gone visiting. Just here let me add that such a persevering teacher as Rev. Mr. Huckabee, who, with his two bright little boys walked five miles to and from the school house daily, certainly does deserve the esteem of his pupils and patrons as well as does also his assistant, Miss Loula King. It is probable that they will resume their school in September, and if they do, their patronage will be increased.

Mrs. Hare will open a monthly school during the vacation for the benefit of her grand children.

Mrs. T. E. Callier, with her son, Mr. Johnnie, have gone to Florida on a visit.

Miss Lizzie King, who is visiting her aunt, near Burnsville, made a flying visit home, to attend the closing exercises of our school, of which she was a former student.

Cannot Chilton county have a Sunday school convention as well as other counties. Let us try it and see! Look around you and see the large number of children who are not in Sunday school. Let us go to work, and not cease until every child around that is large enough to attend, belongs to the Sabbath school. We must work! Our Superintendent comes four miles every Sabbath to school, and evinces much earnestness.

Crops are flourishing, so is grass. The health of our community must be good, as our Dr. does not ride so much now.

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

THE GREAT DOG SHOW.

GRAY, BLANCHE AND SWEETHEART'S TOOTHSOME FOR THE ADMIRATION OF THE PUBLIC.

Society and Field Sports have a Jolly Week of It—Dogs and their Points.

[For the New York Sun.]

The world of society and field sports has been kept busy in New York with attendance at the dog show, and if the walls of the much-cried Madison Square Garden could have spoken they would have expressed relief over the change from the horrors of the walking-match. With its eighth annual Bench Show the Westminster Kennel Club have capped the climax of its previous successes. The number of dogs on the bench, coming not only from all parts of the United States, but from Canada and England, proves the popularity of the Club, while the daily attendance of visitors is the strongest evidence that the Bench Show has become as much an established sporting feature for New York society as the coaching parade, the opening of Jerome Park and kindred affairs.

It is singular how the fashion in dogs changes. Some years ago small dogs were all the rage, and among them the pug who looks like a concentrated mastiff, reigned supreme. The Italian greyhound and the silk-haired spaniel ranked high in estimation. Now, however, large dogs are at the head of affairs, and among these mastiffs have acquired an ascendancy undreamt of even a year ago. No would-be young swell, no young lady aspiring to have a complete fashionable out-of-door make-up can afford to walk the streets in any other way than at the end of a chain drawn taut by a huge, strapping brute of this order. At the show there are fifteen mastiff dogs, eleven bitches and fourteen puppies. Among the lot are three champion dogs and two bitches. This is certainly a good showing. The winner in the champion dog class, Nevison, owned by Mr. Mason, of Yorkshire, England, is a splendid animal. He is a fawn with black points, 4½ years old, and in the course of his wanderings has picked up no less than 38 prizes, not including specials.

The St. Bernards hold their own, compared with previous shows, as also do the Newfoundlands. The Newfoundlands, however, have lost, and unless there should be a revival in their favor, this noble breed, which has given rise to so much sentimentality in dog literature and art, will soon be as rare as piebald horses. Greyhounds, too, have fallen off, perhaps not in number, but certainly in quality. This is to be deplored, for although the racer of the canine world may not be an affectionate house dog, or even an attractive watcher, his looks alone ought to bring him many admirers. Practically, a new feature is furnished at the show by the deerhounds. Last year there was but one, while this week there were eighteen. They are noble specimens of the canine race, combining the graceful lines of the greyhound with the size and substance of the bloodhound, and their bristley coats give them an air of rugged strength and determination wonderfully picturesque. One of the prettiest sights at the show was furnished by Mrs. Geo. Shephard Rages' Dunrobin. He is a light, brindle, 3-years old. His box was hung with dark-green Scotch plaids, forming a sombre background, which made the silvery tips of his hair fairly glisten. He was not in the first flight of prize winners, but as he lay extended in his box, with his head erect and his eye gazing clearly and unflinchingly at the strange sights about him, he would have served as a splendid model for an artist.

Pointers and setters of all varieties were exceedingly well represented, and so high was the quality throughout that in many of the classes the judges had considerable difficulty in arriving at a decision. As a result, the feeling of rivalry between the owners of different dogs ran very high, and bets were freely made. When the judges awarded the blue ribbon to Mr. Mason's champion pointer, Meteor, against Mr. Mason's Beaufort, $5,000 changed hands. Pointers seem to have had more attention paid to them by breeders during the last year than setters, and among the latter class, the English variety bids fair to crowd out the black-and-tans and Irish. Spanish, both field and water, seem on the verge of losing their hold on the public fancy, for they are neither numerously nor well represented. Fox-hounds are also poorly represented at the show. The reason of this is that the local hunts, who have spared neither labor nor money on improving this breed, have been using their packs up to a week or two ago, and thus, while the hounds may be fit as fiddles for a run, they are in no condition for the bench.

Beagles held their own as compared with former years, but they have made no progress; the same may be said of the dachshunds. For terriers, however, there improved greatly, both quantitatively and qualitatively. There were any number of perfect specimens at the show. The fox terrier is a beautiful little animal and the most all-around model small dog extant. It is pleasant to see his merits recognized. Collies have also received great attention by breeders during the past year, and bid fair to supplant St. Bernard's in fashionable estimation before another Bench Show comes around. Bull-dogs and bull terriers have fallen off somewhat, particularly the latter. The fox terrier has to a great extent monopolized the place once occupied by his kinsman in the bulldog family.

As regards the toy terriers, quality is well represented, but the quantity has fallen off. Ladies, whom the principal owners of dogs of this class seem to have grown afraid to trust their pets to the discipline of the bench for a week, as exposure of some kind is always sure to result, the proposed reversal during a few days absence from home ensues.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE PRESS.

A RECENTLY exchange asks: "What is the mission of the Lutheran Journal?" Its opinion, possibly, is the Philadelphia Call, is the same as the mission of the religious paper: to make money for its proprietor.

THE "Easy Chair" in Harper's Magazine describes an ideal newspaper. It pleases "son and daughter as well as father and mother;" it is filled with "airy and general gossip" without pander, and touches "all the events of the day as the talk of the average household touches them, but governed and restrained by a skill which will permit no mischief."

NOTWITHSTANDING the severe measures of repression adopted with regard to the press in Russia, newspapers apparently circulate pretty freely in St. Petersburg. The number of newsvendors in that city, says the Novoe Vremya, is 520, and in the public thoroughfares alone about 10,000 copies of newspapers are sold daily.

THE surprising fact has occurred to some one that the most popular writer in the world—Shakespeare—went to the grave without seeing his works in print. Thus he escaped having recorder against him on high, the sin of swearing at typographical errors, remarks the Norristown Herald.

CHEVALIER WIKOFF, who recently died at Brighton, was a Spanish Knight, although born in this country. He started the Republic in opposition to the New York Herald. He engaged and run a special engine to convey the President's message from Washington to New York at one time.

THE McGregor Plaindealer describes the duties of the country editor as follows: "Being proprietor, editor-in-chief, local editor, city editor, agricultural editor, personal editor, political editor, puzzle editor, fighting editor, paragrapher, proof-reader, foreman, compositor, job printer, book-keeper, collector, circulator, solicitor, manager, pressman, to make bills, make orders, pay bills, pay printers, pay taxes, pay house and office rent, pay insurance premiums, buy clothes, food and shoes for himself, wife and baby, be bruiser-general, roustabout, devil and also do chores."

WASHINGTON IRVING will contribute an article to the June Century on the "Use and Abuse of Parties." Dr. Gladden holds that parties are necessary to all constitutional governments being based on the progressive and conservative tendencies of human nature. While claiming that the "death of principles and the strife for patronage are characteristic facts of our recent political life," he comes to the conclusion that—at least outside the cities—more of good can be accomplished by joining one party or another, working easily for its success, and bolting bad nominations.

Mankind Not "Lost."

Mr. Beecher, in his Sunday sermon, disagreed with the theologians in interpretation, and gave his hearers the following notes:

"Men have to break through the Church theology to get at the real beauty and attractiveness of the Divine nature."

"What we call health in the body is a fair analogical interpretation of what we call religion. Religion is to the soul what the organs of a man are to the body."

"The phrase which is used so continually in the pulpit and out of it—that mankind are lost—is an inappropriate phrase. It is true that all mankind have been lost in the sense in which the word is used in the Bible, but the word 'lost,' as used in theology, is absolutely different from the word 'lost,' as used in the New Testament and in the Old Testament."

"Mankind is never spoken of in the Scripture as having been lost on account of Adam's sin, or any other fungus on theology."

"The term 'lost' when applied to men is a shepherd's term. It means wandering; one that is out of the way; never, not once, does it carry the idea of a corrupt nature in the theological sense of that term; still less that 'lost in Adam's fall' is taught in the Scripture."

"Conversion is the beginning, under inspiration, teaching and example, of the reconstruction of a man's voluntary life; it is the beginning of rebuilding of character and conduct on the basis of love."

"Religion means the right use of every part of a man's body and soul."

"The church is not an assembly of saints. While it is a school that has all manner of instruments that are designed to help men, the more being in the church does not save men."

"May every one of you give thanks, even in your dying hour, that it pleased God to bring you into the Shepherd's house. May not one of you regret in any hour or anywhere that you took this step, consonant with nature, consonant with experience, consonant with philosophy, consonant with religion, that brings you into harmony with God, that as His scholars you may learn the way of righteousness."

He Wanted to be Counted.

A man of unknown nationality walked into the Superior Court clerk's office with a column and measured itself. His coat was threadbare and his trousers were too short for him. Removing his battered hat he inquired mildly for the civilization clerk.

"The what?" asked the officer addressed.

"The civilization clerk," said the column man, turning toward the naturalization desk. "I want to be civilized. You see, I have been a long time in this country and never have been civilized, and my friends told me to come here."

"Why, you want to be naturalized!"

"Well, it is the same thing, anyhow," said the solemn man, and the naturalization went somewhat hard in that country [illegible] so I said maybe to [illegible]

A TERROR TO FOREIGN INVADERS.

Successful Test of the New Dynamite Gun Described by an Artillery Expert.

The Secretary of War has detailed Lieutenant R. L. Zalinsky, of the Fifth artillery, to superintend the experiments that are daily being made at Fort Hamilton with the new dynamite gun. Lieut. Zalinsky said to a reporter: "I came here thinking that it was merely another 'crank' invention, but experience has taught me that it is destined to revolutionize modern warfare. It will really do all that is claimed for it. It will throw a dynamite cartridge of from 100 to 125 pounds accurately and without exploding it from a mile to a mile and a half with sufficient force to penetrate an iron armor four inches thick, and, moreover, all the remaining 'work' that is stored in the projectile at the time it strikes the enemy's vessel is equivalent to so much tamping, thus insuring a blow at great force against the hull of the vessel."

"In my opinion the force is sufficient to blow up the largest and heaviest vessel that is now afloat. It has been proved that a hundred pounds of dynamite exploded three feet under the water will destroy a first class man-of-war lying seventeen feet off. It has also been proved repeatedly that dynamite has a downward tendency when it explodes—that is, unlike gunpowder, it shatters all beneath it as well as everything above it, and I therefore claim that when a hundred pounds of dynamite are thrown, say on the Thunderer, the dynamite will either blow the vessel to pieces or so badly shatter it that it will keep out of our way for some time to come.

"A torpedo may be stopped in its course and rendered useless by the enemy's booms or nettings, whereas nothing can prevent this projectile from flying through the air. Moreover, a torpedo is useless after being once used, whereas this gun can be reloaded and refired in one minute. Then, again, think of the great difference in cost between the two. A torpedo costs $150, and, as I have said, can be used only once, while a projectile cost from this gun, which I believe will be found more deadly in its effects, will certainly not cost over $10. And lastly, a great merit I find in it is its comparative lightness and consequent easiness of locomotion. An eight inch powder rifle weighs, for instance, ten tons, while this gun weighs scarcely two and a half. Altogether, I think it one of the greatest of modern inventions."

Earthquakes in Great Britain.

Earthquake shocks of various degrees of intensity have frequently been felt in England and other parts of the United Kingdom. In 1089 one prevailed throughout England, in 1142 one was felt severely at Lincoln, and in 1274 a shock destroyed the town of Glastonbury and was felt in all parts of England. On November 14, 1318, was experienced the most violent shock ever known in England. Parts of St. Paul's Cathedral and of the Temple were thrown down on April 6, 1580. There was a bad shock at Dublin on October 17, 1690, and a slight shock at London on February 19, 1750. The northwest of England was shaken on November 9, 1852, and Cornwall, slightly, on October 21, 1859, and again on January 18, 1860. Throughout the central, west and northwestern parts of England a shock was felt in the early morning of October 6, 1863. Bath, Swansea and other places in the southwest of England and the south of Wales suffered slightly on October 30, 1868. Houses were shaken so as to break windows and crockery in the northwest of England on the evening of March 17, 1871, and on March 23, five days later, another shock was faintly felt in Yorkshire. There were slight shocks at Inverary and other places in the west of Scotland on Nov. 28, 1880. Besides these, the great Lisbon earthquake of November 1, 1755, and other violent seismic disturbances at other points, have been felt in the British Isles.

Rescued Mariners.

The Navy department is informed that the Essex succeeded in rescuing the crew of the American schooner wrecked on Marshall Islands.

The wrecked ship was a new vessel named the Ranier, and was bound from Philadelphia for Hiogo, Japan, loaded with refined petroleum in cases. On January 2 the Ranier went ashore on Catherine's Island, one of the Marshall group, which are situated in latitude 7 degrees north and longitude 173 degrees east. The captain and his daughter and twenty-five others reached the shore. The mate and four men started in the long boat for some point to report the disaster and secure assistance. They were picked up when eleven days out near Nolan, by the English bark Caterline and landed at Saigon. The mate did not think the others would leave the island where wrecked, but would there await assistance. The Essex, of the Asiatic fleet, was sent in search of the shipwrecked crew and has succeeded in her mission.

WESTERN ROAD AGENTS.

THE ATTACK OF PITTSBURGH WHITE, ESQ., OF THE UNION PACIFIC.

Shown as Desperate Cowards—Graphic Account by Mason Rayville, Assistant Surgeon in Pursuit.

Major Whipple, paymaster U. S. A., who was attacked by road agents and who has reached the garrison at Fort Buford says: "We left Glendive, Montana, at 9 o'clock in the morning. Our party was composed of myself, my clerk, Mr. Such, and Sergeant Conrad, who was in command of my escort, which was made up of three men with two drivers. Mr. Such and I occupied the rear seat of the wagon-like ambulance, Sergeant Conrad and the driver were on the front seat, while the others rode in the wagon immediately behind. Contrary to my usual caution I had placed my money, $20,000, in the ambulance.

"About 2:30 p. m., as we were driving quietly up through a deep ravine road, about four miles this side of Barnes's ranch, I heard rapid firing. I looked out and saw Sergeant Conrad dying. At the left was a party of masked men, seven in number, who had opened a murderous fire upon us without a word of warning. Three of the seven men were firing directly into our ambulance. The fire was returned by the Sergeant in the bravest and most gallant manner. At an early stage of the action, however, he received two mortal wounds, but continued to fire, until the loss of blood so weakened him that he could no longer hold his rifle.

"About this time the driver received a scalp wound and fell down from his wagon. Then Mr. Such and I jumped out. One of the mules was wounded and the team, becoming frightened, ran away with the ambulance, which contained the lieutenant and my money. Mr. Such and I were kept under a heavy fire, and our escape was miraculous. Fearing that the highwaymen would capture the ambulance, I immediately started in pursuit of it. I was successful in overtaking the mules, and climbed into the ambulance, and the sergeant died in my arms about twenty minutes after being shot. I reached Scott's ranch, about eight miles from the scene of the murderous attack, safely.

"In the meantime Mr. Such, and the ambulance driver were covered by the rifles of the highwaymen and were forced to return to the escort wagon. One of the men was badly wounded in the arm while raising his carbine for a second shot. The villains began to search the escort, keeping the men and Mr. Such covered. Their search was fruitless. They seemed disappointed, and began to search the men and Mr. Such. They found a little tobacco on one of the men, and from Mr. Such they took about $20 and a watch, which they returned.

"After destroying the carbines they ordered the driver to his seat and allowed the party to go on. Upon my arrival at Scott's I sent my courier to Fort Buford for a surgeon and additional escort, as we fully anticipated an attack before the night. Upon receipt of the intelligence Gen. Whistler ordered Major Bell, of the 5th Cavalry, to start with his troops. He made a forced night march and reached us at four o'clock in the morning, greatly to our relief, we having been on guard forty-six hours. Major Bell has instructions to do everything in his power to capture the band. He has taken with him three Indian scouts and an interpreter. Sergeant Aquilla Conrad leaves a family at Miles City, Montana. He was a gallant officer. He served under Custer in the Indian Territory, and received a medal of honor for gallant service in the West Mountain engagement against Crazy Horse.

The Chicago Convention.

Both the Republican and Democratic parties will hold their national conventions for the nomination of the next President in Chicago. The large Exposition building, which has facilities for seating 7,000 people, has been selected for the scene of war. It is a fact well worth noting that this year, for the first time since 1852, the national conventions of the two great political parties meet in the same city. In 1860 the conventions were held in Baltimore, and Scott and Pierce were nominated by their respective parties. In 1844 Polk and Clay were also nominated in that city. At Cincinnati, in 1856, the Democrats nominated Buchanan. That party held their convention in 1856 at Charleston, when Douglas was nominated, and this nomination caused so much dissatisfaction in the ranks of the Democracy that there was a split, and the Bourbon wing went to Baltimore, and nominated Breckenridge. The other Democratic conventions and nominations were as follows: McClellan was nominated at Chicago in 1864; Seymour at New York in 1868; Greeley, at Baltimore, in 1872; Tilden, at St. Louis in 1876; and Hancock, at Cincinnati, in 1880. The Whigs held their first national convention at Harrisburg in 1839, when Harrison was nominated for the campaign of 1840. In 1844, Clay was nominated at Baltimore; in 1848, Taylor, at Philadelphia, and in 1852, Scott, at Baltimore. The first national convention of the Republican party was held at Philadelphia in 1856, when Fremont was nominated. The Americans in the same year, at New York, nominated Fillmore. After this the Republican party gained strength, and in 1860 and 1864 they held their conventions at Chicago, and nominated Lincoln. In 1868 Grant was nominated at Chicago, and in 1872 he was renominated at Philadelphia. In 1876 the convention was held at Cincinnati, when Hayes was nominated, and in 1880 at Chicago, when Garfield was put forward as a candidate.—Exchange.

A House for Sale.

A citizen in the western part of the city who has a house for sale says that he has learned more of human nature in the last three months than during all his life before. Nine people out of ten who come to look at his $10,000 house haven't $10 to buy it with. The same proportion are deliberate liars. Nineteen out twenty want every room changed about. Ten out of twelve go all through the house and then object to the street. Not one single woman out of the scores who have called at the house had any other idea than to satisfy a temporary curiosity. One woman had every room measured to see if her carpets would fit and and then suddenly discovered that the house was a whole block from the street cars. Another sat for two hours and planned how she could fix every room, and then left the place in a huff because there wasn't a Methodist Church on the next corner. A third was about to leave $200 to bind the bargain until the next day, when it suddenly occurred to her that her sister out in Pontiac might not like the location. Out of sixty or seventy men who have called every single one liked the location, thought the poperty cheap, and would return next day. The citizen finally got tired of such conduct, and now when one calls he asks:

"Do you wish to look at the house or the furniture?"

"Oh, the house, of course."

"Well, this house stands on the north side of the street. It is on block 14, lot 49. The house is of wood. It is forty rods to a church and eighty to a schoolhouse. Street cars do not pass the door. Circus processions never come this way. Now, then, have you any idea of buying?"

"Certainly. We must move next week."

"Very well. Please deposit $2 for my trouble of showing you over."

"Two dollars! I'd like to see myself! Why, your house is the poorest one for sale in Detroit, and I'd not live in it rent free!"

"But you came here to buy!"

"No, I didn't. I happened to be passing, saw your sign, and thought I might as well tramp over your premises so to go down town. Good morning, sir. You'd better insure your house and set fire to it!"—Detroit Free Press.

A HEROIC NEGRO.

He Gratitude He Purified His Life.

[From the Eufaula, Ala., Times.]

The circumstances of one most heroic and romantic deed connected with the late Everingham disaster was related to us. After the boat had been banked and a roster of the crew was called, Assistant Pilot Wingate did not answer.

"Where is Wingate?" some one shouted.

"Asleep, in his berth," was the answer.

By this time the supports of the upper deck were being eaten rapidly away, and the flames circled round and round over the hurricane deck, licking the glass of the state room doors, to disappear now and anon through the black curls of dense and stifling smoke, then again to streak the black sky like the livid pulse of destruction that it was, and then to soar away and vanish into the oblivion of heat to seek the invisible storm of the air.

It was in the midst of this pantomime of horror that a black form was seen rushing toward Wingate's berth and impending death. A surge, a crash and door gave way, and Wingate and his rescuer, through rays left free by Providence, escaped in safety to the shore. This negro, on hearing that Pilot Wingate was in his state room, banished all fear of his own safety to rescue him, which was done in return for the saving of his own life by Wingate when the "Wylly" went to pieces against the Fort Gaines bridge last April. He was going under for the third time when Wingate snatched him from his grave.

This was gratitude, and a heroism equalled by no instance in the calendar of the records of many and many a day, and deserves a monument in marble.

BENJAMIN WEST used to say "I like from my mother's milk like a painter." We infer that a great many sign painters, who turn out such signs as this: "John H. Smith, dealer in Dry Good's, and Notion's," were never fanned by their mothers.—Norristown Herald.

Our Best Families.

I have been troubled for over six years with a severe kidney complaint, also a weakness of the urinary organs, with its attendant troubles. My water needed constant attention, some days as many as twenty times, with severe pains in the bladder, as well as in the back and loins. At times I passed a limited quantity of urine, highly colored with unnatural heat and sediment; frequently evacuations would be very painful. I concluded that I must do something for it, fearing that more serious trouble would follow. I went to the druggist and was recommended to use Hunt's Remedy, as it had been used with wonderful success in several severe cases of dropsy and kidney and bladder affections here in Bangor. I concluded to try it, and before I had used one bottle found it was helping me beyond my expectations. My water became more natural, less color and sediment, the pains in back and that heavy feeling gone, with a general toning up of the system; and I continued to use it until I used six bottles, and it has completely cured me.

Others of my family have used Hunt's Remedy with equally as good success, and we do not hesitate to recommend it far and near, believing it a duty as well as a pleasure to recommend so good a medicine as Hunt's Remedy. You are at liberty to give my testimony to the public.

Lost Faith in Physicians.

There are innumerable instances where cures have been effected by Scovill's Sarsaparilla, or Blood and Liver Syrup, for all disease of the blood, when they had been given over by their physicians. It is one of the best remedies ever offered to the public, and as it is prepared with the greatest care, as a specific for certain diseases, it is no wonder that it should be more effectual than hastily written and carelessly prepared prescriptions. Take this medicine for all disorders arising from impure blood. It is indorsed by leading professional men.

A PLEASANT STORY.

'Twas in ye pleasant olden time;
Oh, many years ago,
When husking bees and singing schools
Were all the fun, you know.

The singing school in Tarrytown—
A quaint old town in Maine—
Was wisely taught and grandly led
By a young man named Paine.

A gallant gentleman was Paine,
Who liked the lasses well;
But best he liked Miss Patience White,
As all his school could tell.

One night the singing school had met;
Young Paine, all carelessly,
Had turned the leaves and said, "Well sing
On page one-seventy."

"See gentle patience smiles on pain."
On Paine they all then smiled,
But not so gently as they might;
And he, confused and wild,

Searched quickly for another piece,
As quickly gave it out;
The merriment, suppressed before,
Rose now into a shout.

These were the words that met his eyes
(He sank down with a groan),
"Oh, give me grief for other's woes,
And patience for my own!"

SURF-STATION NO. 9.

BY REV. EDWARD A. RAND.

There were two persons sitting on the doorstep of a station of the life-saving service. One was Will Plympton and the other liked to write down his name and calling as "Sam Walker, Surfman, Station 9." They were looking across the white, chilly sands to the sea, that under the tearing, exasperating strokes of the wind hourly grew more and more violent. The clouds had a scowling look. It was not a disturbed sky simply, angry here and there, but everywhere its face was one of settled, ugly, morose-ness.

"Mischief brewin'," said Sam.

"Yes; the wind has been busy at something for the past twenty-four hours," replied Will.

"How white and ugly that surf is! Looks to me as if it was all full of sharks' teeth, white and hard."

"Somebody will feel them when the storm breaks—at any rate, before it is over."

"Yes; I s'pose the vessel is on the water that has been quietly movin' on to meet its doom in this storm, and didn't know it more than you and I know the future."

All this time sea and sky had been growing blacker.

Keeper Joel Barney, the official head of the crew at Station 9, stepped out of the station, and the conversation was interrupted. When Sam and Will were alone again, Sam said:

"That sea and me feel alike, I guess."

"Why?"

"Oh, I am not at all easy."

Here Sam's face seemed to darken like the sky.

"What are you thinking of?"

"I'm thinkin' of somebody that wronged me once. That was in old England. We were both boatmen and there was an extra chance at work we both wanted, and Payne Chesley set on foot some stories that lost me my old place and kept me out of a better one. Lies! lies!" said Sam, vehemently—"all of them."

"Well, didn't people see that?"

"Yes, but too late to help me. If it had been the truth, it couldn't for the time have hurt me more."

"What's false will wash off like mud. It's only what is true that sticks in and stays and hurts."

But Sam was not disposed to dwell on this side of the subject. He arose, strode off grumbling, and sat down in the station doorway.

"What makes me think of Payne Chesley, I don't know. I feel ugly as that sea looks, and I don't know but I could put Payne Chesley under the water if I had him. Seems to me 'twould be just sweet to do that. But that isn't the thing for an old chap like me," he said, meditatively. "We've got to swallor those things."

Still his face grew sea and sky.

A very fishy odor of old Java, fried potatoes and hot meat now came from the station kitchen, and the crew gathered for supper.

"Storm broke," said Keeper Barney, amid the rattling dishes; "I see the rain on the window."

Just then Silas Foster came in from the beach and his dripping "sou'wester" told the story of the arrival of the rain.

"A bad night," said Foster, "if a vessel gits on Howlin' Point."

But no vessel was destined was to do that fatal thing.

The men on duty patrolled the beach as the regulations required. Four times between sunset and sunrise they tramped from two to four miles each side of the station. Each patrolman carried his Coston signals, which could be lighted at once, burning with a red flame, and warning of any vessel that might be discovered sailing too near the shore, or announcing to any vessel in distress that help was near. But though the eyes watched and quick ears listened, there was no sign of vessels in danger or distress. There was only that incessant, dreary thunder in the darkness, that awful roar of an invisible ocean which manifested itself in an exhaustless force of cold and about the feet of the guard men venturing too near the edge of the sea.

The morning lighted up a confused mass of white, struggling billows under black, heavy masses of storm cloud that swept the sea with pitiless discharges of rain. The men at the station were at breakfast, when Arnold Rankin rushed in shouting:

"There's a wreck off here!"

"Boom—m—m!" came the report of a gun from the sea.

"That's Arnold's voucher," cried Keeper Barney, springing from his seat and upsetting the chair in his eagerness. "Our surfboat cannot live in that sea. Open the boat room doors. Man the beach wagon, boys."

Out upon the sands the cart was quickly rushed, and a wreck gun, and other apparatus taken from it. The gun was placed in position, and a shot carrying with it a light, strong line sent over the wreck.

"They've got it!" said Sam Walker, looking toward the vessel, around which boiled the white surf. "They have made it fast!"

"Take two half hitches with the shot line round that whip," shouted the keeper, soon signaling to the wreck to haul on board.

The "whip" was a larger line doubled through a single pulley-block, and it was patiently hauled on board, followed by a hawser. These two lines were made fast, the hawser being secured above the "whip" or endless line.

"Send the life-car, boys," said Keeper Barney. "Quick!"

Every moment the storm seemed to be gathering more force, as if to resist the brave men in their work of rescue. More heavily rolled the waves upon the shore; the wind charged up and down the beach, and roughly the rain splashed the faces of the surfmen. And yet how the crew worked, springing from duty to duty and cheering heartily when they saw the life-car riding along the hawser and hauled out by means of the whip!

"They've loaded her up," was the news that Sam's keen eyes enabled him to communicate. "Four men have got into her."

"Haul ashore," shouted the keeper; and safely across that turbulent sweep of surf came the life-car. The hatch was removed, and four men sprang upon the beach.

"Haul out!" was the keeper's ready command, and back to the wreck went the car.

"It's a steamer, the men say,' was Arnold Rankin's announcement to his mates. "She's in a bad fix and will break up afore night, they think."

Again and again went the life-car on its journey of mercy to the wreck. At last arrived those who said:

"Nobody else on board."

"Look here!" exclaimed one of the steamer's crew, coming from the station, where the rescued men had found shelter; "there was one sick man. Has he come? He is not at the station."

The keeper looked around upon his little circle of helpers.

"Boys," he said, "there's a sick man aboard. Are you sure, though, he did not come?" he asked, suddenly turning to his informant.

"Sure as I am here. Payne Chesley is not at the station, and he is not on the beach."

"Payne Chesley!"

Will Plympton heard the name, and instantly looked at Sam's face. He saw Sam's startled, intent gaze, and then Sam said to the keeper:

"Somebody must go and get him. I'll volunteer."

"I'll go! I'll go!" said several.

"Your ropes out there are weak," said one of the steamer's crew; "there has been so much strain on 'em. One will be enough to go in that car; send your strongest man. No easy thing bringing a sick man to it. Whew! If he ain't up! And he signals, too! I'd go if I wasn't bruised so."

Upon that wreck the sharper eyes of the company could make out the form of a man waving, apparently, waving a light as if in the agony of that horrible misery—despair.

"I'm the strongest," said Sam Walker, proudly, and in proof he raised his heavy, muscular arm.

Everybody knew it was so Sam asserted. Into the car he went and the hatch was closed after him. Keenly every eye watched the passage of the car to the steamer.

"I hope the ropes will hold," muttered the keeper, nothing of it the face of the driving storm.

"Hurrah! He's there!" shouted the men.

There was a scream of anxious wailing.

"Haul ashore!" shouted the keeper. "Keep—it, boys!"

[illegible] when suddenly the ropes gave way and over to the surf helplessly rolled the car.

"Some o'ye, boys. Look alive and make out as far as you can," shouted the keeper.

And, as standing on the last imagery, grasping ropes, they watched from it the head with the "sharker teeth" in the surf had disappeared.

"Hurrah for Sam Walker!" was the shout, as if Keeper Barney to his men.

But Sam Walker did not need the plaudits offered by that ovation. He made this confession to Will Plympton:

"I thought it would be sweet to put Payne Chesley under the water, but I tell you, Will, it was a good deal sweeter to pull him out."

A TRAGEDY RECALLED.

DEATH OF GEO. W. CONKLING, THE SLAYER OF W. H. HAVERSTICK.

The Scene in the "Paris" Flat—An Erring Woman's Suicide—A Wronged Husband's Forgiveness.

[From the N. Y. Telegram.]

The news received from San Francisco of the death there of George W. Conkling recalls the terrible tragedy of March, 1883, which took place at the "Paris" Flat, No. 341 West Twenty-third street; With Conkling's death the three principal figures of the tragedy have passed away. Conkling died of consumption. his erring sister, Mrs. Uhler, committed suicide by taking morphine; the man who led her from the path of duty, Wilbur H. Haverstick, died at the hands of her brother; and the only person connected with the tragedy left is her husband, J. Clement Uhler, a resident of New Jersey.

STORY OF THE TRAGEDY.

Mr. Uhler lived in San Francisco, Cal., and did business as a mining broker. In 1871 he met Emma H. Conkling, a beautiful girl, fell in love with and married her. As a business man he was moderately successful, and when the tide of mining speculation set back eastward he traveled with it. So, too, did Wilbur H. Haverstick. He was also a mining broker in San Francisco, and though only thirty-two years of age he had achieved a marked success in his business. Uhler and his wife came to New York about three years ago, and Haverstick came about the same time. Both became members of the New York Mining Stock Exchange. Haverstick was one of the original members of the American Mining Stock Exchange, and was the first to leave that for the New York Exchange. Uhler and Haverstick became partners in business, and had their office at No. 18 Wall street, under the firm name of J. C. Uhler & Co. Haverstick became a frequent visitor at Uhler's home, at No. 913 Seventh avenue, where he dwelt with his wife and two children.

THE SEPARATION.

Mrs. Uhler's estrangement from her husband followed and the matter reached publicity through a suit which Uhler brought against Haverstick. This was about two years ago. On her side, Mrs. Uhler brought a suit against her husband for having refused her access to her former home. Both these suits were pending when a pistol in the hands of George Conkling entered a nolle pros. Uhler and Haverstick separated in business. Haverstick had a brother and a mother living in San Francisco. The report of this social scandal of course reached the ears of Mrs. Conkling, the mother of Mrs. Uhler, in San Francisco, and it was at her solicitation that Conkling, her son, came on here from Nevada in the latter part of February, 1883, to do what he could to save the family honor and spare the family pride.

A BROTHER'S SEARCH.

Conkling, who was a government surveyor, and until shortly before the shooting engaged in making field notes of the State of Nevada, left his headquarters at Reno early in February, 1883, and came to New York city on the 28th of that month, with the avowed intention of discovering his missing and erring sister. He finally learned that she was living in the "Paris." He endeavored to effect a reconciliation between her and her husband, but after days of parleying the young woman upset all negotiations by declaring that as she had been untrue to Uhler she would never live with him again. She, however, consented to abandon her paramour and return with her brother to his home in the West. She agreed to meet her brother on the night of the shooting. He came to the "Paris" flat for her and met Haverstick, who knew nothing of the arrangement. The young surveyor told him, when Haverstick flew into a rage and, seizing a china statuette, threw it at Conkling. The latter thereupon drew a revolver and shot Haverstick, who died shortly after.

Conkling was arrested, acquitted by a Coroner's jury, but afterward was placed under bonds for trial. The indictment against him was dismissed in February last. With his sister, he soon after left for Reno, Nevada. The next heard of her was on the morning of Feb. 14 last, when she was taken in a dying condition from the house of a woman named Adams, but known as "The Water Queen," at 30 West Twenty-ninth street. She was taken to the New York Hospital, where she died in a few hours. She had left her brother and friends in the West, and going to New York city, entered upon a life of dissipation. Often to the women with whom she associated she expressed her abhorrence of her brother for killing the man she loved. She was arrested several times for disorderly conduct but never punished. She became very poor and on the night of February 28 took morphine with suicidal intent. Her body was saved from a pauper's burial by her husband, who had it interred in a New Jersey Cemetery.

"I mean," is the way the cowboy begins his conversation.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

WORDS OF WISDOM FROM PARADISE HALL.

The President Disbands an Agitator and Sees Him Again.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

By actual count there were forty-three members of the club coughing and sneezing at the moment the triangle sounded, and it was not until four minutes after the echoes died away that the President arose from behind his desk and said:

"If Socrates Spikeroot am in de hall dis evenin' I would like to see him out heah in front of de desk."

Socrates had just crowded himself in between the stove and the wood-box, calculating to get warmth enough to last him until the next meeting, and he didn't look over-pleased at being disturbed. When he had limped along to the desk, one hand in his pocket and the other digging into his wool, Brother Gardner continued:

"How long have you bin a member of dis club?"

"'Bout six months, sah."

"Um! It has been 'bout three months since I fust had my eyes on you, an' to-night you seber your connexun wid dis club. Misser Spikeroot, it was under stood when you jined dis club dat you was a barber. Has you barbed anybody or anythin' since dat date?"

"I—I—no, sah."

"On de contrary, you has loafed aroun saloons an' policy shops an' queer places, an' no man has known you to do an honest day's work. We doan' hanker arter sich members as you. When a poo' man kin lib widout labor people have a right to be suspishus of him. Brudder Giveadam Jones, you will escort dis pusson to de doah. If, when he gits dar', he should utter any remark derogatory to de character of de Lime-Kiln Club, you needn't put de Bogardus kicker at work. Let him go in peace. What he kin say won't hurt us, an' you might kick too hard an' break a leg."

After the late deceased had been shown out and order restored, the President said:

"Gem'len, if dar am any mo' agitators in de hall I want 'em to listen closely. Socrates Spikeroot used to be a hard-workin' man. All to once he got de ideah dat capital was oppressin' labor. He quit airnin' $12 per week bekase he didn't want to be oppressed. In a month he became a dead-beat. While it am a serious offence fur capitalists to oppress labor, it am all right for a kicker to go aroun' borrowin' money, runnin' in debt, an' stealin' his wood. A few weeks ago Mister Spikeroot got lonesome, an' began to agitate. He went to var'us laborin' men an' convinced 'em dat de man who airns his $12 or $14 per week orter turn out and mob de capitalists who furnish him de chance.

"He am now an agitator. He has got facks an' figgers to prove dat de workin' man who owns his cottage and kin airn a good support fur wife an' chill'en am de most oppressed bein' on de face of dis airth. When a saloon turns him out he threatens to boycott it. When a man refuses to lend him money he am called a bloated monopolist. When his wife wants shoes or his chill'en cry fur bread, he comforts 'em wid de statement dat America am buildin' up an aristocracy to lord it over de poo' men an' grind 'em to powder. If Misser Spikeroot has left any friends behind, an opportunity will now be giben 'em to pick up deir hats an' foot an' trabble."

There was a deep silence for a minute, and as no one traveled the President signed for the Secretary to proceed with the regular order of business.

Thad. Stevens' Strong Individuality.

His whole life was shadowed by a deformity in the foot, which caused slight lameness and gave a morbid sensitiveness to his nature. While in New York he desired to join the lodge of Free Masons, but this physical defect rendered him ineligible. He was much chagrined and became a most violent and pronounced opponent of the order, never losing an opportunity to denounce it in unsparing terms. This hatred took a strong political bias and from that time he was one of the most bitter and unrelenting anti-Masons. His strong individuality impressed every one who ever met him and his sayings and doings are still remembered in many characteristic incidents. Judge Durkee, who, like Stevens, was a Vermonter, and was an ardent and devoted admirer of that gentleman, told me he was once engaged in trying a case with him and received a letter which was positively unreadable. He gave the letter to a friend promising a liberal percentage of the prospective fee if she would translate it. She earned her reward after some hours' hard work on the epistle. His writing consisted of two or three letters in the beginning of a word, followed by an irregular scrawl.

He was once asked to read a letter of advice which he had written a client. He glanced over it, found himself quite unable to read it, and handed it back with "Humph, I don't write letters to read myself. I wrote it for you to read." A gentleman once wrote asking an opinion, but requested to return the missionary fee [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., JULY 3, 1884.

Jingo-Jim and Jingo-Jack are the campaign nick names of Blaine and Logan respectively if not so spotably.

Mr. R. W. A. Wilds, of the L. & N. railroad is working up an Alabama exhibit for the New Orleans Exposition. He invites fruit-growers in this section to bring to him fine specimens of fruit to be preserved for exhibition.

"If we had free trade, the farmers could buy a 4$ blanket for $3.50," said a Morrison democrat to a farmer. "And if we had free trade, where in 'thunation' would I get the money to buy these cheap blankets?" responded the farmer.

The President has signed the bill reducing postage on second class mail matter (newspapers and periodicals) one half, and it is now in force. It reduces the postage from one cent to every two ounces to one cent to every four ounces when sent by other persons than the publishers.

Col. M. G. Burke, the nominee for Auditor, has been on the State committee for years, is a true and faithful party man, is every way fitted to discharge the duties of the office, and we run no risk in saying that the Democracy will never have cause to regret its choice. We tender to our brother our cordial and heart-felt congratulations upon his deserved success.—Tuskegee News.

The Eutaw Mirror has this to say of its dirty, eleven year old "devil":

About our Norman the half has not been told. He has been with the Mirror only a little over a year, weighs 60 pounds with the ordinary supply of ink on him, is punctual, happy and contented, can read bad manuscript, and can set and distribute a column of our smallest type in a day, correct it, and read most of the newspapers. He does not take much to history yet, but we venture he has learned more in what it takes to make up the business man of to day in the past year than any other boy in the county of his age has at school in two years.

The County Convention.

The county convention of the Democratic and Conservative party of Chilton county met pursuant to call at the court house in Clanton on last Saturday, and it has done its work by nominating a good county ticket. The proceedings of the convention will be found published in another column. They will be interesting. The convention discussed the question of nomination thoroughly and well, and decided by a very large vote to make nominations, voting down a resolution to make no nominations.

The resolution against nominations was offered by a delegate from the court house beat and two thirds of the delegates of the same beat voted in favor of the resolution. This would prove conclusively that there is no so-called "court house ring" to manipulate conventions and make nominations for Chilton county and this fact will undoubtedly add to the strength of the ticket nominated. It is a ticket of the farmer Democracy almost entirely. The ticket nominated, we repeat, is a good one, and should receive the support of every true and staunch Democrat in Chilton county, as it undoubtedly will.

Judge J. Falkner for Senator.

The District Senatorial Convention met in Wetumpka on Tuesday and nominated the gentleman named above as the Democratic candidate for the State Senate in this, the fifteenth Senatorial district. The two-thirds rule was adopted. Judge Falkner on the first ballot received 5 votes from Chilton, 7 from Coosa, and 14 from Elmore, making 26. Dr. T. E. Callier received 5 votes from Chilton and 7 from Coosa, a total of 12. Judge Falkner, having received a two thirds majority on the first ballot was declared the nominee of the convention. Dr. Callier, in an appropriate and patriotic speech thanked the convention for the vote given him and pledged hearty support to the nominee. Only two names were presented to the Convention.

Judge Falkner is undoubtedly a strong candidate. He will make an active canvass and we expect to see him elected by a good majority. Chilton county can be relied upon to do its part in the work of securing from one good Senator. He will be one of the ablest and best men in the Senate.

Proceedings of the Convention.

The convention met pursuant to call. Secretary Lawrence, of the Executive Committee, in the absence of the regular chairman, requested Committeeman J. P. Allen, of Beat No. 2, to act as chairman in calling the meeting to order.

The meeting called to order, A. J. Brooks was elected temporary chairman. Mr. Brooks stated the object of the convention, and proposed that the body proceed with the election of permanent officers.

J. R. Jones, Esq., was elected permanent chairman, and M. DeJarnette and W. H. Lawrence permanent Secretaries. Chairman Jones, after a patriotic speech, announced that the convention was ready for regular business.

The following resolution, offered by W. H. Lawrence, was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the ticket presented to the people by the late State Convention of the Democratic and Conservative party, and pledge our cordial and unqualified support of the same.

A second resolution was offered by the same delegate which read as follows:

Resolved 2d, That believing it to be the choice of the Chilton county Democracy to select their officers at the polls on the first Monday in August, and that a fair field and open race be allowed all candidates, we deem it inexpedient to make nominations; but earnestly urge upon the people the importance of more perfect organization upon all questions of county, State and national government.

After considerable discussion, in which the views of the convention delegates were freely expressed pro and con, the resolution was tabled by a vote of thirty to twelve.

On the motion to lay the resolution upon the table, which motion was made by A. J. Brooks, the vote stood as follows:

Ayes—H. C. Young, W. H. Marcus, W. M. Connell, J. P. Allen, I. Lawhorn, S. A. Curry, J P Vandervear, Jasper Giles, B T Rasberry, D A White, Wiley Foshee, J H Rasberry, G W Jones, J A Rodgers, J R Jones, M DeJarnette, P C Dennis, Mose Robinson, John Wells, Elijah Rollins, B J Baldwin, W N Jones, W B Strock, Joel Dennis, A J Brooks, W A Gullahorn, A C Mims, D A Kemp, T E Callier, J B Hardy.

Noes—G G West, W H Lawrence, J H Chandler, A J Marlar, John Callen, Ben Scarbrough, A C Oates, L B Wells, A Baker, Sr., W R Bowline, Lee Hays, W L Parnell.

The delegates from beat No. 7 stated that they favored nominations, but had been sent to the convention with instructions to oppose nominations. They were W R Bowline and Lee Hays, and they supported the resolution voted down. They were the only delegates with positive instructions.

The resolution to make no nominations being laid on the table the chairman announced that nominations were in order.

The following resolution offered by Mr. A J Brooks, was adopted:

That the delegates to this convention pledge their support to the ticket nominated by this convention.

On motion of B. J. Baldwin the majority rule was adopted in making nominations.

It was moved and carried to begin with representative in making nominations, and that the vote be taken by beats.

Nominations were then proceeded with.

FOR REPRESENTATIVE.

J P Allen placed the name of W E Johnston, Esq., before the convention. W M Connell, nominated K Wells, A J Brooks nominated D A White, Dr. T E Callier nominated A J Hall.

The names of D A White and A J Hall were withdrawn before the first ballot was taken.

First ballot Johnston 19½, Wells 27½.

Mr. Wells was declared the nominee, having received a majority of the votes cast.

SHERIFF.

J P Smotherman was placed in nomination by Mr. J P Allen Jno. B Boykin was nominated by Mr. J P Chandler.

First ballot—Smotherman 34½, Boykin 14½.

Mr. Smotherman was declared the nominee.

TAX ASSESSOR.

The name of W A Smith was placed in nomination. No other name being proposed Mr. Smith, on motion, was nominated by acclamation.

TAX COLLECTOR.

William Walker, Jr., and William C Hester, were nominated.

First Ballot—Walker 23, Hester 19.

Mr. Walker was declared the nominee.

TREASURER.

The name of W M Wilson being the only one placed before the convention, Mr. Wilson was nominated by acclamation.

COMMISSIONERS OF ROADS AND REVENUE.

For the first district Anderson Baker and H C Young were placed in nomination.

First ballot—Baker 32, Young 13.

Mr. Baker was declared the nominee.

For the second district J P Vandervear and B C Lancir were nominated.

First ballot—Vandervear 22, Lancir 23.

Mr. Lancir was declared the nominee.

For the third district Moses Robinson was nominated by acclamation, there being no opponent.

For the fourth district Buckner Harris was nominated by acclamation.

On motion, the CHILTON VIEW was requested to publish the proceedings of the Convention.

On motion, the thanks of the convention were tendered the Chairman and Secretaries for the able manner in which they performed their duties.

On motion the convention adjourned. J. R. JONES, Chairman.

M. DEJARNETTE,
W. H. LAWRENCE,
Secretaries.

A Visit to Wetumpka.

We took occasion to visit Wetumpka on Tuesday, it being the occasion and place of the meeting of the Senatorial Convention of this district. We found the place looking up some, though there is still room for great improvement. A new court-house, a model of architectural neatness and design, has just been completed. The paint brush has added brightness to other quarters of the town, and what is to be known as the Wetumpka canal, now being discussed, has given the citizens an opportunity to talk of an early upward stride, which we join them in hoping the place may take.

Of course we went to see Brother "Gab" Smith, of the Times. And we have to say of him that though he has been appropriately named, all of his gab is good—none of it but what is solid, sound and sensible. And moreover the Times is a good paper. One of the latest enterprises in Wetumpka is the new job printing office of Mr. Freeman Smith. As clean and neat as a new pin, it is the model job printing office of the State. If there is anything we like to see it is just such a gem of a printing office. With a few exceptions the average country printing office has always reminded us of a dingy garret kept especially for rubbish. We would add that the VIEW is one of the exceptions and Freeman Smith's is another, but Brother "Gab" must inaugurate a thorough "Summer cleaning," before we can liken him unto us.

In the afternoon, in company with Mr. J. P. Higgins we visited the State penitentiary. There are only 34 convicts confined within the walls of the penitentiary—only those being kept there that are physically unable to work in the mines or on the farms. The hospital has at present some half dozen inmates. A truck farm adjoins the penitentiary, where the recovered convicts are worked until they are sufficiently strong to return to work with contractors. The hospital is kept as clean as could be wished, and the convicts say they have every attention needed when sick. Adjoining the hospital is the steward's office, where drugs and medicines are supplied to the sick by the hospital steward, Mr. Monaca.

The prison cells are about 2x8 feet. They are cool in summer and warm in winter. Some of them are strikingly clean and neat, and nothing in the way of foulness could be discovered in any of them. Even among these convicts there was evidence of human pride. A remarkably neat cell with a snowy bed, and pictures hanging from the walls, the cell of a negro, adjoined another cell not half so nicely kept.

To Messrs. J. W. Thrasher and Rufus Bankhead we are indebted for their kindness and general willingness in showing us over the building and grounds, and we could say something good about them, but won't do it now for fear they might think it only a "puff."

We left Wetumpka believing that the little city may have a bright future in store. Its citizens should put their shoulders to the wheel and get that canal. It was once said that "the gods helped those that helped themselves."

That's Just What It Is.

Baron Alfred Tennyson can take a sheet of note paper, write a "pome" on it, and make it worth a matter of $10,000 to $20,000. That's genius.

William H. Vanderbilt can pen a few lines on a sheet of legal cap, and it becomes worth anywhere from $5,000,000 to $50,000,000 as the case may be. That's capital.

Jay Gould can scratch a score of words on illegal cap, and an actual worth of $20,000,000 becomes, on the face of it, $80,000,000. That's water.

The United States can take an ounce and a quarter of gold, and stamp upon it a "screamer" and $1 to $20. That's money.

A good mechanic can take material worth $5 and turn it into an article worth $100. That's skill.

An editor can take the long winded and ungrammatical vaporings of an ignoramus, and cut it down to a few correct lines of readable common sense. That's brain.

A merchant can buy an article not worth twenty-five cents, and sell it for $1. That's business.

A lawyer can talk ten minutes with a client and charge ten dollars or more. That's unreasonable.

A lady can purchase a yard [illegible] but would rather pay one hundred. That's foolishness.

The day laborer works ten hours a day and shovels onto a board two or three dollars and a half. That's unjust.

Gen. Amos M. West.

Fort Worth Gazette.

A. M. West, Greenbacker, is a good citizen of Holly Springs, Miss. He was reared and educated in Marion, Ala. He was a railway manager and in the State's service in Mississippi, and a loyal Confederate in 1861-4. He is a large man. His lungs are good. He will never be a consumptive, except of potatoes, roasted beef and of atmosphere. He can make a rousing stump speech. One can hear him distinctly a mile, and must listen, because nothing else can be seen or heard when West is around. He is a great man—weighing 225 pounds with not an ounce of surplus flesh. Hence the resonance of his lungs—every rib is a sounding-board. He has an exalted opinion of his own genius, and looks wise and solemn and talks sonorously and grandiloquently, making a profound impression on commonplace people. They take him at his own estimate of himself, and he becomes a Daniel Webster in the eyes of innocent Greenbackers. But then the ticket is all right. Ben Butler has brains enough for both ends of it. But if all of Ben's cunning should strike in and he should die and West become President—well, things would be knocked crooked. But there is one consolatory fact, West is honest. His integrity is unquestioned, and therefore was he tacked on behind Ben Butler. We must always respect the wisdom of the Greenbackers' Convention for the Vice-Presidency.

Bill To Abolish Newspaper Postage.

The bill introduced by Representative Henley to encourage education in the States and Territories, provides that all newspapers hereafter published in the several States or Territories, in any language whatever, shall be carried free of postage, through the mails, within the limits of the United States and the Territories.

What newspaper publishers need—and what they want—is not so much free mailing, but efficient and proper handling of their papers.

The fact is, that newspapers are not handled as carefully and expeditiously in the mails as they should be, and we feel we are safe in saying that at least one paper in every twenty does not reach its destination, and the unfortunate publisher who has done his best to get his paper to all his subscribers promptly, is daily in receipt of communications beginning with: "I haven't received my paper," "What's the matter," etc., and then he must go to work and mail his paper to those parties over again.

This loss of five per cent in missing papers, and the payment of postage on the missing and on duplicate copies, the publisher would prefer to pay to the Post Office Department, in addition to what is already paid, if it would, in the employment of a larger force, do away with the loss and annoyance referred to.

All mail matter should be handled with scrupulous care, and a news paper should receive as prompt attention as a letter. Let us, therefore, instead of having a law for free newspaper delivery, which would necessarily swell the mails from new mushroom enterprises, resulting in even more careless handling than at present, have the reform referred to above.—Agents Herald.

ELECTION NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that a general election will be held at the usual places of voting in Chilton county, Alabama, on the first Monday in August, 1884, it being the 4th day of said month, for the election of the following officers, to-wit: One Governor, one Secretary of State, one State Treasurer, one State Auditor, one Attorney-General, one State Superintendent of Education, one State Senator for the 15th District, composed of the counties of Chilton, Coosa and Elmore, one Representative in the General Assembly of Alabama, one Sheriff, one Tax Assessor, one Tax Collector, one County Treasurer, four Commissioners of Roads and Revenue, two Justices of the Peace and one Constable for each beat or election precinct.

Witness my hand, this 3d day of July, 1884. JOHN GARNER,
Jul 3 Sheriff Chilton County.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

To satisfy a fi. fa. in my hands, issued from the circuit court of Chilton county, against Peyton Finley and in favor of Griel Bros. & Co., I will proceed to sell on the first Monday in August, 1884, at the courthouse door of Chilton county, between the legal hours of sale, the following described land as the property of said Peyton Finley, to-wit: The east half of east half, section 16, township 20, range 16, the east half of southeast quarter sec. 9, and the southwest quarter of northwest quarter, section 16, township 20, range 16, lying in Chilton county, State of Alabama.

This, the first day of July, 1884.
JOHN GARNER,
Jul3 Sheriff Chilton County.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Under and by virtue of a mortgage deed executed to me by Ben Welch and duly recorded in the office of Probate in Vol. H, on page 208, on June 5th, 1883, in Chilton county, Alabama, I will proceed to sell to the highest bidder for cash, before the courthouse door, in Clanton, at 12 o'clock, on Saturday, the 12th day of July, 1884, the following described real estate to-wit: Lots No. 1, 2, 3, 7 and 8 in block No. 19, Alan block No 3, containing 10 lots. Also block No. 10, containing 10 lots. All of the above being and lying in the town of Clanton, Chilton county,

THE Bookwalter Engine
IS THE BEST MADE

It is the best engine for cotton gins, wood-working, planing, grist mills, planing and cider mills, threshing machines.

Burch, Logan Co., W. Va., 1882.
The 4½ horse power Bookwalter Engine bought March 31, 1882, is complete. We are well pleased with it. It drives a 24-inch grist mill, and grinds eighty bushels a day. It is easily run; any one can run one of them. It gives entire satisfaction; it is the thing for farmers to have. A. D. FERREL & CO.

I have the exclusive right to sell this engine in Chilton, Shelby and Coosa counties, and will sell to farmers and others on easy terms. I mean business. Will put the engine up and guarantee satisfactory work.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large, sixteen page, sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agriculturist Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All these papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county at the election in August next, and respectfully solicit the support of my friends and fellow-citizens.

EDMOND H. LOWE, Jr.

We are authorized to announce

JONATHAN BICE

as a candidate for the office of Sheriff of Chilton county, at the ensuing August election.

We are authorized to announce

WILLIAM M. WILSON,

as a candidate for the office of Treasurer of Chilton county. Election in August.

We are authorized to announce

RILEY M. HONEYCUTT,

as a candidate for the office of Tax Collector of Chilton county, at the approaching August election.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

To-morrow is "the glorious fourth."

Married, in Birmingham, Ala., on the 29th, Mr. R. J. Aiken and Miss A. M. Padgett, both of this county.

Newspapers have to pay cash for work and material. Advertising and other bills should be settled when presented.

Mr. B. F. Rasberry advertises the celebrated Bookwalter engine. He is the agent for the sale of this engine in several counties.

Heavy rains in the neighborhood of Providence church have damaged the crops to an extent never known before, by washing.

Chilton county certainly has no courthouse ring, and the ticket nominated by the people of the entire county should receive their support.

Mr. A. J. Marlar sends the VIEW some very fine peaches. He knows how to raise fine fruit, as his peaches were really magnificent specimens.

Mr. J. Bice announces himself as a candidate for Sheriff. Mr. Bice is running against the regular nominee, and for that reason we cannot commend him.

It is getting too hot for farmers to work, and they will soon be done and lay up in the shade and eat fruit and watermelons—but newspaper men will work on forever.—Ex.

Misses Quint and Gena Dougherty, two of Randolph's beautiful young ladies, visited Miss Gussie Evans, at Clanton, on Friday last, and attended the closing exercises of Clanton Academy.

Rev. R. W. Hamrick, of Newnan, Ga., an able minister of the Baptist denomination, is visiting relatives at this place. He delivered an interesting and instructive sermon at the Baptist church on Tuesday last, and will lecture from the same pulpit to-night, Thursday.

Those few disaffected Democrats who are not especially pleased with the work of the county convention, and who are reporting that the editor of the VIEW agrees with them are misrepresenting facts. The editor of the VIEW is a Democrat, and as such bows to the will of the majority and is now convinced that nominations were best for the good of the county.

Mr. W. M. Wilson announces himself as a candidate for the office of County Treasurer. Nobody in Chilton knows Billy Wilson. He received the nomination unanimously in the county convention, an honor which he well deserved; and we do not see but that with his many friends it is to recommend him. He intend to make him their next Treasurer.

Mr. Thomas Aldridge, father of Mr. G. P. Aldridge, of this place died at Calera on Saturday. He died from the mortification of an accidental gun shot wound received two years ago. His remains were brought to this place and interred.

D. T. Naugher and James Walker, mill hands at Callierville, had a serious personal difficulty on last Thursday evening in which Naugher stabbed Walker in the back and in the lungs. He then fled. Walker's condition was considered serious for a while, but he is now out of danger.

A certain citizen in the Western part of the county is a great cabbage raiser. He reports that he raised one this year which measured six feet in diameter and that if the whippoorwills had not "gone for" his crop so badly he would have raised several acres of the same size. West Chilton undoubtedly raises large crops of ravenous whippoorwills.

Chilton Lodge No. 32 K. of P. was re-instated at Verbena, on the 24th of June by Grand Chancellor A. Steinhart. The following officers were elected and installed for the ensuing term: P. C., H. J. Callen, C. C., J. S. Edwards, V. C., F. A. Gulledge, P., W. E. Stewart, K. of R. & S., Charles L. Reid, M. of F., W. A. Gullahorn, M. of E., J. M. Hanlin, M. at A., E. T. Gullahorn, I. G., W. T. Callen, O. G., Fred Thornton. Several new members were initiated and a vote of thanks to G. C. Steinhart for the efficient manner in which he instructed the lodge, was taken and a meeting was called for the second Saturday in July.

Democratic County Ticket.

Following is the ticket presented to the people by the Democratic County Convention: For Representative in the General Assembly—K. Wells. For Sheriff—J. P. Smotherman. For Tax Assessor—William A. Smith. For Tax Collector—William Walker, Jr. For Treasurer—William M. Wilson. For Commissioners of Roads and Revenue—First District, Anderson Baker, Sr.; Second District—R. C. Lanoir; Third District, Moses Robinson; Fourth District, Buckner Harris.

Clanton Academy.

The closing exercises of this excellent institution were held on Friday evening last. The largest audience ever seen assembled in Clanton attended. The exercises were interesting, instructive and at times highly entertaining. They reflected great credit upon principal and pupils. Owing to the length of the programme, we are unable to notice it particularly. All did well, and it was an entertainment rarely witnessed in a place the size of Clanton, and it will be long remembered.

One of the Wayward Ones.

The Birmingham Chronicle of Tuesday tells of a weak and wayward maiden of eighteen summers who fell into the company of one of the "soiled doves" of the burg of mud and magic, and went to that city from Jemison with the intention of becoming an inmate of a house of ill fame. The christian name of the girl with the initial of her surname was given in the Chronicle, but we refrain from publishing even that. The account stated that a hard-hearted father, who, by the way, was a well to do farmer, had forbidden the young lady to marry the man of her choice. She then decided to leave her home and on the train she fell into the clutches of Birmingham "dove", who, by portraying a life of ease and luxury, succeeded in gaining the consent of the innocent girl to enter upon the path to hell.

A policeman at Birmingham suspecting how matters stood, took the girl in charge when she reached that place and telegraphed the situation to her father. The account of the Chronicle ended here, as the father had not been heard from when the item was written. The paper stated that the girl had repented of her rash decision and had expressed a willingness to return to her home.

Verbena Views.

Mr. P. M. Ming left last week for New York. He will be absent for some weeks.

As last Sunday was the 27th in the month, we had no services, either at the Methodist or Baptist church.

Mr. C. A. McClusky, of Talladega, has pitched his photograph gallery at this place. He is a very clever young man and the best dam-ogre artist we ever saw.

Maj. Gibson is having an Eclipse Wind Mill erected on his yard for the purpose of [illegible]. It will be [illegible] Mason Hall [illegible]

& Hand, of Montgomery, are the contractors and are now engaged in putting it up.

Miss Minnie Barnett left last week to spend some time in Montgomery with relatives and friends. She will attend the sea shore camp meeting before returning.

A large crowd went from this place last week to witness the sham battle at Camp Rodes, Montgomery.

Mrs. Geo. P. Burelt closed her school here on the 26th. She will continue her instructions in music through the Summer.

Miss Lelia Ricks, who has been visiting here, returned to her home in Eufaula last Sunday accompanied by Miss Jackson.

MAX.

EDITOR VIEW:—

The closing exercises of Prof. W. C. Carpenter's school were attended by a large concourse of admiring friends, many of whom were from a distance, and I dare say not one of the vast crowd which was there assembled indulged the slightest regret at being present.

The programme was extensive in its nature, but interesting to such an extent that it had a powerful condensing influence on time, and the hours passed but too fleetly. To give the entire programme and do justice in detail would take a volumn equal to such a one as it required to embrace the moral law.

I will not indulge in praise of one to the exclusion of others, for it would be only injustice to the excluded for me to do so. Not a single actor but what performed so well but that high compliments could be deservedly conferred. The variety of talent displayed was indeed wonderful and speaks well for the instructor. Prof. W. C. Carpenter, whose, fertile brain managed and munipulated the entire performance. The music, if I mistake not, was directed by Miss Josie Wainwright, who is perfectly at home in the musical sphere. The evening of the 27th doubtless will long be remembered by the performers and spectators and referred to in the future as one of the most pleasant episodes of their lives.

ALLONA.

Miss Josie Wainwright has left Clanton to spend some weeks with relatives in Prattville.

Jemison Jottings.

Rain, abundant.

No Sunday school last Sunday, owing to so much rain.

Mr. J. N. Gibons, who has had charge of the Chilton House for some time, has moved back to his home place, Near Benson, we regret very much to loose Mr. G. and family.

The ticket nominated by the County Convention gives general satisfaction, and will doubtless be supported by every true democrat in the county.

Dr. Lanier is now selling Dr. Hartmans Peruna, it is a wonderful medicine, more diseases have been cured by it than any other remedy.

He has also the book entitled "Ills of Life," for gratuitous distribution, it is the greatest book that has ever been written. Call and get one.

Mr. Frederick Bearman, McComb City, Miss., had chronic catarrh very badly; was almost deaf. Dr. H. cured him with Pe-ru-na.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.
From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of Food, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back, Loins, etc., Sudden flushes of heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constipation, Piles, Fickle appetite, Nervousness, Blues, Despondency, with a feeling of having neglected some duty, Weariness, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Yellow Skin, Headache over the right eye, Restlessness, with fitful Dreams, are but few of the symptoms of a diseased Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; causing all impurities to be thrown off by these three scavengers of the system, producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin, and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.
DR. TUTT'S PILLS.
I have used Dr. Tutt's Pills in my family, have given away hundreds of pills, and have never had them to fail in any case. I consider them the best family medicine in use. Dr. Tutt's Pills have done more good in my family than all the doctors I ever employed. I would not be without them for any consideration.

ABOUT SEAMEN.

SUPERSTITIONS ABOUT WHITE BIRDS. ANY QUEER CREATURES.

Omens of Good and Evil That Sailors Are Supposed to Believe In.

There is probably no class of people in the world so full of superstitions belief as the average sailor, unless, indeed, it be the negroes of the South. This belief in omens of the sea is not confined alone to ignorant men, but is to a greater or lesser extent shared by captains and mates. In conversation a few days ago with a grizzly bearded and bronzed old mariner, who has trod the quarter-decks of ships as master for upward of a quarter of a century, a reporter broached the subject of the superstition of sailors. "Do sailors believe in omens?" said the Captain, repeating the reporter's question, "well you can bet your chewy boylights they do. They are the crankiest lot of men in the world, and you would be astonished to know what trifling matters sometimes causes them to give up going on a voyage. I have known sailors to predict the direct calamity of a ship because they happened to encounter while going on board. Then again, if a vessel is delayed in port and does not sail at the appointed time it is a bad omen, according to Jack's ideas. They have good omens too. A fair day when they ship is a good sign, and if the sun is shining brightly on the day they sail it is a sign that the vessel will have a speedy and prosperous voyage. A baffling head wind leads sailors to the belief that there is a Jonah on board and they do all sorts of things, such as burning a piece of an old sail or rope-yarn and the throwing overboard of a sea biscuit to exercise the evil effects of his presence, and when the wind does shift and becomes fair they attribute it to their exorcism, their good spirits return and all goes merry until something else happens to disturb their fears.

"I remember an old fellow I once shipped at Liverpool for the voyage home to New York," continued the captain. "He was a veritable old sea dog and the crew at once set him down as a Jonah. He was called Liverpool Jack, and was the queerest chap I ever saw. He wanted the voyage prolonged as much as possible, and one day the men caught him in the foretop whistling for a head wind, and, sure enough, the following morning the wind shifted and came dead from the head. This, of course, necessitated the frequent tacking of the ship, and the curses of the crew were loud and long. That wind stuck to us for three days, and the crew decided to chuck Jack overboard, and I believe they would have carried the threat into execution had not the wind changed. Sailors also have an aversion to clergymen's sons, and if they know that one is on board a vessel they will not ship under any consideration. Why they dislike a vessel with a minister's son on board I have never found out, but it is considered as one of the worst 'hoodoos' by the sailors. Out at sea if, as is frequently the case, a shark follows in the wake of a vessel, it is a sign that some one on board will soon die, but it is one of the worst omens to kill it. Of all the sea birds what are known as a Mother Cary's chicken, a dark bird somewhat resembling a gull, but about the size of a chicken, is held most sacred by the forecastle men. Its presence forstells an approaching storm, and this sign hardly ever fails. A seaman would as soon think of swimming across the Pacific Ocean as to molest one of the chickens. Then, again, it is bad luck, as sailors say, to kill those gulls that follow ships out at sea, as they are considered the harbingers of good luck. If dolphins accompany the vessel, it is also considered a good omen.

A singular incident happened some years ago on board an American ship. A few days out from New York, a booby, a bird somewhat like a gull, but much smaller, alighted in the foretop, and one of the sailors went up and caught it. The booby was brought on deck, where it was attacked by the ship's dog. The animal flew at the bird, which drove its bill down the dog's throat, and thus the two remained until separated. The booby was thrown overboard and was not seen for some time, when suddenly it reappeared, perched in the foretop again. A sailor took it and captured it, and it was brought down and taken into the forecastle where the sailors held a trial and the bird was sentenced to death. The executioner was the cook, and the unfortunate booby was beheaded. The dog disappeared after the encounter, but immediately after the bird was killed it came on deck and began running around in a circle. This was continued for some time, when suddenly it made a dash for the stern of the ship and jumped overboard. Even the captain, a Boston man, was affected by the incident, and for several days the deepest sort of gloom prevailed among those on board, and a majority of the men predicted some disaster before the end of the voyage, and none felt entirely easy until the port was reached.

In addition to being superstitious, sailors have queer names for things on shipboard. His bunk in the forecastle he terms his pew; he says "aft" for "stern" and "forward" for "forward." The captain is known as the "old man," the carpenter as "whips" and the cook is the only man about the forecastle that has the distinction of having his office mentioned in connection with his name, and he is referred to as Sam or Jim the cook. In all water is called "to whale." A crooked rope is referred to as being "crooked in the wind," no doubt because it suggests like a ship in a storm under shortened sail. As to the use of profanity, sailors are peculiar. They do not swear their oaths in heavy profusion, while both are being hoisted aloft when the wind is favorable through the open ports. Rules have to be observed in regard to profanity, and I have known a captain to order a man to the mast for swearing. Sailors are very superstitious, and I have known them to refuse to go to sea in a vessel because they happened to see a certain person on board before they left the dock. Others refuse to go because they dreamed of a wreck, and I have known instances where men have refused to go because they had a dream which they interpreted as meaning disaster to the vessel. Sailors are also very fond of nicknames, and I have known men to go by them for years, and in many instances their own names were entirely forgotten. Sailors are also very fond of tattooing, and I have seen men who were literally covered with pictures, from the crown of the head to the soles of the feet. Some of the pictures are very artistic, and are executed with a needle and India ink. Sailors are also very fond of pets, and I have known them to ship with monkeys, parrots, dogs and cats, and in one instance I remember a sailor had a pet goat which he had taught to climb the rigging. Sailors are also very fond of music, and I have known them to ship with violins, accordeons and flutes, and in the evening they would gather on the forecastle and have a concert. Sailors are also very fond of dancing, and I have frequently seen them dancing a hornpipe to the music of a violin or accordeon. Sailors are also very fond of gambling, and I have known them to lose their entire wages in a game of cards. Sailors are also very fond of fighting, and I have known them to fight for hours at a time, and I have frequently seen them fight with knives, but I never knew of a fatal termination to a fight. Sailors are also very fond of practical jokes, and I have known them to play practical jokes on each other that would make a landsman's hair stand on end. Sailors are also very fond of their grog, and I have known them to get drunk on board ship, but I never knew of a sailor to get drunk on shore. Sailors are also very fond of their money, and I have known them to work for months and then lose their entire wages in a single night. Sailors are also very fond of their liberty, and I have known them to desert a ship rather than be deprived of it. Sailors are also very fond of their pipes, and I have known them to smoke for hours at a time. Sailors are also very fond of their quids, and I have known them to chew tobacco for days at a time. THE STORY OF A LIFE.

Say, what is life? 'Tis to be born
A helpless babe, to greet the light
With a sharp wail, as if the morn
Foretold a cloudy noon and night
To weep, to sleep, and weep again,
With sunny smiles between—and then?

And then apace the infant grows
To be a laughing, sprightly boy,
Happy despite his little woes,
Were he but conscious of his joy!
To be, in short, from two to ten,
A merry, moody child—and then

And then, in coat and trousers clad,
To learn to say the decalogue,
And break it, an unthinking lad,
With mirth and mischief all agog;
A truant oft by field and fen,
And capture butterflies—and then?

And then, increased in strength and size,
To be anon a youth full grown;
A hero in his mother's eyes,
A young Apollo in his own;
To imitate the ways of men
In fashionable sin—and then?

And then, at last, to be a man,
To fall in love, to woo and wed!
With soothing brain to scheme and plan
To gather gold or toil for bread;
To sue for fame, with tongue and pen,
And gain or lose the prize!

And then in gray and wrinkled old
To mourn the speed of life's decline;
To praise the scenes our youth beheld,
And dwell in the memory of lang syne;
To dream awhile with darkened ken,
To drop into the grave—and then?

JOHN G. SAXE.

Jennie's Mission.

BY ELLA WHEELER.

"Oh, this dull round of small duties, how tired I am of them all, how I wish some grand mission in life would come to me!"

Jennie Orson, the pretty little schoolmistress, leaned her chin upon her hand as she mused in the above manner, and gazed out over the gray fields, whose dreary plowed furrows were thrusting their ragged faces up through the rapidly-disappearing snow-drifts.

"Why, how the snow has gone today," she added mentally, as the changed appearance of the fields struck her eye. It was the last day of March, and all winter long the snow had been heaped in miniature mountain ranges by the roadsides, and on the fields and meadows. During the last week warm weather had set in, making rapid inroads upon snow and ice.

The children came running under the window where Jennie stood, playing at "Round the House." Then they flocked off together toward the brook that rippled by the school-house a few rods distant. Jennie watched them absently. Her mind was not upon her duties that day. Her plodding round in a country school room seemed very dull and mean to her. She sighed for some great and lofty mission.

"If I could do some one great act, heroic and noble," she said to herself, "I would be willing to die then. What is life worth if we must plod on forever like this? I am no more than an ant, or a spider, or a squirrel with the life I live! How gladly would I give up the monotony of years of this routine for one hour of sacrifice, heroism, and then welcome death."

How she hated her homely life as she looked back over his nineteen uneventful years. She had always lived in this dull country place, ever since she was a wee child and her parents had emigrated to the West. She had received her education in this same little school-house, attended divine service there also—as the place boasted no church edifice—and her only knowledge of the world beyond was obtained by a yearly visit to the city, fifty miles distant, where the family supplies were purchased, and from a few books and newspapers. Now she was very tired of it all—tired of her dull past, her dullier present, her doubtlessly dull future. Even the thought of her fond, true lover, Jack Kellogg, who was building the house where she was to reign mistress, annoyed her today. How poor and monotonous life stretched before her. How much better to perform some one grand act and die, than to live on to old age in this dreamy fashion. It was a very romantic girl who stood there in the little school-room dreaming her discontented dreams, you see.

Suddenly she saw by the moon mark that it was time to call in her scholars. She had no bell—for this was in the early days of Wisconsin history, before the railroads had spread their great iron spider webs all over the State, and Jennie's school was conducted on a very primitive plan. She took the great ruler, with which she inflicted punishment on the palms of unruly boys, and rapped loudly on the window. Then she sat down and waited for the pupils to come trooping in—not with the regulation and order which govern school-rooms in these days, but helter skelter, hurry skurry, laughing, pushing each other and playing "tag" to their benches.

"Oh teacher, the creek is getting awful high," said Tommy Smith, as he plunged into his seat. Just Jennie did not correct him for the improper use of "awful," which proved to be Tommy appropriate in this case then, scholar or pupil stopped.

"I suppose the waters are all rushing and running full in the crevices," absently, as she took her place at her desk, and by another tap of her ruler indicated that the afternoon session of school was now in order.

Then she ran her eye over the room to see that no pupils were missing.

"Where is Tod Brown?" she asked. "I do not see him here."

Tod was the smallest child in the school, a little boy scarcely five years old, who was placed in her charge, not so much to learn his primer, as to keep him out of his mother's way. She was burdened with two smaller than he besides a babe in the cradle.

"I left Tod down by the creek," answered Tommy Smith, "playin' throw pebbles into the water. I told him school was called."

"You should have brought him along. Tod is only a child," Jennie said, reprovingly. "But go and bring him now; and hurry, for your lesson in arithmetic comes on directly."

Tommy came back in a brief space of time, white and frightened.

"Tod is stannin' on a stone and cryin', and the water's all round him," he said. "I couldn't get near him at all."

The whole school rose en masse, and Jennie at the head of the small army led on to the rescue of Tod.

Yes, there he stood off a stone which a little time before had been on the shore; but now, alas, was in the midst of the rapidly-swelling stream, beyond the reach of any in that little group.

"Mamma! mamma," he called in piteous tones, "come and take Tod. Tod is 'fraid. Come, mamma, come!"

Jennie looked over her little flock of pupils who crowded about her. Not one of them was large enough to wade out and rescue Tod. The only boy in her school who might safely have attempted this had remained at home that day to assist his father.

The water was rising higher every moment. What was to be done must be done quickly, or the angry waves would seize poor little Tod and sweep him away down the swelling stream.

"John!" cried Jennie, speaking to the largest boy in the flock, "you stand here on the bank, while I wade out to Tod. I shall want you to take him from my arms as soon as I have him safe. Some of the larger girls must hold fast to your coat, so that you do not fall into the stream."

Then Jennie drew her skirts close about her slight figure and plunged bravely into the cold waters, sinking almost to her waist at the first step.

Slowly, slowly, she made her way toward the crying child, the waves rushing up higher over his feet every moment.

The little flock on the shore huddled together like frightened lambs, watching their teacher with wide, distended eyes and sobbing out their fear and terror, as she slowly forced her way against the waves.

Another effort, another plunge and she had him in her arms. Then she tried to make her way back to shore, but the waters were growing more furious every moment, as if angered at the loss of their prey. They almost swept her from her feet—they dashed above her shoulder, and her little burden screamed and struggled with terror, making her task tenfold more difficult.

"Just another step, teacher, and I'll catch hold of him," cried John from the shore, reaching out almost his whole length over the waters, while two sobbing girls held fast to the skirts of his coat.

It was an exciting scene, a wild moment of suspense. Jennie's face was white as chiseled marble; her long black hair had fallen from its fastenings and floated back over the billows like a dark mantle; her eyes were large with fear, her mouth drawn with pain, and her slender form swayed as if her strength were well nigh exhausted.

With one last mighty effort she laid her burden in John's outstretched arms.

Tod was saved!

A wild shout of joy and triumph rose from the excited band on shore, and they flocked about the prostrate form of the almost inanimate child.

Just then a great wave swept down upon Jennie, lifted her from her feet, just as she was about to grasp the shore, and bore her rapidly down the stream like a light piece of driftwood.

As she was whirled away the whole events of her past life arose before her; that life, which only an hour before seemed so poor and mean and dull to her. Ah, now how precious and bright and beautiful it became! She remembered her rash wish, that she might be given some one heroic act to perform—and then die. The act had been granted her almost instantly, and she had performed it heroically. But now must she carry out the completion of her thought, and die? Oh, death was so dark—so cold; the unknown seemed so terrible; she was so young, and life was so sweet!

She thought of Jack, her lover, and the half-completed home, with him there, that an hour before had opened a dreary, monotonous vista, alone upon her like the departing shores of some lost paradise. Oh, in was his dear eyes smiling fondly upon her, once more to hear his voice; his youth, love, how precious they all were! "Thou hast given blank. "Jack, Jack, I am so cold! Oh, God! save me—pity—forgive," she cried, and then sank down unconsciousness.

Two miles below the school-house they found her lying on shore with a mass of driftwood. Quite dead they pronounced her at first, and the old village doctor confirmed the assertion.

But Jack Kellogg would not listen to any of them.

"She is not dead," he cried. "How dare you tell me such a thing! She is alive, and will look up and smile in my face before the day passes."

They shook their heads, and thought the poor boy had gone mad, as he set to work over her. But they all lent a helping hand, and every restorative known to them was applied to the pallid figure of the young girl.

It was hours before they saw any signs of returning life. Then she drew a deep, quivering sigh, opened her eyes and smiled, even as Jack had said she would, into his loving face bent anxiously above her.

"Is this heaven?" she asked in a whisper. "I thought I died!"

"You went out clear to the very threshold of death," Jack answered, as he clasped her in his arms, "but love was strong enough to bring you back."—The Wisconsin.

SAM WARD DEAD AT 70.

A Conspicuous Figure in Social and Political Life.

It is said of the late notable Sam Ward that after his house in New York failed, in 1847, through a heavy speculation in wheat Ward found himself a poor man. After drifting around for a time, he was seized with the gold fever, and went to California as one of the '49ers. There, with ex-Governor Price, of New Jersey, he established a mercantile and auction house, and rapidly accumulated a large fortune. This he lost in a fire, and then he tried his hand at mining, but with poor success. Discouraged and disgusted with civilization, it is said that he took refuge among the Indians, and taught them to cook dog so lusciously that they elected him chief of the tribe. He lived in Mexico, Europe and this country. He went to Washington, and there he found an occupation entirely congenial to his nature. He became a lobbyist, and was so successful and popular that he was known as the "King of the Lobby." He lived in Washington for many years, and gave immmerable dinners, the reputation of which spread over the land. It was his profession to win Congressmen over by these dinners and by his fine liquors, of which none had so fine a judgment. He had a faculty of bringing enemies together at these dinners and sending them away friends. He ate very sparingly himself and therein was the secret of his good health.

Though he received a great deal of money at Washington, he never saved any of it, and he remained a poor man until 1881. Then he met Mr. James R. Keene, who had recently came on to New York from California. He became Mr. Keene's boon companion, and was admitted to a share in his speculations, and from them he realised a fortune estimated at half a million dollars. When Keene was taken seriously sick, Ward nursed him and took him to Long Branch and other places for his health. He now resumed his course of dinner giving in New York. He gave dinners to Oscar Wilde, Mrs. Langtry, and other celebrities. He was a member of the New York Club, and was often seen there. Within a year he lost the greater part of his last fortune in unfortunate speculations, and, as a result, in the fall he left for Europe rather suddenly. He said he wanted to go where he could live cheaply, and that he did not intend to return. He died in London at the age of seventy years.

A Fashionable Wedding.

One of the most fashionable and at the same time one of the most strangely assorted marriages of the season was solemnized in St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, London. The bridegroom was Sir John Lubbock, Bart., a partner in the immensely wealthy banking house of Roberts, Lubbock & Co.; M. P. for London University, a Fellow of the Royal Society and a well known dilettante scientist, especially in the domain of entomology and natural history. He is a rich widower, just fifty years of age, very tall and thin; has a thin, piping voice, weak, squinting eyes, and has been for years a martyr to gout, which confines him to his bed most of the time. His last appearance in the House of Commons was at the time of the division on the vote of censure, when he left his sick bed and hobbled on crutches to his place in the House to give his vote to the government.

He managed to discard his crutches on the wedding day, and marched bravely down the aisle of St. Peter's with his feet enveloped in huge cloth boots, and as he stood before the altar he repeated the marriage vows in a troubled, quavulous voice, to an accompaniment of spasms of pain from the gout.

The bride was Miss Fox Pitt, daughter of General Rivers Pitt, of the British army, and the granddaughter of a peer. She is both young and beautiful, and was elegantly dressed in a robe of ivory satin brocade, trimmed with orange blossoms and lilies of the valley, and garnished with pearl and diamond stars, the costume being valued at $8,000.

Those trifle with God and make sport of sin so much as those whose way of living interferes with their prayers; who pray perhaps for celebrity and wait daily for an answer to their prayer at a merry meeting or a revel.

FASHIONABLE HAIR.

A CHAPTER ABOUT HAIR GOODS AND WHERE THEY COME FROM.

French Hair Balsams who Grow Rather Crops.

"Human hair goods are worn more now than they ever were," said a dealer who does a ... ge business in such articles. "All classes of ladies wear them—young, middle-aged and old—some for use, but more for ornament. Men wear wigs only when they cannot help it. Women wear false hair to add to their charms. Short hair is in demand now, in the form of Lisbon and sea-foam waves and frizzes, and the favorite color is chestnut-brown. The golden shade, so much in fashion few years ago, has fallen 50 per cent. in price."

"Where does the supply of artificial hair come from?" "Nearly all from France and Germany, with a little from other parts of the Continent and England. The largest quantity and best quality is from France. It is not the hair of dead persons, as many imagine, but comes from the heads of living peasant girls. It is gathered by peddlers, who buy it for a trifle—a silk handkerchief, or some other trifle which pleases the fancy. There are in France regular 'hair-raisers,' that is, girls who have their hair cut for sale every four years."

"What is the most expensive kind of hair?" "Natural silver white like this is worth $18 or $20 an ounce; so you see it is worth more than its weight in gold. Bleached white hair is worth only $3 an ounce. Natural hair of ordinary shades is worth from $5 to $20 a pound, except the hair collected by ragpickers, which brings only from $1 to $3. The value of different colors of hair depends on the fashion. Yellow hair not golden is almost useless to us."

"I suppose there have been great improvements made in your art in late years?" "Yes, indeed. You could tell an old-fashioned wig a mile off, but now I can make a wig that will defy detection. A great many top-pieces are worn by men, like this."

Here the hair dealer, greatly to the surprise of the reporter, lifted up what was to all appearance the natural hair on the top of his head, and disclosed a cranium as bare as a billiard ball.

"I suppose you sell a good many light-colored waves to dark-haired ladies?" "Ah, you may see many a pretty blonde on the street with black eyes, which she cannot hide, and black hair, which she can. Fashion rules all. Just now the color is medium brown, but there are constant changes in style, enough to keep one 'on the go' all the time."

Wiping Out a Regiment.

Any time during the war, after the beginning of 1863, it would have been hard to find a regiment in the field numbering its full complement of one thousand men. There were many having a strength of not more than three hundred and fifty or four hundred, particularly on the Confederate side. In various severe encounters regiments were decimated, and in some cases lost half their strength, but it was rarely that a body was so completely wiped out that there was nothing to rally on. At the battle of Pleasant Hills, La., a Texas cavalry regiment, numbering three hundred and forty-eight men, were seen forming for a charge against a Federal brigade of infantry. The latter had good cover and were fresh. The cavalry had to dash across a field to reach the line, and before they came the commander of the brigade passed along behind his two lines and ordered his men to hold their fire until the word was given. Each pair were instructed to fire at one cavalryman—or, rather, one at the man and the other at the horse.

The cavalry made the charge in one line, but it was so much shorter than the front of the brigade that three fires could be concentrated. The Confederates came forward with a dash and a yell, keeping a pretty even front until they were within one hundred feet of the line when all the muskets rang out together. One volley was enough. That regiment was so nearly blotted off the face of the earth that only four of its members returned to the Confederate lines. Over two hundred horses were killed outright, and at least another hundred wounded. There were not ten wounded men to pick up. Every Federal had a dead aim and a close target. —M. QUAD.

Stories of the Bar.

At a dinner given by the late Judah P. Benjamin to Mr. Evarts, Benjamin mentioned, apropos of the interruptions of Judges, that in an argument before the House of Lords, a very learned member of that body, having frequently interposed, at last met a proposition of his with the ejaculation "Monstrous!" on which Mr. Benjamin shut up his papers, bowed, and retired. The noble lord subsequently sent a public candlestick manufacturer and made every possible reparation. Mr. Evarts capped this story with one from this side of the water. A lawyer who had often been interrupted in a difficult case stopped, and, facing the bench, said: "I have told your Honors that this is a speaking case, and I am afraid it will be made even more so if your Honors put questions more puzzling than the facts themselves."

THE PRACTICAL HOUSEKEEPER.

Potatoes—How to Cook Them and What to Do With Those Left Over.

[From Harper's Bazar.]

Speaking hot, delicately browned, and delicious. Who doesn't wish the week brought more than seven breakfasts, if only every household fairy could be induced to present them in such a tempting form?

To have them moist, and yet free from an abundance of grease, depends entirely upon two things—the condition of the fire and the lard; for lard it must be, fresh, firm, and sweet, for neither drippings, skimmings, nor any of the other little economies the heart of the mistress is so apt to delight in will answer so well, no matter how nicely rendered. Put in at first a generous supply, and see it becomes smoking hot over a fire not too bright at first, but steadily increasing in temperature. On these two commandments hang all one's skill and success.

The mashed potatoes left from dinner can be presented at the next morning's breakfast in a very attractive and toothsome form. While yet warm, add a small quantity of milk; or, better still, good cream, until, like the very little bear's chair in the charming story, it is neither too hard nor too soft. Put the mass into a vegetable dish sufficiently large to cover the bottom of it about an inch in depth; work in evenly and nicely with a spoon until it is smooth, and set aside to become cold. When ready to use, turn out the dish, and cut into strips that will be an inch in width and thickness, and two inches in length. Fry, or rather boil, in enough lard to cover them, as oysters or doughnuts, and when browned all over, remove, and laying on a napkin, put in the oven a few minutes, where they will drain off all extra fat, and at the same time keep their heat. If of the right consistency, and rapidly cooked, the potatoes will be crisp and brown on the outside, but soft and creamy within. Garnish with parsley sprigs, and send to table in an odd fancy china dish.

The double pans having the inner one pierced with innumerable tiny holes, or made entirely of wire, are the nicest. They are sold at the house furnishers' for frying oysters, but are equally nice in cooking other articles of food. A piece of heavy wire is fastened at one side of the outer pan, comes up to and hangs over the top, having at the end a hook on which the inner vessel is hung, and drains off the superfluous fat. The lifting out and danger of breaking in pieces any delicate article of food are thus also avoided.

Chop very finely cold boiled potatoes, and cook slowly in sufficient fat about twenty minutes. Do not let them brown the least particle, but only take out the raw taste, and become very hot and well mixed together. To one pint of potatoes allow two tablespoonfuls of rich milk or cream and half of a raw egg. Beat them well together; take the potatoes from the pan, and stir in. Season with pepper and salt; put in the same pan, and replace on the fire, first pressing well down with a spoon, that they may lie compactly over its whole surface. Do not stir them, but let them become nicely browned on the under side, which will be in about fifteen minutes. Have an oval dish well warmed; place it over the pan, and then, reversing the position of the two quickly, there will be a sort of potato omelet in good shape, and its nicely browned side on top.

In place of chopping the potatoes for ordinary frying, one can make a pleasant change by forking them. When well boiled, and the skins removed, work with a silver fork until there is a fine flaky mass, even in texture, and looking very light and inviting. Either cook them plainly in plenty of boiling lard, stirring frequently, or adding cream and egg if preferred.

In a small skillet heat half a pint of rich milk, adding into it six or eight medium-sized potatoes previously boiled and sliced across. Stir together four tablespoonfuls of cream and half the raw yolk of an egg; pour over the contents of the skillet, shaking to and fro, but not using a spoon to stir them, until they give one good bubble. Take from the fire, add salt, pepper, and a generous amount of butter. If desired, a very little finely chopped parsley may be added.

Fairness in Dogs.

Among the $250,000 worth of dogs exhibited at the New York show, were some worthy of note. Two were $10,000 dogs. One is a deer-hound and the other a pointer. Of course no one would pay $10,000 for either, but that's the value placed on each by their respective owners. There are several dogs supposed to be worth from $1,000 to $5,000. The $10,000 pointer (Meteor) took the prize for dogs of that breed. His competitor was an English dog (Rosedew), and the international rivalry over the two was almost as strong as at the walking match. The large English contingent present maintained that the English dog should get the first prize, and the Americans held that the American dog was entitled to it. Many bets were made as to which would get it, and when the judge decided in favor of the American dog, about $5,000 changed hands.

COL. CASH AND HIS DEAD SON.

Regrets That the Young Man Had Not Been Brought to Justice.

A letter from Columbia, S. C., says the recent tragic death of W. Bogan Cash, only son of Col. E. B. C. Cash, is still the theme of public comment, and there are two views of the matter. No one questions the justice of the fate which overtook him, while public feeling is fairly divided as between those who would have preferred that the deceased had so acted as to let the law mete out the punishment for his crimes, as a jury of his countrymen would have unhesitatingly determined. The young man had been of a turbulent character his whole life. He had been a principal in two duels, instigated a third, killed a peace officer, mortally wounded an inoffensive citizen, and finally met his death with 20 wounds while resisting a Sheriff's posse. Young Cash had inherited all of the violent traits of his father, and neither of them could conceive of any atonement for real or fancied wrongs save by the shedding of blood. Both of them were men of excellent educational training, and the father was possessed of generous impulses, but the love of strong drink and disregard for human life debased their natures.

Col. Cash will be brought to trial the latter part of this or the first of next month on the charge of being an accessory before and after the killing of Town Marshall Richards and the mortal wounding of James Coward. While there never was much expectation of his conviction, it is probable that the death of his son, the principal actor in the double deed of blood, will have appeased public wrath to justify the acquittal or very mild punishment of the old man, whose life is now a complete wreck in every respect. Col. Cash has two daughters—one married, who, with her husband and child, was at her father's house when her brother was killed, and a single daughter, who teaches a school in Spartanburg, S. C. It is probable that the father would have been buried in the same grave with his son had Bogan Cash been hemmed in at the paternal mansion, but Bogan was surrounded in a barn on his own plantation, about five miles from Col. Cash's home. A servant of the household, upon being asked how the Colonel took the death of his son, replied: "Mighty hard! Mighty hard!"

James Coward, the unfortunate victim of Bogan Cash's pistol practice, still lingers, with no possible hope of recovery, and with no immediate prospect of release from his sufferings. His entire body below the wound continues paralyzed. Where the ball entered and where it was extracted have healed over and seem healthy, but bad sores are forming. Coward is very cheerful under the circumstances.

THE CZAR DOOMED TO DIE.

The Nihilists Placard a Decree Warning Him of His Fate.

Reports from Russia says that the Russian Nihilists have renewed their activity and begun a new campaign of terrorism in the province of Moscow. They have placarded that province and its capital with hundreds of copies of a manifesto conveying a threat of death to the Czar. As these placards were all posted on the same night, and as each person engaged in the work could have posted but very few of them owing to the necessity of avoiding the police, it is evident that the Nihilists must have in their ranks a large number who are willing to risk their liberty in the prosecution of such an enterprise. The proclamation reminds the Czar that he was warned in May, 1881, that if he would avoid the fate which had befallen his father two months before, he must grant a constitutional form of government and organize a parliament composed of representatives of the people. During the three years that have followed this warning, the proclamation says, the revolutionists have suspended their agitation, but now that this warning has been so long unheeded they inform the Czar that he must be prepared to be dealt with as pitilessly and removed as suddenly as his father and predecessor. The police tore down the placards before most of the citizens were stirring, and have made strenuous efforts to find the persons who printed and posted them. Many students of both sexes have been arrested on suspicion, and a thorough search has been made of the offices of all newspapers and printers suspected of disloyalty. None of the peculiar type used in printing the placards has been discovered, however, and the police believe that it was melted up immediately after being used.

CARLYON.—Prof. Rodger, on feeding his monkeys, in Paraguay, with eggs, observed that at first they smashed them and then wasted much of their contents; but they soon learned to hit one end against some hard body and pick off the bits with their paws, and if they cut themselves once with any sharp tool, they would either not touch it again or handle it with the greatest caution. Lumps of sugar were given them wrapped up in paper, and sometimes a live wasp was put in to fly them, so that to hastily opening the paper they got stung; but after this had once occurred they always held the packet to their ears to detect any movement.

"Where is the ba——"

"Just around to the left, sir. By Jove," the clerk continued, "the delegates are beginning to come in."—The Call.

WHAT THE DISEASE WAS.

Dumley came into the dining-room and, casting a sweeping glance over the table, jammed down into his chair and muttered under his breath:

"Liver again, of course. We've had liver every morning for two weeks."

"What's the matter, Mr. Dumley?" asked the landlady; "ain't you feeling well this morning?"

"No, madam," he replied, shortly, "I am suffering with liver complaint."—Phila. Eve. Call.

MORTAR FOR MASONS.

"I can't finish plastering your house until I get more sand," said a plasterer to a groceryman the other day.

"How much sand will you require?" asked the groceryman.

"About three bushels will do, I guess."

"Here, John," said the groceryman, "roll out another barrel of that brown sugar and send it up to my new house. I want to keep the plasterers at work."

"That won't do," said the plasterer.

"Why, isn't that good sand?"

"Not very good; and besides, those bees in the garden will be constantly trying to suck the sweetness out of the sand after it is plastered on the walls."

"Not much, my friend. Guess you don't know my sugar. If the bees suck any sweetness out of it they will do some of the dangdest hardest sucking you ever saw!"—Paris Beacon.

A MATCH.

Mr. Clewdrop was slowly walking down Alabama street when he saw one of his friends wildly striding toward him.

"What is your hurry?" asked Mr. C., catching him by the coat.

"Don't stop me!" yelled the other, struggling to get free, "turn me loose."

"Anything wrong?" gasped Clewdrop.

"No, no, but let me go."

"What are you rushing so for?"

"Oh, hang it, I'm walking for a match."

"If that's all," smiled Clewdrop, feeling in his vest pocket, "I can give you one without your walking yourself death for a match."—Atlanta Constitution.

MEMORIAL, NOT FOR MEMORIAL.

"You look like a poet," laughed the funny editor, as the handsomely dressed youngster entered.

The boy smiled and began fumbling in his pocket.

"Maybe you write songs, too," suggested the newspaper man.

"Yes, sometimes," was the answer.

"Have you got one for me?"

"Yes, I think I have."

"Is it sung by long or short meters?"

By this time the young man had fished out a document, which he threw down, yelling excitedly:

"Neither, my friend, it is sung by the gas meter."

It was a gas bill for $30.—Atlanta Constitution.

NOT CONVINCED.

New York Broker—"No, dear, I can not take you to Saratoga this year."

His Wife—"You can't, indeed? I should like to know why."

"I can't afford it."

"The idea! Why, the Stimpsons are going to Newport just the same as usual, and Stimpson has failed, too."

"Exactly, my dear, and I haven't."

"Well?"

"Why, I have to stay at home and pay my debts."—Phila. Eve. Call.

WHAT BECAME OF HIM.—It has been stated by Capt. Galton, in his work on "Healthy Dwellings," that a new house, containing 100,000 bricks (each brick soaking up from 7 to 10 per cent. of its weight of water), contains, as a reasonable calculation, 70,000 gallons of water in it. All this quantity of water has to be removed by evaporation, and the rapidity of this process will depend on the tension of the vapor at a given temperature. The rate of [illegible] most through building materials depends upon their texture and [illegible]

CHILTON VIEW.

Issued Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., JULY 17, 1884.

Many will support Cleveland though it opposed his nomination.

Ex-Gov. David P. Lewis died at his home in Huntsville the 3rd inst., after an illness of two months.

About forty newspapers classed as republican or independent are already rated as anti-Blaine and the list is daily growing.

The notorious S. S. Renfroe, of Sumpter county, escaped from the jail at Tuscaloosa last Monday night by burning a hole through the floor.

Benedict Arnold's descendants are now among the most highly esteemed residents of Leeds and Grenville, Canada.

A railroad in which the cars run upon a single rail has been so successful in Africa that one like it is to be built in France.

The Bank of Mobile suspended on the 8th inst., after a prosperous career of sixty-five years. It is said that depositors and correspondents will be paid in full. Mr. Winston Jones is assignee.

The Bank of Mobile which recently suspended was the bank in which it had long been the custom of the State Treasurer to keep money on deposit for interest payments. The custom was abandoned a few month's since in the very nick of time.

The bridegroom in an Oregon wedding was 19 and the bride 46. Moreover, the man was handsome and the woman plain. But he had been for a year a herder on a lonely range, without a feminine face of any kind to look at, and when she visited the place with some tourists, the courtship was rapid and resultant.

It is estimated that the various colleges and high schools of the country have graduated 3,000 pupils within the past three weeks. They may be divided off about as follows: Lawyers, 500; doctors, 500; ministers, 100; mechanics, 900; base-ball players, 1,890. Of the latter 490 will develop into ward politicians; the other ten will become noted in their profession. Of the physicians four-fifths will prove quacks. Of the base-ball players every man will be a star.

Congress by its committee has decided to unseat Gen. Shelley of the fourth district and give his seat to ex-judge George Craig the republican contestant. It is possible by party management to keep Gen. Shelley in his seat to the end of the congress, and it will probably be done. The decision of the committee was a surprise, for there is no doubt but that Shelley was elected. There has sprung up a strong opposition to Shelley in his district among the Democrats and this had a great deal to do with the decision.

The River News: "The devil is broke loose in Cherokee. Warrants were issued here yesterday for 7 men who, it is charged, shall under the influence of liquor, go to the widow Sartin's booby on Sandy creek, Sunday night last, and assaulted and attempted to ravish her and her two daughters, and would have succeeded had it not been for the interference of Mr. Vest and his son, neighbors, who came to their relief, hearing their cries and appeals for help. It is said that Mrs. Sartin and her daughters are ladies of virtue and good character, and this outrageous assault upon them is sadly deplored by the good citizens of that community."

A new novel of Boston make has a heroine who lost her beauty by disease and spends years afterward in regretting and idealizing the woman she was. She inspires a young relative with this same regard for her former self, and between these they form the hypothesis that there is a seperate immortality for such stages of individual existence as she passed through before she became plain and old. They then seek to communicate with the lost one through a trance medium, who "materializes" the lost beauty before their eyes; then the medium dies in the presence, and the materialized woman is taken home by the bereaved, who treats her as a sister, and is engaged to marry the young man who invented this singular form of separate immortality.

Cleveland and Hendricks.

Grover Cleveland, of New York, and Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, have been presented to the people by their delegates in convention, as the standard bearers of the national Democracy. Cleveland was nominated on the second ballot of the convention, receiving a vote of 683. Necessary to nominate, 533. Hendricks, of the "old ticket," was given the second place unanimously. With such a ticket the success of the national Democracy is already assured.

The National Democratic Platform.

We give the following synopsis of the platform of principles upon which the national Democracy decided to take its stand at the Chicago convention.

While the platform is verbose to the last degree and has somewhat of the fault of the Republican party's platform as seeming a bid for all votes from all men, its declarations are Democratic and appeal to our admiration and love of both party and country.

It declares in favor of gold and silver, and paper convertible into coin on demand.

It declares for a more liberal commercial policy that will restore our flag to the high seas.

It declares for a free ballot and a fair count untrammelled by bayonets.

It opposes sumptuary laws and laws that will interfere with individual liberty.

It declares for the greatest freedom to the laborer.

It believes the public lands are the people's heritage and not the spoil of thieves.

It declares against the further incorporation of alien and servile races into our body politic, a little demagoguery excusable by the need we have of California's vote.

In its declarations concerning an "American Policy" it makes a stirring appeal to every American citizen.

Grover Cleveland with a platform less vigorous and broad would be haunted in his dreams by the spectre of defeat. Grover Cleveland, standing upon this declaration of principles and policy, may well turn a smiling face to the east and watch with hopefulness for victory's coming sun.

The Reform Governor and President to Be.

Down in the obscure town of Caldwell, Essex county, New York, there stands yet a little two-story and a half white house with wooden shutters, and there in the year 1837, was born Stephen Grover Cleveland, now Governor of the great State of New York. He has only the most shadowy recollections of it, for when he was three years of age, his father, who was a Presbyterian minister, with a large family and a small salary, moved by way of the Hudson River and the Erie canal to Fayettville, in search of an increased income and a larger field of work. Fayettville was then the most straggling of country villages—about five miles from Pompey Hill where Seymour was born. Here the boy Grover Cleveland first went to school in the good old-fashioned way and presumably distinguished himself after the manner of all village boys in doing all the things he ought not to do. One thing appears to be indisputable. He at the age of fourteen had outgrown the capacity of the village school and expressed a most emphatic desire to be sent to an academy. To this his father as emphatically objected. Academies in those days cost money. Besides, the elder Cleveland wanted the lad to become self-supporting by the quickest possible road. In Fayettville was the country store, where the pastor with a large family had considerable personal influence. Fifty dollars to be paid the boy the first year, and if he proved trustworthy he was to receive $100 the second year.

IN A COUNTRY STORE.

One can easily enough picture the employment if one knows what a thriving country store is. Its duties ranging with scarcely time for intermediate soap and water, from dealing out mackerel and molasses to cutting off cotton print enough for the village belle's new dress. There is a tradition comes from Fayettville, not at all ill-defined, that young Cleveland in two years proved himself so trustworthy that his employer used all their eloquence to get him to stay on indefinitely. The exact significance at this time of the Fayettville record may be judged when the writer after taking some trouble to unearth it finds it to be a record of simple, answerving integrity and untiring loyalty to the interests of the boy's employers. The most painstaking search among two generations fails to discover any flashes of genius in that country store or any memorials of eccentric talent in that country village. But there is unimpeachable testimony that whatever the boy's hand was given to do he did with all his heart and that he left behind him the reputation for bravery, fidelity and candor that has outlived all these years. If certain little home simple traits deify time. In truth these seem to thrive and grow with it.

The removal of the elder Cleveland to Clinton gave Grover the long-wished-for opportunity to attend a high school, and he pursued his studies industriously until the family moved up on the Black river to what was then known as the Holland Patent—a village of five or six hundred people—fifteen miles north of Utica. The elder Cleveland preached but three Sundays in this place, when he suddenly died. Grover first heard of his father's death while walking with his sister in the streets of Utica. This even produced the usual break-up of the family, and we next hear of Grover Cleveland setting out for New York City to accept a small salary the position of under teacher in an asylum for the blind, where at the time the since well known Gus Schell was executive officer.

He stayed here two years, and it has been found possible to discover the same indelible record of hard work, faithfully performed and well remembered by those who were cognizant of it, and who are still alive. From tending country store to teaching the blind is a long way on the road to self-discipline. But to teach he did not believe was his mission, and consequently at the expiration of two years he abandoned it and literally started out to seek his fortune—only reversing the usual order, and instead of coming to the great city, he left it.

He was admitted to the bar in 1859, and was appointed Assistant District Attorney of Erie county in 1863. He was drafted while serving his term as Assistant District Attorney, and furnished a substitute. At the close of his term he was nominated for the office of District Attorney of Erie county, but was defeated by L. K. Bass, Republican.

He was elected Sheriff of Erie county in 1869. At the close of his term as Sheriff he resumed the practice of law. Two years after ward he was selected as the reform candidate for Mayor of Buffalo. The campaign was a vigorous one, and he was elected by the largest majority ever given in Buffalo.

In Buffalo he was a prominent figure. He was a member of the Buffalo Club, Vice-President of the City Club, and one of the Vice-Presidents of the State Bar Association.

His election as Governor by a majority of nearly 200,000 was a surprise to even his firmest friends, and was partly in consequence of the fact that many Republicans either voted for him or remained away from the polls.

In person the Governor is a little above the medium height, well proportioned and portly. His thin dark hair is tinged with gray, and his eyes are dark. He wears no whiskers, but a heavy, dark moustache. Notwithstanding the number of preachers in his family, he has not been prominent in religious matters and has, since his manhood, devoted nearly all his time to the law. He is a bachelor.

Tammany Will Support the Ticket.

NEW YORK, July 13.—A special bearing the Tammany delegation back from the Chicago convention, rolled into the Grand Central depot about 5 o'clock this morning. "I have nothing whatever to say at present," said John Kelly, to a reporter. "The organization to which I belong, has taken no official action in regard to Mr. Cleveland, and therefore, I am not at liberty to say what it will or will not do. When the committee on organization adjourned several weeks ago, it adjourned to meet again in September. It is doubtful whether anything will be done before that time. Good morning." Mr. Kelly hurried into a cab, slammed the door and was driven away.

Coroner B. F. Martin did not know certainly what position Tammany would take, but gave as his opinion that the ticket nominated at Chicago would be supported.

Police Justice Patrick Duffey was equally uncertain as to Tammany's ultimatum with regard to the ticket, and said the matter would have to be "talked over" before they could make their final decision.

The second detachment, which arrived soon after, contained police commissioner Sydney P. Nichols and orators W. B. Cochran and Thomas F. Grady. They refused to make any statement.

It was said that enthusiastic receptions were given to the delegation all along the route and that at Utica Mr. Kelly made a speech in which he said that Tammany would act in the future as she had in the past and support the ticket.

OWENSBORO, Ky., July 14.—At two o'clock this morning a crowd of masked men forced open the doors of the jail here and hanged Dick May, a colored prisoner, charged with the crime of rape. The jailer, R. M. Lucas, while the hanging was in progress, fired from the balcony of the jail, killing one man and fatally wounding Dr. Lockhart. The crowd then fired on the jailer, wounding him so seriously that he died this morning.

The Herald and the Times of New York will both support the national Democratic ticket.

River and Harbor Appropriations.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—The following are among the principal items for the Southern States in the river and harbor bills as finally agreed upon: Mobile harbor, $200,000; Tombigbee river, $25,000; Black Warrior river, $2,000; Cumberland river, above Nashville, $50,000; Tennessee river, above Chattanooga, $3,000; below Chattanooga, $250,000; St. Johns river (Fla.) mouth, $15,000; upper St. Johns, $5,000; Pensacola harbor, $55,000; Savannah harbor, $300,000; Savannah river, $10,000; Altamaha river (Ga.) $15,000; Chattahoochee, Georgia and Alabama, $35,000; Coosa, Georgia and Alabama, 50,000 dollars; Charleston, S. C. Harbor, 250,000 dollars; and the following in Virginia: Norfolk harbor and its approaches, 25,000 dollars; Elizabeth, 6,000 dollars; Appomattox, 25,000 dollars; James, 75,000 dollars; Mattaponi, 2,500 dollars; Rappahannock, 2,000 dollars; York, 20,000 dollars; Danube, 5,000 dollars; Staunton, 2,500 dollars.

Senator Pugh's amendment to the river and harbor bill, which has passed both houses, and goes to the President, appropriates 50,000 dollars for the warrior river above Tuskaloosa. The original bill appropriated 12,000 dollars for the river below Tuskaloosa. Mr. Pugh also got through the Senate the hundred thousand dollars which the Senate Committee struck out of the Tennessee river appropriation, so the Alabama items in the bill as it becomes law, are the same as when the bill passed the House with the exception of Mr. Pugh's Warrior ammendment. Mr. Pugh has been very watchful of Alabama's interest in this matter, and certainly Alabama fares well in the river and harbor bill.

Extraordinary Nerve.

Columbus Enquirer]

An instance was related to us today which well illustrates at once genuine Spartan courage and deep affection. About six weeks ago little Belle Ferguson, the daughter of the night watchman at the Columbus and Rome depot, had both legs terribly lacerated in the turn-table, the skin being so far separated that her physicians, Drs. Jordan and Ticknor, told the family it would be impossible to make the parts heal unless fresh bits of skin were grafted on the ugly wounds. As soon as this was known to Belle's brother Reggy, a lad twelve years old, he stepped up to the physicians and promised to be on hand any time the next day and let them cut the necessary skin from his arm. At the appointed hour he met the engagement, bared his arms and by means of knife and scissors four pieces of skin were taken from his arm and transplanted to his sister's wounds. The skin is growing finely. Carlyle says one must have a brother in order to know what it is to have a friend.

It is not all of life to live nor all of death to die.

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once!

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county at the election in August next, and respectfully solicit the support of my friends and fellow-citizens.

EDMOND H. LOWE, JR.

We are authorized to announce

JONATHAN BICE

as a candidate for the office of Sheriff of Chilton county, at the ensuing August election.

We are authorized to announce

WILLIAM M. WILSON,

as a candidate for the office of Treasurer of Chilton county. Election in August.

We are authorized to announce

RILEY M. HONEYCUTT,

as a candidate for the office of Tax Collector of Chilton county, at the approaching August election.

We are authorized to announce

K. WELLS

as the candidate of the Democratic party to represent Chilton county in the lower house of the Alabama Legislature. Election in August.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Master Will Adams presents the VIEW with some fine "Indian" peaches.

Miss Lee Pou, of Autaugaville, is on a visit to friends and relatives near Clanton.

Mr. T. J. Vinson, formerly a citizen of our town, spent Saturday here attending to the sale of some real estate.

Rev. J. B. K. Spain, of Vanderbilt University, delivered two excellent sermons in our churches the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Brooks, of Verbena, are attending the meeting of the Baptist State Convention at Tuskaloosa.

The weather is so warm that the average citizen needs nothing now-a-days in the way of "gear" save a linen duster and a pair of boots.

The Coosa river section of the county is said to be solid for the county Democratic ticket from W. N. Jones' residence down to the line.

If you want any job printing done, call on or address Graham & Wagner at Calera. Their work is neat and stylish and their terms are low.

Mr. Will. D. Lanier, now a promising young business man of the promising young city of Anniston, visited his parents at this place this week.

What has become of "Bijou," our Maplesville correspondent. We want to know what he thinks of the political outlook in his neighborhood.

If we could read the secret history of our enemies, we should find in each man's life sorrow and suffering enough to disarm all hostility.—Longfellow.

See the new double-column advertisement of the Calera Iron Works. Send your machinery to Calera to be repaired, and save freight and delay.

A list of appointments for public speaking is published this week. The people should arrange so as to be able to turn out en masse and hear the speakers at one or other of the different appointments.

A gold medal for best scholarship in Clanton Academy during the past session was awarded to Miss Emma Boykin. Master Berry Cast stood next best, and was a close competitor for the award.

A barbecue and public speaking out on the Pratt Saw Mill road on next Saturday. Judge Falkner, our candidate for the Senate is expected to be on hand and deliver an address. A regular all time Democratic rally may be expected.

Died, in this county, on the 13th inst., of congestion, Miss Annie Eddings, aged about thirty years. The deceased was a sister of Messrs. Newton and Ezekiel Eddings.

DIED.—At Tuskaloosa, Ala., recently, of congestion, Capt. Joseph B. Eddins, at an advanced age. The deceased was a highly respected citizen of the community in which he lived, and he was a man whom to know was to love and to honor. While attending the burial of a son, he was stricken down himself, and not many hours passed ere his soul took its flight to that far off shore from whence no traveler returns. A man among men, Capt. Eddins was a power for good wherever known, and the good that he did while living will live after him in the memory of the friends who knew him, and could appreciate his worth; and who loved and honored him for his sterling qualities of head and heart. He leaves a numerous posterity to mourn his death and to reverence his memory.

Public Speaking.

Hon. Jefferson Falkner, nominee of the Democratic and Conservative party for Senator, 15th district, and Hons. Wilbur F. Foster and Richard H. Powell will address the people of Chilton county, at Calliervilla, Monday, July 21st.

Jemison, Tuesday, July 22d.

Coosa News.

KOWALIGA, July 11, 1884.

Editor Advertiser: Crops are tolerably good where they have been worked. Some of them have not been worked and the grass has injured them. There has been much sickness and several deaths from bowel diseases. Politics seem to be very neutral at present in this section. Would like to know when and where the Congressional convention meets for the 5th district. [Verbena, August 5th.—ADV.] We are for Col. Williams first, Foster second. We don't want Bulger. Will not have Darby if we have to import one. M. BIRMINGHAM.

The Congressional Convention will meet September 3d, and not in August as our contemporary has it.

The First Soiree.

Prof. Bush will give his first Soiree to his patrons, pupils, and friends on Friday evening, commencing at 8:30 o'clock, and he adopts this method of inviting the public generally. The very best of music will be on hand and a good time guaranteed all who may attend.

Mr. S. A. Blassingame has moved his mill to his switch and house building is going on there for the accommodation of the mill hands.

If you want to have a good time dont fail to attend Prof. Bush's soirée on next Friday night at the Court House.

Prof. W. C Carpenter has a night class in book keeping at the Academy.

The South Orthodox.

Gath's Dispatch.]

The chief difference between the North and the South is to be found in the conservatism of the latter, which has not become accustomed to many of the ideas so freely talked of in the Northern Democracy—such as the ultimate rights of labor. The question involves the negro as well as the Irishman. If Butler's theory of eight to ten hours a day were a law, it would extend to the Southern plantations also, where in many places, the old slave hours still constitute the day's work.

The South is perfectly orthodox on all old subjects, such as religion, authority and woman. They perceive that in the North is a slightly changing view of the ultimate relations of employed and employer. Butler is the pioneer of this view which is summed up in the idea that capital has been getting too much out of the common product; that there is too much luxury on one side of the division and too much squalor on the other.

The white laborer, with his Socialistic ideas, is rare in the South, and they never want him to appear there with these ideas. So Butler has his organization yet to make; the Democracy is not ready for him. As a wire-getter he can beat any of them, and he can received on the platform with mingled cordiality and respect, especially by Morrison and Vilas.

Look Out for the Postal Laws.

A lady of this city mailed a package about the 12th inst., to Atlanta, Ga., and concealed therein a letter, which is a violation of the postal laws and regulations of 1879. A Postoffice Inspector at Atlanta discovered the concealment of the letter and returned the package and letter to the postmaster here with instructions to collect ten dollars together with the balance of the postage. The postmaster here called upon the lady, and after hearing her explanation, accepted a statement from her, and also wrote a letter himself to the Inspector at Atlanta asking that the fine be remitted under the circumstances as explained in her statement. The Postoffice inspector refused to do this and asked that the amount be collected from the party and remitted. The postmaster here has acted very kindly in the matter in his endeavor to have the amount remitted by the Department.

We publish this incident to show how careful our people ought to be about complying with the postal laws. A great many violations occur from ignorance, as was no doubt the case in this instance but that is no excuse in the eyes of the law. No letter should ever be concealed in a package, as one is first-class and the other fourth-class matter.—Selma Times.

Bills the President Would Not Sign.

WASHINGTON, July 7.—Six measures, which had been passed by Congress during the last ten days of the session, failed to become laws by reason of the withholding of the President's approval. They were all private relief bills. Four of them embodied a feature of the Fitz John Porter bill which led to the veto of that measure, namely, the erecting of an office by Congress, to be filled by the person named in the measure. They were for the relief of Gen. William W. Averill; for the relief of Benjamin F. Pope; for the reinstatement of John M. Quackenbush as Commander in the navy, and authorizing the appointment and retirement of Samuel Kramer as Chaplain in the navy.

BIRMINGHAM, July 11.—Mrs. Thomas Rowland was instantly killed, and her two daughters seriously injured by lightning, near Springville, in this county, on the night of the 9th. Seeing the storm approach she, with five little children, descended into a cyclone pit under the house. The lightning struck a tree in the yard, the roots of which ran into the pit, and the fluid followed the roots with fatal results. The infant in the arms of the mother at the time she was struck to death was not injured.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.
From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, Drowsiness after meals, Dizziness, Constipation of bowels, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A dull, heavy sensation, as if something had been forgotten, Fluttering of the heart, Debts before the eyes, Highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and dose symptoms will positively prove that Tutt's Pills have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin, and vigorous health. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

"My father is fabulously wealthy," ...then a boy to the Milwaukee Sun, ...ising raised as a millionaire, and yet he ...ots me to learn a trade, and work like ...ordinary mechanic. He could get me ...in a wholesale business if he wanted ...where I could rank with first-class ...iness men, and that is what I want, ...t he insists on my going to work and ...ning my own living, as though he ...s poor, and every time I get a little ...sty of mother, and get out and have ...with other sons of rich parents, ...k a few bottles of champagne, ...ve and make a fuss, just as ...ather was going to ruin him financially. You seem to be kind to boys, ...d always have something good to say ...me—I ask you to advise me, and ...also lend me ten dollars till I ...some money of mother."

...go to work at the trade ...father wants you to, and wait until ...ve that ten dollars, enclosed in ...card. You are evidently a ...block, and you think you know ...than your father does. You idiot, ...the best friend you have got, better than your mother, who slily gives ...ney to spend for champagne. He ... you amount to, and he ...placing you on your own ... the only thing that will ...m shame. He knows that ...to set you up in a wholesale ...you would get the big head in ...s, and spend the whole receipts ...concern in having a big time ...the boys. If you are weak enough ...nd the money your mother gives ...of her pin money, to place you ...ns of a business would be to ruin ... He knows that you do not amount ...any more than Grant's sons, who were ...up in business, owned the earth for a ...or two, busted and ruined their ...her and many of his friends, and are ...w looking for a job, with no trade to ...fall back on. Had Grant compelled his ...s to learn the tannery business they ...ld now go to work in a tannery. ...ur father wants you to be in a posi... so if he loses his wealth you will ...t have to go to the poor-house. Probably he does not intend that you shall ...ork at a trade always, but he wants you ...o learn a trade, and if you learn it ...ell, so you can manage a business, and ...now that you have any sense, instead of ...being a cypher, he will set you up in the ...business that you understand, from having ...it from the ground up. Here, ... take that cigarette out of ... and listen. Do you know ...ts and most successful ...ndries, machine shops, ...institutions, and so forth, ...commenced in the black-...and learned the business so ...by can now manage it, and ...every detail?

We remember a young man, son of a reaper manufacturer, who, twenty-five years ago, surprised all his friends by coming out of school and going into his father's shops, with a leather apron on, ...some of the dude boys, such as you are, ...hadn't have sense because he ...four ...foundry, when his father ex-...was ... they saw him go from the ...to the wood-work shop, and ...the paint shop of the reaper ...factor ... they thought he didn't ...know ...business. But he did. He ...knew ...than all of us. He finally ...to the ... The ... of the reaper works, ...mittee was a success, and his pants ...no doubt ... ...om colors of paint, ...ected. ... father has practically re-...work, and the son that ...strong ...ed to think didn't know ...district ...well off, is the manager of ...this ... turns out several million ...he ...arth of reapers every year, and ...go into any department of the ...ness ...and tell at a glance whether ...men ... doing their duty, and ...boys who laughed at him twenty-five ...ears ago, say he is one of the best business men in Wisconsin. His father is ...alive, and the young man is ... thoroughbred. He could ...on going into a foundry, ...could have got money of his mother ...go on a tool, and he could have been ...about such a monumental ass as ...you seem to want to be, if he hadn't had a good head, and a sensible father. Now, your father is very likely a good deal such a man as the father of the young man alluded to, and he wants you to go to work and find out if there is any vinegar in you, or if it is all skim milk. If he finds that you take hold of a trade as handily as you now take hold of a bottle of champagne, and will learn it from one end to the other as easily as you now learn to be a fool, and show that you are worthy of being set up in business, you need not be alarmed. That father of yours will see what you amount to sooner than you will, and before you know it he ... buy your employer out, and surprise you by coming in the shop some ... and ... you are bending over a piece of work, and tell you that you can change your clothes and go into the office and take charge of the business. Then you will be prouder than if he had set you up in business before you knew anything but to spend money. The men you have worked by the side of will be proud of you, if you have been a gentleman while learning your trade, and they will stick by you, and your business will prosper, and you will blush when you think of your vain days when you wanted to be a businessman and a speculator, and a lazy loafer because your father was rich. Don't like the picture? If you do, go in work next Monday morning at seven o'clock to learn that trade. If you don't, point to the office next Monday morning after that ten dollars and we will kick you down two pairs of golden stairs so quick you ... has been a proposition ... this kind boy of a mule, ... body is puzzled by water, ... by truth.

NEVER SPLASH STAKE.

Published from Boston to Chicago. Makes a Record on the First Day.

At the entertaining conversationalist John Splan has no superior. His story of how he graduated from the position of "rubber" to that of driver is worth repeating. "I was rubbing horses for Dan Mace," said Splan, "and one day an old gentleman who had taken a great deal of interest in me came along. 'Why don't you get a horse, Johnny,' he said, 'and be a driver yourself?' I explained to him that it was almost impossible for a boy who had no influential friends to obtain a trotter. 'I have got two,' he said, 'my favorite team, Twang and Sting, and, if you like, I will let you train them.' Of course I accepted his proposition eagerly, and lay awake half that night thinking over my good luck. The next morning the horses were sent to the track, and, boy like, I wanted to begin operations on them at once. So I harnessed Sting up to a sulky that I borrowed for the occasion from one of the trainers, and while this was being done took Twang out in the field inside the track, and turned him out to graze, tying him by a long rope to a strong stake which I drove into the ground. Then I went back and began driving Sting.

"I warmed the old horse up pretty well, and started to drive him a full mile. We got along very nicely until we came to the place where Twang was nibbling grass. The old horse saw his mate coming at a very unusual rate of speed, and as we neared him he gave a loud whinny and started in hot pursuit. When he had galloped the length of the rope that held him, there was a sudden stop. The stake to which the rope was tied held its own, and the result was that Twang turned a double somersault and broke his neck. Unconscious of the destruction that was going on behind me, I drove Sting down the homestretch at his best rate of speed. After completing the mile and stopping the horse, I found that the unusual exercise had made him dead lame, and from the way in which he limped it seemed highly probable to me that he would never recover. While bemoaning this fact a small boy who had witnessed the catastrophe to Twang came up and informed me of it. The next morning the old gentleman who took so much interest in me, and who regarded me as a bright and promising boy, came out to the track. He buried Twang, led Sting limping home behind his buggy, and my career as driver began and ended in one day."

A Hit That Hart.

THE HUMORISTS IN TROUBLE OVER A JOKE ONE PLAYED ON THE OTHER.

While Joel C. Harris ("Uncle Remus") was sitting at his desk in the Atlanta Constitution editorial rooms, Col. Ezra K. Watterson, the well-known planter of Long Cane, accompanied by a friend entered and demanded to know by what authority Mr. Harris was making such free use of the name of his daughter, Miss Dora. The demand completely nonplussed the genial author, and the irate father took his hesitation as an evidence of guilt. Hastily throwing his hand back to his hip pocket he was grasped by Col. Sam W. Small and with much difficulty was restrained. Pulling out a memorandum-book he took therefrom the following newspaper paragraph:

"Joel C. Harris, the humorist of the Atlanta Constitution, is about to be married to Miss Dora Watterson, the youngest daughter of Col. Ezra K. Watterson, the richest cotton planter in Georgia."

"It is a shame, sir," said the old gentleman, "that such use should be made of a lady's name. My daughter, who is shortly to be married to one whom she has known from childhood, has been thrown into serious illness by the publication."

Mr. Harris, on examining the paragraph, found no difficulty in tracing it to Eugene Field's column in the Chicago News. The Chicago humorist had inadvertently hit upon the names of genuine people. When convinced of this Col. Watterson declared his intention of having satisfaction, even if it made necessary a trip to Chicago. He is just the man to carry out his promise

The Uselessness of Profanity.

"Suppose you are given to a habit of profanity," says Prof. Swing; "you enter into conversation with a man who never swears; in other words a gentleman. By and by you begin to perceive that he is the superior man. Your remarks have a tame, flat, feeble sound to your own ears. Your cheeks begin to burn with a sense of your friend's excellence. Your part little oaths sound rough and coarse and vulgar, as they are. They begin to drop out of your sentences, ashamed to remain in the company of good, honest English words, until, as you discover that you are carrying on your part of the conversation without swearing you feel easier, and your intellectual stature is increased by a foot. Just observe this, my boy, and see if I am not right.

"But you will rip out some time; oh, yes, in some way you will. I know some good men—some of the best in the world—who will 'confound it,' and in New England even a deacon has been known, under a terrible strain, to 'condemn it.' But as a rule, my son, don't do it. It isn't an evidence of smartness or worldly wisdom. Any fool can swear. And a great many fools do. I, my son? Ah, if I could only gather up all the useless, excellent, ineffective swears I dropped along the pathway of my life I know I would remove stumbling-blocks from many inexperienced feet, and my own heart would be lighter by a ton than it is to-day. But if you are going to be a fool just because other men have been, oh, my son, my son, what an ass, what a dimwit, what a hopeless fool you will be."

SAILORS' SNUG HARBOR.

THE HOME OF POOR JACK AS IT IS FOUND ON STATEN ISLAND.

How the Veteran Old Sailor Whiles Away Their Last Days Before Going Aloft.

[From the Century for June.]

One portion of the basement of the Sailors' Home on Staten Island, that from which daylight is debarred, is given over to the blind men. Here they all all day, working, telling stories, or listening to some old mariner who, so crippled as to be unfit for work, is glad to read aloud to them for a few pence a day. Under the eaves of the westernmost building a score of cripples are busy upon fancy netting and work-baskets. Looking out upon them from behind the iron bars of "the cage" is the only prisoner in the institution. His mates say he is neither ill nor demented, but is troubled with a complaint which is as common among landsmen as among sailors. They describe it as "pure cussedness." One of its symptoms was that upon arising in the morning he was in the habit of going from room to room and pulling the aged and decrepit mariners out of bed and otherwise disturbing the peace.

Those who make baskets, mats, and nets are by no means the only artisans in the institution. Scattered through the building are men engaged in the construction of finely modeled miniature vessels, while others paint marine views on clam and other shells. This taste for art is carefully fostered by the governor, who recently gave old Captain Davis carte-blanche to decorate the walls of the reception room with nautical designs, sea-serpents, and other marine monsters; and through his instrumentality at least one of the old masters has been placed in every room—in some cases two.

Ranged side by side at long tables in a well-appointed dining-hall, the weather-beaten old salts are served by a number of their comrades, selected by the governor especially for this service. There is no stint—no fixed quantity or ration beyond which an inmate may not go. The tables are loaded down with well-selected, well-cooked food, and it is a pleasing sight to watch the fine old fellows as they "buckle to," so to speak, in dead earnest. That nice distinction that obtains on shipboard between the position of inmates of the cabin and the forecastle has no place here. Men who have been disabled while serving before the mast sometimes find it difficult to comprehend this, and it is said that instances are by no means rare where newcomers have shown an inclination to keep on the lee-side of the dining-room in deference to the presence of captains under which they have served. They soon outgrow this, however, and learn to sit at the table beside their former commanders with composure. Thus it not infrequently happens that the once master of a great ship finds himself in company with men who, during the tempest and the gale, were wont to do his bidding. When skies are clear and freshening breezes drive the prow through glistening seas, the great warship strides haughtily past the peaceful merchantman or humble fishing-smack; but when clouds lower and tempests threaten, they seek alike the shelter of the same harbor, and ride side by side at anchor as members of one common brotherhood. So at Snug Harbor the captain, the inmate of the galley, and Jack before the mast forget their former stations. Shattered by the same gales, they have dropped anchor here till the storms of life are past.

The Fish Beds.

Prof. Ewart, of the Royal Physical Society, Edinburgh, has described an easy method of stocking spawning beds of fish. All that is required is an ordinary wooden tub and a shallow galvanised iron tray, twenty inches in diameter, having the bottom in two parts hinged to a central bar so as to open downward. The tray is to be placed in the tub, which is then filled with sea water. A number of flat stones are arranged in the tray and the water is then fertilised and the stones coated with eggs. This having been done, the tray is taken out of the tub and lowered to the bottom of the sea by means of four cords, two of which are attached to the rim of the tray and one to each half of the bottom. When the tray has reached the sea floor the cords attached to the hinged bottom are set free and the tray raised by the the cords fastened to its edges, the result being that the stones coated with the fertilised ova are left on the natural hatching-ground. By this process Prof. Ewart believes that the fishermen themselves could, without any trouble and expense to speak of, add two hundered or three hundred eggs for every herring taken from the sea, and thus do their best to restore the balance of nature which their operations had disturbed.

Debating Social Evils.

At the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held in Philadelphia, the Chairman of the committee, presented a report on marriage and divorce. It recommends that no divorces shall be granted except on grounds justified by the Scriptures, and also that a Commissioner shall be appointed to confer with the Governors of the States to endeavor to secure the enactment of uniform laws on this subject. The first part was amended, making it the sense of the Conference that divorces shall not be granted but for adultery, and that the guilty party can not be married again by any minister of the church. The report as amended was adopted. The committee reported a series of resolutions denouncing polygamy, and declaring it to be the sense of the Conference that it is the duty of the government to proceed without delay to enact laws such as will immediately deprive from political and official power in the Territories those who practice or advocate polygamy (sic civil or religious) right.

A TERRIBLE STORM.

Some of the Incidents Connected with One of the Darkest and Stormiest Nights of the Present Unusual Winter, the Engineer of One of the Leading New York Railroads Was Moving Westward from Albany. The engineer's headlight threw a strong reflection in advance, but the storm was so blinding it was almost impossible to distinguish anything even at a short distance. Under such circumstances instinct necessarily takes the place of sight. All seemed to be going well, when, in an instant, the engineer reversed his engine, applied the air brakes, and came to a full stop. Why he did so he could not tell any more than any of us can account for the dread of coming disaster and death, and to the wondering inquiry of his fireman, he simply said: "I feel that something's wrong." Seizing a lantern he swung himself down from the cab and went forward to investigate. Everything appeared to be right, and he was about to return to his engine when his eye caught sight of a peculiar appearance at the joint of the rail next to him. Brushing the accumulated snow away, he looked a moment, and then uttered an exclamation of horror. The rails on both sides had been unspiked and would have turned over the instant the engine touched them. What inspired this attempt at train-wrecking is unknown, but it was presumed the confederates of some prisoners who were on the train hoped, in the confusion of an accident, to deliver their friends.

Engineer John Donohoe, of Albany, to whose wonderful instinct was due the salvation of the train, when asked by the writer why he stopped his engine, said:

"I can't tell why. I only know I felt something was wrong."

"Do you have these feelings often when upon the road?" continued the writer.

"No, very seldom, although for the past twenty years I have been in a condition to feel apprehension at almost anything."

"How is that?"

"Why, I have been a victim of one of the worst cases of dyspepsia ever known. I have not been confined to my bed, as like thousands of others, I am compelled to work whether able or not. Indeed, when it first began I had only a loss of appetite, a faint feeling that would not go away and a bad taste in the mouth, but I finally got those terrible craving and gnawing feelings that make life so unbearable and are known as general debility."

"What did you do?"

"I tried physicians until I became discouraged. I gave eight different ones fair tests, but none of them benefited me. I then tried proprietary medicines, but they failed, likewise. It looked pretty dark for me so far as any more peace or enjoyment in this world were concerned and I became terribly discouraged."

"You certainly do not look that way now."

"Oh, no, indeed, I am in perfect health now," was the reply, "and I propose to continue so. My nervousness is entirely gone; I can sleep nights; the aching numbness has disappeared the pale, sickly appearance has given place to the color of health, and I have readily put on flesh. This is what has been accomplished by means of Warner's Tippecanoe. If I can be cured after a chronic illness of nearly a quarter of a century I believe all suffering in a similar manner can be restored by using the same great remedy."

Such is the testimony of a man who could detect and remove unseen danger on the road, but could not remove the dangers from within his own system until brought face to face with the great preparation above named which did so much for him and can do as much for all those who require it.

The London Bridge Peddler.

The famous deaf and dumb knick knack peddler who during the past 14 years attracted so much attention on London Bridge is dead, and the subject of the latest sensation. He died in the Southwark Workhouse, near the south end of the bridge. Despite his infirmities he managed to support himself by his small sales, and, securing official and police favor by the gentleness of his demeanor and the intelligence of his conduct, he was allowed to occupy the same post on the great thoroughfare from year to year. Before his death the peddler beckoned to his cot one of the hospital attendants, and terrified him by speaking to him. When the attendant recovered from his astonishment the beggar confessed that his dumbness had been feigned. He said he was a Swiss gentleman of fortune and belonged to one of the best families in the republic. When a young man he was betrothed to a beautiful and accomplished girl. He was possessed of a most violent temper, and in a lovers' quarrel over a trifle one day he so wounded the girl by the bitterness of his invective that she fell ill. The reproaches of his friends for his cruel conduct stung him so that he became melancholy from remorse and left home.

He then resolved to punish himself. He vowed to become a voluntary exile for 20 years; to earn his own living; leave his fortune untouched; keep his relatives and friends ignorant of his whereabouts, and go bareheaded and bare-footed in all weathers during the entire time, and to listen to no one and speak to no human being during the 10 last years of his exile. If he lived to complete his vow he meant to return home, and use his fortune and the remainder of his days in making his betrothed happy, providing she were alive and unmarried. He had rigidly kept his vow, "but," he cried, before he expired, "my time is not quite up, and I must die before it is. I have been punished as I deserved." Investigation, so far as it has gone, has proved that the peddler's story is entirely true, and his family in Switzerland have been made acquainted with his death.

Wants to See Him by Daylight.

The Boston Advertiser says: A society belle, who usually goes to the North Shore for the summer, but this year takes a bolder flight, remarked the other evening to her confidential friend:

"I am glad Mr. X. is to be at Mount Desert when we are this summer. Do you know, I've been acquainted with him for three years, and I never saw him by daylight. He used to come over from the hotel evenings, and then in the city I met him at parties, and he dallied in the evening, and positively I've known him pretty well for all that time, and never saw him except by gas-light. I must see him in the daytime, for I've almost made up my mind to marry him, and it is best to examine him in all lights."

However absurd this may seem on the face of it, it is as a matter of fact strictly true, both the lady and the gentleman being pretty well known in fashionable circles in the city.

The transformation of slave labor into free in Brazil was commenced in earnest as long ago as 1871, having been inaugurated by a law known as the Rio Branco law dated Sept. 28 in that year. It has ever since gradually progressed, is still progressing, and has produced no social, political, financial, or economical disturbance. In addition to the action of the State, private benevolence consolidated large numbers of slaves every year, and the record for the province of Ceara alone 15,000 have been freed during the last five years by this agency.

"Do you have these feelings often when upon the road?" continued the writer.

CHRISTIAN PLAINTS.

My love has gone out in the wide, wide world,
Without farewell to me saying;
Oh, fair young singer! my heart's doll is!
Oh, sun that made my life so bright,
For thee I am ever praying.

Scarcely had time to look in his eyes,
And now the sweet dream ended!
Oh, love, why makest thy flames so sweet?
Oh, love, why makest the heart so to beat?
If it break—it cannot be mended.

Where has he gone—The world is so wide—
Is full of deceptions and strangers;
Ah, me, to Italy he hath hied,
Where women are fair and false beside,
God guard him amid all dangers.

VICTOR VON SCHEFFEL.

MY FRIEND'S STORY.

"Many years ago," said my friend, "in an idle moment, I went into the Old Bailey, when a scene of more than extraordinary interest was about to take place in that theatre of human misery and degradation.

"The prisoner at the bar was a young man of about twenty-four years of age, tall, of a dignified and prepossessing air; his dark hair hanging disorderly on his shoulders and about his brow, gave a singularly wild and mournful expression to features that seemed to indicate feelings such as felons never possess.

"The indictment was read; it contained an account of a most atrocious crime, committed under circumstances of ingratitude that deepened its horror. He was, it appeared, a 'young Scotchman, the son of a minister; he had distinguished himself in the University of Glasgow by his talents and acquirements, and had been ordained a minister of the Gospel. While at college he had formed an acquaintance with the son of a Highland laird, of nearly the same age, and of an amiable and cultivated mind. The father of this youth, a man of large property, had been so pleased with the friend his son had made, that he had obtained for him a church in the Highlands, on condition that he should previously accompany his son in his travels over the Continent.

"They had accordingly gone to London, and, having there received large remittances for their proposed journey, were just going to set off, when one night the youth was found murdered in his bed, and appearances seemed to point the prisoner as the perpetrator of the deed. They were briefly these:

"Some days before they had been heard talking in their room in a very loud and angry tone of voice. The subject of the dispute was, it was supposed, a lady, whose name was mentioned. The words 'jealousy' and 'revenge' were distinctly heard; a visible coolness was observed for some days after, till the evening of the murder, when they gave an entertainment at their lodgings to friends who had come to bid them farewell. An evident change had taken place in the behavior of the prisoner, who affected to be obsequiously attentive to his friend. But the principal witness for the prosecution was an old game-keeper who for many years had been in the employ of the deceased, and who seemed almost overpowered with grief. He stated that on the fatal night, while sitting in the kitchen smoking his pipe, in company with a woman who acted as charwoman in the lodging-house, he heard a noise in his master's room, as if two persons were struggling. He alarmed the landlord, entered the room, which was open; a light was on the floor and still smoking, and the prisoner was found hanging over the bed—a bloody knife, which was known to belong to him, by his side, his hands bloody, his face pale, and betraying all the marks of a guilty and disturbed mind. The prisoner was skilled in anatomy; he had been heard to describe the quickest and surest way of destroying life; and the place of the wound corresponded with the description. Moreover, some notes paid by a banker to the deceased were produced in court by a woman, whom the prisoner had been seen to visit, from all which proofs it satisfactorily appeared that this unhappy youth, corrupted by vicious company, and, by feelings of jealousy and the temptation of money, been instigated to murder his friend.

"While this melancholy detail was given, the prisoner appeared almost sinking under contrition and shame. When the case had been closed for the prosecution, the judge, in the most impressive manner, called upon him for his defense. He stood up, and, after a short but violent effort to conquer his feelings, he addressed the bench with a voice at first weak and tremulous, but afterward collected and full:

"'My Lord and Jury: You call upon me for my defense; I have none to make, yet I am not guilty. You have just heard a circumstantial account of an atrocious crime, supported by a weight of evidence which, I fear, will leave upon your minds no doubt of my guilt. But it is all wrong. The woman who appeared in evidence never received the money from me, it was my fear of the dangerous influence which that woman had gained over him, that was the cause of my temporary coldness of my friend, and which his better feelings, and his confidence in the purity of my intentions would soon have conquered. The money which the woman had got after by art, but to prevail upon her to break off her connection with him. As to that horrible night, I will state all I know of it. I was awakened by a noise in my friend's room, which was next to mine. I listened, and all was still. Then I heard what must have been my poor friend's last dying cry, but which I thought was only the involuntary moan of disturbed sleep; still, a vague but irresistible feeling of alarm impelled me to the room. By a light that was dimly burning, I discovered my friend in the condition you have heard described,' Here his voice faltered. 'I have no recollection of what followed. When I came to myself the room was full of people, but I saw no one; I saw only him who lay in that bed.

"'You have here a plain, unvarnished tale. I have no hopes that it will bear down the mass of evidence against me. I know I am the only one who can be charged with the crime. Still I must say: Pause, beware of shedding innocent blood. May the Lord, in His unerring wisdom, move your minds as seemeth best to Him: for in Him is all my trust—man cannot save me.'

"The jury, after half an hour's consultation, returned the verdict—guilty. He heard it respectfully, but unmoved. Sentence was pronounced in the most impressive manner by the judge, in a long and pathetic address, often interrupted by his emotion. He expressed no doubt of the prisoner's guilt, and lamented the abuse of talents, the corruption of a mind once innocent, and earnestly recommended the unfortunate youth to confess his guilt, rather than rashly persist in protestations of innocence which could no longer save his life, and which precluded all access to divine mercy.

"The prisoner then arose, and never did I see a more expressive and commanding countenance. It was no longer the despondency of fear and the gloom of hopelessness, but the triumphant, yet calm and modest look of one about to receive the crown of martyrdom.

"'I bow with submission,' said he, 'to the judgment of my country, and, though I die innocent, I return thanks to the venerable judge who has just pronounced the awful sentence for the Christian tenderness with which he has treated one seemingly so deeply involved in guilt as I am; the jury, as men, could have returned no other verdict; far be it from me to murmur against them; my doom was sealed in heaven. May the sacrifice of my life atone, if not for a crime of which I am innocent, at least for the many faults I have committed. It is impossible not to recognise in this the hand of the Supreme Disposer of events. I did at first cling to life, and cherish fond hopes that I might yet be saved and restored to my beloved father and the esteem of good men; but I think I am now resigned to die, with a firm hope that, if my days are cut short in their prime, if my hopes of happiness and honor have been blasted, and an ignominious death is to be my lot, it is wisely and mercifully decreed, in order to redeem me from the errors into which I have fallen, to purify my soul from those feelings of self-applause and pride which had made me seek human praise rather than peace with God.'

"During this affecting address the hall was hushed to perfect stillness, and it was scarcely concluded when the deep, solemn silence was broken by these words: 'I thank Thee, Oh, God, he is innocent!' This exclamation, which struck upon the hearts of all, proceeded from an old man who sat not far from me, and who had fallen on his knees in an attitude of prayer, his hands convulsively clasped together; his lips were moving, but his eyes were shut. It was his father. A young and beautiful girl had thrown her arms round the old man's neck, and hung on his breast, pale and motionless. The prisoner started at the well-known voice, and instinctively sprang forward toward them; but he recollected his position, and, with a look which went to my heart, sat down, and a flood of tears came to his relief. It would be difficult to paint the effect which so melancholy a sight had on the assembly; tears flowed from every eye. When the jailer, who came to lead the youth to the condemned cell, approached, he started.

"The execution was to take place the following Monday. My late and respected uncle, whose life's work was to visit the prisons of London and plead the cause of Christian truth, was superintending, by his attentions to the young Scotchman. But he [illegible] me that he went there not to administer but to receive; and that the edifying behavior, the humility and resignation of the interesting youth, left no doubt of his forgiveness to all who visited him. Efforts were made, but too late, to save him. 'But my friend,' said my uncle took me with him to the prison. At that time I was young and very thoughtless, but I could read there an impression which neither years, nor sorrow, nor joy have effaced, and which will remain to my dying hour.

"On reaching the scaffold the condemned man ascended the platform with a firm step, supporting, rather than supported by his father. He addressed a few words to the crowd, told them he was innocent, that he hoped his innocent blood would stop the vengeance that had pursued his family, trusting to the mercy of Him who died for all men. After this his father and he kneeled down in silent prayer—no words could have expressed the feelings of their souls; then, while the executioner was adjusting the rope and covering his eyes, they sang a psalm together, in the most heart-rending accents. The crowd was still as death and nothing was heard but these last supplications of the old man and his son mournfully ascending on high. The sing ceased—the living mass below heaved back with a simultaneous motion of horror—the happy soul had fled.

"A few days after, while the poor father was yet too weak to bear the fatigue of a journey, the seizure of a house breaker led to the detection of one of the darkest plots that was ever contrived by guilty man. The ruffian, knowing there was no help for him, confessed that he had been introduced into the house by the old game-keeper, and committed the murder according to his directions. The father heard this account with little emotion. 'I knew,' said he, 'that he was innocent—I shall soon be with him. Still, I am glad for his sister's sake, that the world knows it; but it could not appreciate, it could not feel, the dignity of innocence.'

"This calamity excited universal sympathy. Government offered to settle a pension on the man. He rejected it with disdain. 'Shall I take the price of my son's blood?' said he. They felt for him, respected his sorrow, and pressed him no further. A simple and elegant monument erected over the bodies of the two victims, recorded in a few words their miserable end. The old man returned to Scotland where he died not long after his arrival, and his daughter soon after followed him to his tomb."

THE NATIONAL BANKS.

A Resolution to Investigate Those of New York City.

A Washington dispatch says: The severest condemnation was expressed be members of both parties on a resolution offered in the House by Mr. Broadhead, of Missouri, authorizing an investigation of the national banks of New York city. His request for unanimous consent to its immediate consideration was objected to by Mr. Hewitt, and the resolution was promptly referred to the Banking and Currency Committee, where it will be buried forever.

Mr. Hewitt says he objected to the consideration of this resolution, because he knew that such a measure was only calculated to create distrust, unsettle business and precipitate trouble upon innocent business men. "Even if an investigation was necessary," said Mr. Hewitt, "a Congressional Committee is the very last body that should be entrusted with such a mission. The soundest bank could not stand the excitement which would follow." He had no criticism to make regarding Mr. Broadhead's action, for he believed him to be only actuated by the purest motives. Yet he certainly made a great mistake and must have been badly advised.

Mr. Potter, of the Banking and Currency Committee, said he was astonished that Mr. Broadhead should offer such a resolution at a time when the banks were safely over their troubles and there was no reason to suspect that any of them were unsound. From what he had heard, however, he believed that Mr. Broadhead had been deceived by designing people. He felt very much pleased that Mr. Hewitt had made an objection, and, for one, he would do all in his power to see that the resolution was never reported; even if reported, though, that would not help it now, as it was not a privileged matter and would have to go on the calendar.

It is known here that interested parties in New York were aware that this resolution would be offered and that they have been on the lookout for it for several days in order to benefit by the effect it was expected to produce in unsettling the stock market. Its reference to committee, however, killed the scheme completely.

A Little Account

An occupant of one of the offices in the city building in Rutland told, Friday evening, a little anecdote that we reproduce. "The first part of the story took place thirteen years before the main event that I am going to tell you about. I was a young fellow and was taking a girl to ride. We drove into Greene to a party in winter. We got out at the house where the party was to be, played games for half an hour, kissed the girls, perhaps, and then wrapped up and drove home. Well, sir, thirteen years afterward, a number of years ago, a man dropped into my store. He said: 'How d'ye do,' and so did I. He said: 'Your name's E——, aig't it?' Said I, 'Yes.' 'Let's see,' said he, 'you was out to my house to a party, wasn't you, once?' 'Yes, sir, and had a good time,' said I. Then the old fellow drew a piece of paper out of his pocket and passed it to me. 'You owe me a little bill, don't you? It's all writ down on the paper.' The paper was a bill of forty cents for hiring the horse, thirteen years before. I made him sit down and reckon interest before I paid him, and then I told him to get right out of the store."—Rutland (Vt.) Herald.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

WORDS OF WISDOM FROM PARADISE HALL.

A Janitor who Got into Trouble by Not Attending to His Own Business.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

A few days ago a cigar firm forwarded to the Lime-Kiln Club several sample brands of cigars to be smoked at the next annual election. The Secretary returned the vote of thanks tendered, and Brother Gardner carefully laid the cigars away on the shelf occupied by the bust of the late Julius Cæsar. All of a sudden the lot turned up missing. Samuel Shin was quietly spotted, but no questions asked. Some more cigars were laid on the shelf, and this time the thief betrayed himself. Samuel was the man. He came down to make ready for the meeting, and seeing the cigars he took possession. He was gamboling around Paradise Hall, a smoker in his teeth and a broom in his hand, when something happened. The cigar went off. So did Shin. Elder Toots who had arrived, found the Janitor lying under seven benches and thirteen chairs. He had lost all his front teeth. His tongue was half roasted. His eyebrows looked like December foliage, and one of his peepers was closed so tight that it couldn't be pried open with a crow-bar. In brief, Samuel was a gone-up, used-up specimen of the African race—not quite dead, but far enough gone for a medical college to want to steal his body. He was hauled out into the ante-room and deposited upon a heap of scrap-iron, and as the members came in each one intuitively reasoned that something had happened, which would be explained in due time. Brother Gardner felt of Samuel's pulse, tickled his left ear, and then opened the meeting and said:

"De man who minds his own bizness has got all de work dat should be cut out for one puson. De man whose fingers itch to pick up articles he hasn't paid for will sooner or later make a mistake and burn his fingers. It am noffin to me who gits drunk nor who keeps sober, so long as neither one damages me. I doan' keer a straw to know how de nayber on my left libs widout work or position, an' it am none of my bizness how de one on my right spends de ten dollars he airns each week.

"Gem'len, Samuel Shin was 'pinted janitor of dis hall under de impreshun dat he was strictly honest. It has bin conclusively proved dat he am an embezzler. Had he taken all our money it would have bin in order to call him sharp an' keen an' be satisfied to git half of it back an' let him go free. As de sum total am only a few shillings justice yells fur vengeance. Samuel owns a mule. Befo' leavin' dis place to-night he must gin us a bill of sale of de animal. We must have a chattel mortgage on his cook stove. If he has any wages due him we must serve a garnishee. Dar must be no let up—no unworthy feelin's of mercy. Samuel Shin am deposed from his position as janitor, an' de tranquil Cadaver Blossoms am 'pinted to fill out de unexpired remainder of de term. Judge Oshoots, Kyann Johnson and Porus Davis am nominated a committee to remove de body on a cheap cart to his home on Grove street, an' de reg'lar bizness dat has called us together to-night will now proceed to begin."

Romance of a Humorist.

HOW ROBERT J. BURDETTE WOOED AND WON "HER LITTLE SERENE HIGHNESS."

Carrie Burdette, wife of Robert J. Burdette, who recently died at Ardmore, Penn., was an invalid from her marriage and the great humorist cared for her as he would a babe, giving her every possible comfort. Mrs. Burdette was the daughter of Auren Garnett, of Peoria, and was married to Burdette fifteen years ago. Her father was opposed to Bob, and he made the course of true love anything but smooth. Bob was a clerk in the post office at that time and Carrie was a beautiful young lady, but with a will of her own that more than matched that of her father.

One day the old man commanded her to discard Bob. She refused, and a violent altercation ensued. Carrie had an undefined trouble with her heart that this precipitated. She was stricken down with a spasm. They sent for Bob and he found her pale and lifeless on the sofa. Here she managed to express a wish that they might be married before she died and a clergyman was sent for. The marriage of the great humorist was celebrated amid tears and sighs, the orange blossoms absent and only the pallor of the dying face looking out from the heap of pillows. Strange to say, she immediately began to recover and she soon regained her former strength. With it, however, was an unaccountable malady, which in time caused her death.—Decatur Republican.

Sheriff Joseph Pegram, who has been investigating stable poisoning, says that to him one of the greatest mysteries is that a poisonous snake cannot poison one of its species, especially its own congeners, and only slightly any venomous snake; but it kills innocents, snakes quickly. A vigorous cobra can kill several dogs as fast as it can bite them down before the bite becomes important, and then the immunity is of brief duration, for the virus is rapidly re-secreted

DOUBLE BRILLIANTS.

"How do your diamonds compare with the genuine?"

"Put them side by side and you can't tell them apart. Let me show you some samples," and the dealer turned to his iron safe and got out a box of uncut "diamonds" of about three carats each. Handing the scribe a dainty pair of tweezers he requested him to examine the stones before the light. The reporter picked up one of the gems as carefully as though it were a $20,000 stone, and held it before his optics. It sparkled brilliantly, was cut perfectly, and anybody but an expert would suppose it to be a genuine diamond. The reporter was tempted to slip the stone up his sleeve, until he asked the price of it, when, getting the reply, "One dollar," he dropped it as though it was poisonous.

"Here are some thirty beautiful specimens," remarked the merchant as he unfolded another paper and laid before the scribe half a dozen stones about the size of a door-knob. These are worn principally by gamblers on account of their extraordinary size. "They come a great deal higher than those others I have shown you. I sell these at $2.50 apiece, or a pair of them for a serio-comic singer's earrings at $4.25. They are exceedingly brilliant, you see, and at night shine like a locomotive headlight. Here are a lot of little diamonds that sell from 25 to 75 cents each." "Are those made of paste or fabacales?" "Oh, no; I never deal in paste goods. These stones come from the Sierra Nevada mountains, and are cut and polished in New York; and some are even sent to Paris to be cut and are then returned to this country. They are the best imitation of the diamond made, and retain their brilliancy forever. Not being as hard as the diamond, care has to be taken in not getting them scratched." "You remarked before that the trade was simply immense. I suppose that the second or middle class of society are the greatest purchasers of these imitations?" "That's where you're wrong. The principal buyers and wearers of 'snide' diamonds are those who move in the highest society, and I'll tell you the reason why. Let a lady who counts her wealth by the hundreds of thousands appear in public with a pair of six or eight carat 'diamond' earrings, and the people never suspect that they are 'snide.' They imagine that because the wearer is wealthy she would never degrade herself by wearing $2 diamonds, but such is the case. Hundreds of times have I matched genuine diamonds for high-toned ladies, and it was actually impossible to tell them apart. You see, when a person of wealth wears 'snide' diamonds, you can hardly make people believe that they are anything else than genuine; while, on the other hand, let a person in more reduced circumstances wear genuine diamonds, and everybody they meet will turn up their noses and remark that they are 'snide.' So that is the reason the people of wealth can throw on so much style with very little expense."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

How a Bank was Saved.

"I saved a bank from bursting once myself," remarked a seedy looking old chap, as he laid down a morning paper which he had perused second-handed. "I admit I ain't very wealthy now, but years ago, before my troubles come on me, I had large interests in manufacturing and banking. I was president of the bank in our town when there was a little panic and the people made a run. I went in to see how they were getting along, just as the excitement began, when I found they couldn't stand it until the close of banking hours. The directors wanted to suspend, but I objected. I told 'em to leave it to me. Happened it was pay-day at my shop. Hustled up there, put a flea in the engineer's ear, and in five minutes the engine broke down. The men were glad to get a holiday, but wanted their money. I told 'em we didn't have the currency ready, but would give 'em checks on the bank. My clerks made out the checks in a hurry, and weren't over-particular about losing any time figuring out odd cents. Well, my two hundred and more men rushed for the bank, and by the time the big depositors had heard of the run and got around there was a big line in front of 'em. It took three hours to pay off my men with currency from my safe at the shop, which I carried in the back door of the bank. In that three hours we gained enough money to pay every dollar due to our depositors, and the bank was saved."—Chicago Herald.

Lucky Bob Swan.

The Ottawa (Iowa) Democrat tells this story: Bob Swan, of this place, who served as captain in the Thirteenth Indiana Infantry, applied for a pension, which was granted, with $6,240 back pay. To complete the proof his discharge papers were needed, but after a search in the records they could not be found, which reminded Bob that at the time his company was mustered out he was on detailed duty elsewhere and was accidentally forgotten. Discharge or no discharge, he was never mustered out, he will draw $50,000 as capital's pay.

COMPLICATED DIVORCE LAWS.

In a Decree in Texas a Bar to a Suit in New York State.

[From the New York Herald.]

In relation to the mixed condition of the divorce laws of the several States, a case of interest was submitted to Judge Andrews, in Supreme Court, Special Term. The suit was brought by William Gibson Jones against Lula V. Jones. The parties were married in June, 1875, and separated in 1877, the wife leaving her husband on the ground of cruelty, and going with her father, Ward H. Wakefield, to Camp county, Texas, where the latter had purchased a plantation. After a residence of two years in Texas the wife commenced a suit for divorce in that State on the ground of cruelty, and obtained a suit in her favor on May 9, 1883.

The husband had appeared and defended the suit, and during that period, the wife alleged, the cruelties on his part were repeated. When the decree was given against him the husband appealed and carried the case to the highest court of the State, where it was affirmed in an opinion in which the principal act of cruelty—that of an unfounded charge of adultery against the wife—was characterized as one to which no virtuous and refined woman should be compelled to submit without redress from the courts. In the meantime the husband brought the suit in this State, which was still pending at the time his wife got her decree in Texas, and which was only then reached for trial. After the decree was rendered Judge Andrews granted permission to the wife to plead it in the suit of her husband here as a part of her defence.

On the trial counsel for the wife offered in evidence a certificate of the proceedings of the Texas court, including the decree; and claimed that the husband having appealed and contested that suit the judgment therein formed an absolute bar to the present suit.

The introduction of the decree was opposed by counsel for the husband, who claimed that the record showed the wife had remained just long enough in Texas to come within the requirements of the statute as to residence; that she never had lost her residence in this State, and that as the suit was based on acts of cruelty alleged to have been committed in this State this court had a right to inquire into the jurisdiction of the Texas court and to reject the decree if it thought proper.

Judge Andrews said the question was an important one, in view of the present state of the divorce laws, and reserved his decision.

The Niece of President Buchanan.

Great wealth and exalted station are no safeguard against the commonest ills that befall humanity. Harriet Lane, the niece of ex-President Buchanan, has lost her husband, Henry E. Johnston, the Baltimore banker. Sorrows have fallen thick and fast upon her in recent years. When I visited at Wheatland more than a year ago, says a letter writer, they were then in mourning for their eldest son, James Buchanan Johnston. The other son was convalescing from the same disease that had carried off his brother, and the parents hurried with him to Europe in the hope of saving his life. They had scarcely reached Paris before he, too, was dead.

The parents never recovered from this terrible blow. They closed their splendid house in Park avenue, Baltimore, and the wealth that had been largely expended in hospitality was devoted to charitable purposes. In memory of their boy, they founded and endowed the Harriet Lane Johnston Hospital for girls and a training school for nurses. Mrs. Johnston withdrew from the society in which she had been most prominent and rarely left the house except on missions of religion and mercy. Mr. Johnston failed rapidly in health and retired from the control of the great banking house. His death now leaves his distinguished widow lonely indeed. Their sons were bright, manly lads, full of mental and physical vigor, and gave promise of growing into noble manhood.

The last time I saw Harriet Lane in the streets of Baltimore grief had worn deep lines in that handsome face that seemed so attractive and so dignified under its crown of abundant white hair. One of her chief solaces in recent years has been the issuing of Curtis's life of her uncle. She was to him more of a daughter than a niece.

A Lieutenant's Feat.

"What do you consider as the greatest feat in the history of literature?"

The old lieutenant thought a moment, and then said: "I think it occurred when George Sibley was ordered in a hurry to carry a secret wire from a director's south—to hide it, understand. He looked over the room, and found a speaking tube. After trying vainly to push the wire down through the angles of the tube, he went into the cellar, cut a trap and caught a lizzard. He then tied a string to the lizzard's tail, and with the scheme safely down the tube. When the string was through he made the wires stay to it. They were then readily drawn through to the room three stories below, where the terminus of the tube was."

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER THIS WEEK.

NO CUT IN SALARIES.

The employees of a Michigan railroad had been trembling in their boots over a threatened reduction of wages, when an agent dispatched from headquarters passed along the line and said to the various station officials:

"I am happy to inform you that there will be no cut in salaries."

"Good. My salary is so small that I could hardly stand a cut of 5 per cent."

"The road is not making any money, but the President feels that every employee is earning his salary, and that perhaps the fall business may bring us out all right. Put your name down for what you can afford."

"On what?"

"Why, on this paper. It is a subscription to buy the President a $2,000 silver tea-set as a token of the esteem of the employees. Let's see? You get $600 per year. If you put your name down for $50 you will be giving all you can afford. Rest easy, Mr. Blank, there will be no cut in salaries."

HOW THE KANGAROO ACTED.

"So you went to the circus, Mary?'

"Oh, yes, and enjoyed myself very much."

"Did you see the kangaroo in the menagerie?"

"I did, and felt sorry for it. Poor thing, it is dying, isn't it?"

"Why, no. What put that into your head?"

"The way it acted. When I saw it it seemed to be on its last legs."—Somerville Journal.

DO GET OFF.

Here's a bit of conversation between Belle, six years, and Frank, five years:

Belle—"Frank, do get off that sofa with your feet. Mamma paid a hundred thousand dollars for that sofa, or a great deal of money, anyway."

Frank—"Oh, yes! get off that sofa 'cause she paid money for it. Get on the floor; sit on the carpet; she paid money for the carpet. Go out on the grass; that cost money to plant it, too. Get on the ground; she paid for that, too, didn't she? Hang yourself in air; that's the only thing round here you can do." All this in one string, as sarcastic as possible.

A SAD, SAD CASE.

Bill Simpson and Jim Dobson are two Austin society young men, who have heretofore lived by their wits; they have no money of their own, but manage to live by borrowing and gambling. Not long since Bill Simpson's rich uncle died and left him a fortune. Shortly afterward he met his old chum Dobson, who asked:

"What has come over you, Bill? Before you came into possession of all that money you were the jolliest fellow in Austin, always in a good humor and full of fun, but now that you are rich, you sit around as if you had the toothache. What has come over you, anyhow?"

"Oh, Jim, you don't know—you can't possibly realize how it hurts a fellow to have to spend his own money."—Texas Siftings.

ONE THAT HE KEPT.

For peace and good will of the men therein, Boston clubs excel. There was one little tiff in one of the clubs the other day that has created much amusement. The men had a row, one with another, that was really, I imagine, sharper in words than in mind. At any rate, one told the other that there was no use for him to talk club manners and requirements.

"To my certain knowledge, you've broken every rule in the club but one since you belonged to it."

"Indeed! And what's that?"

"Fooling the servants."

IN NEW YORK.

Stranger—"I say, sir, here's a ticket you can have cheap."

New Yorker—"Ticket for what?"

"Ticket for Europe; first-class passage."

"I don't want to go to Europe."

"What are you hurrying so for then?"

"I'm late to dinner."

"Oh! beg pardon. I'm a steamship agent, and I thought from your haste you must be a bank president."—Phila. Call.

WHY HE "MOVED."

Miss Fret to young Oneoftheboys, who had been indulging a little what had a somewhat "rahmeant" breath:

"Did you ever stand near a passing train?"

"Oh, yes, lots of times."

"Well, didn't it take your breath away?"

"Not at all, my dear Miss Fret."

"Well, what will, then?"

Young Oneoftheboys felt his breath taken away by the question and eloped at once.

"I don't believe that I'll fine you," said a police judge, to a young man who had been arraigned for drunkenness.

"Thank you, Judge, for this is the first time that I was ever arrested for being drunk."

"What!" the Judge exclaimed. "The first time? Why, I should fine you if a man who was never drunk should have better cause to get drunk the first time."

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., JULY 24, 1884.

Twenty-one thousand widows of soldiers of the war of 1812 are stated to be still drawing pensions from the Government.

A Maine Republican has just passed away at the ripe old age of 110 years. Some Republicans had rather die than vote for Blaine.

The Greely party which was the last to attempt an Arctic exploration, and which had been given up for lost has at last, been found and rescued from the very jaws of death by starvation.

A negro who had attempted to commit rape upon the person of a little white girl near Tuscaloosa, last week, was taken from the jail at that place on Thursday night last and hung to a tree on the principal street of the city.

Now let the tragic chapter of Arctic exploration close. General sympathy for the survivors of the Greely expedition is extended to them, and the fate of the dead is learned with sorrow, but at the same time, there is an indignant sentiment against the foolhardy spirit of adventure which leads men to leave wives and children and sacrifice the lives which belong to others in this fruitless fight against nature.

We take great pleasure in publishing to the world that Democracy is in a more healthy condition in Coosa county to-day than at any time since 1871. The people have taken the matter into their own hands and are determined that our county shall be placed beyond the peradventure of defeat by Republicanism or Independentism; and when the people speak their voices will be heard.—Rockford Enterprise.

On the 2d day of July, 1881, (the same day that Garfield was shot) a negro man by the name of Ed Zimmerman, shot Mr. Peter Barnett, at Marble Valley, in Coosa county. The negro immediately fled and has been at large ever since until yesterday, when he was arrested at Greensboro by Capt. R. H. Gulledge, F. A. Gulledge and James M. McDowell, of Coosa county. They reached here with the prisoner on the afternoon train from Selma and left on the South & North last night. A reward of $200 was offered some time ago for the arrest. Mr. Barnett, strange to say, lingered and died on the very day that Garfield died.—Advertiser.

Support the Nominees.

There are many reasons why the white citizens of Chilton county should vote the entire ticket as presented by the Democracy for their support. These reasons are too patent and too many to need mentioning. We will present a few which we think should be considered.

First, the ticket presented is a good ticket, composed of men who are known to be honest, competent, and faithful to the interest of the people of their county. They deserve your votes. They have been placed upon the ticket without solicitation upon their part, and are pledged to perform the duties of the position to which they will be elected, honestly, faithfully, and to the best of their ability.

Second, we should support the ticket because it is a ticket presented by representatives of the people in convention assembled. Let those who would talk and talk down the ticket because their especial choice is not upon it, read the communication of "Bijou," and ponder and reflect upon the fact that though a boat sent her delegates to the convention instructed to oppose nominations, yet the people of that beat, becoming convinced that nominations were the best, will give the ticket nominated their hearty support.

Third, and we will give but this one other reason. Suppose one of the independent candidates for representative should be elected. Let this be supposed. Such a representative would be wholly without a voice in the councils of the State and the party. He could do absolutely nothing. He would not be recognized by the Democratic majority as one of them, and would per force drift into the radical camp, where he might at least get some notice if no power. If we could elect all three of the independent candidates now running, Chilton county would still virtually be without a representative, for they could do nothing for her. This was demonstrated during the sitting of the last Legislature, when some half dozen or more "independents" did nothing but draw their pay, which in reality was about all they went there to do. They could expect no notice from the Democrats. We think, therefore, that it is far better to send one strong man to the Legislature than three weak ones, to say nothing at all of sending one weak one, and we can't send but one.

The ordinary stock in trade of the average independent candidate is spite for a convention which failed to appreciate his claims and every member of which is almost invariably better individually and politically than the independent himself.

Therefore let us support the ticket, vote it, and do all that we can honestly and consistently do to secure its election.

A New Era for the Democratic Party.

Boston Transcript.]

No candid Republican can fail to admire the courage and sagacity which induced the Democratic Convention to nominate Gov. Cleveland for President, despite Gen. Butler's enmity, the threats of Kelly and his mercenary gang, and the audacious attempt of presumptious motley labor organizations to control the result. The political foresight of the convention gloriously triumphed, in spite of all the strenuous efforts that interested demagogues put forth to obscure and mislead its judgment. Butler and Kelly have been told that they must support the candidate whose independent course has excited their bitterest wrath, or leave the Democratic party. Kelly never before was so unmercifully snubbed by a Democratic convention of which he was a member. Gov. Cleveland has been styled by Gen. Butler no Democrat, because he gave his official approval to measures designed to relieve the taxpayers of New York from Tammany's intolerable rule—measures adopted by a Republican legislature under young Roosevelt's leadership. This is a significant fact in political history. Now the National convocation of the Democracy invites the man whom Butler hates instinctively as a different style of politician from himself, and Kelly denounces for the blow he struck for true Democracy against Tammany, to the highest honors within its bestowal. Making all due allowances for the office hunger of the Democracy, it must be admitted that this procedure practically ushers in a new era for that party. It can go into the conflict without the support of elements from which it has heretofore derived considerable strength, but more discredit. The canvass from this day forward will increase in interest until the final decision next November. Whatever the managers of parties may do or not do, the independent voter will elect the next President.

The Democratic Speaking.

Col. R. H. Powell, Hon. Wilbur F. Foster and Judge Jefferson Falkner spoke to quite a large gathering of the citizens of Clanton on yesterday. They had spoken at Jemison the day previous.

Col. Foster was the first to speak. He is a speaker of force and eloquence. Though injustice may be done him in the attempt, a brief outline of his masterly address will be given. He began by saying that he was not present for the purpose of reflecting upon any citizen's loyalty or to denounce any for a want of patriotism. He thought it best we should all stand together as white men, if we would subserve the interests of the State and people. He said there were only two political parties, and defined the difference between them. By our own bitter experience we had learned of the principles and purpose of the Republican party, a party organized to oppose the best interests of the white people of the South, as its every public act has proved. He did not deny any man's right to independent action in a free country such as ours. Some of these independents may be men of honest intent and purpose. He was not here to censure them, but rather to reason with them. They were pursuing a suicidal and egregiously mistaken policy. He called attention to the condition of our State when the republicans were in power, a condition of hopeless prostration and wide spread desolation, which brought about the aligning of the white citizens of the State of all parties into one grand organization under the name of the Democracy to sweep from office a party whose sole principle was to fatten upon the spoils gathered from our over-taxed people. The party that disfranchised and imprisoned our leaders and filled our country with bayonets, committing the most daring and inexcusable outrages in defiance of the constitution, of statesmanship, and of justice.

The Republican party had dethroned intelligence and morality and elevated ignorance, superstition and slothfulness. From $7,000,000 our State debt had been increased by this hordes of vultures to over $30,000,000 within a few years, and the State was almost in insolvency. The Democracy came into power under Reunion, and a reduction in the expenses of government began. Under the benign influences of a Democratic administration of affairs now reigns progress, peace and plenty where once was almost despair. Col. F. then spoke of the evils of disorganization and independentism. He thought the convention system the best that had ever been established, as the surest way of obtaining the choice of the people; and it was the duty of every man to stand by the ticket, though his individual choice may not have been placed upon the ticket in every instance. It was impossible to get your choice in every office; but the ticket should be voted without a scratch, and it should be born in mind that when we weaken the Democratic party we strengthen the Republican party.

Col. Foster spoke for more than an hour. It is not possible to do justice to his address in such a brief array of points. He was followed by Col. Powell and Judge Falkner, both of whom delivered able and interesting addresses. Want of space and the lateness of the hour preclude comment upon them.

Judge Falkner.

Rockford Enterprise.]

We are pleased to note that Judge Jeff. Falkner, the nominee of the 15th Senatorial District, of which Coosa forms a part, was present with us on last Monday, and observed with great interest the proceedings of our county convention. Although he thought himself a stranger when he came among us, yet when the people began to assemble he found and recognized many faces with whom he was familiar forty or fifty years ago. Those who knew Judge Falkner in the long time ago, can best appreciate the intrinsic worth of the man. His old friends are not all that were pleased to meet him, but there were hundreds who sought an acquaintance with him and not one but was gratified at his having been nominated for Senatorial honors. At the close of the convention loud calls were made for Judge Falkner, whereupon he appeared upon the stand and delivered a short speech, which was well received and highly appreciated by those who heard it. Judge Falkner is certain to be elected, and no doubt will make a Senator of whom the district will be proud.

Night Shirts the Cause of Baldness Among Men.

We can't cure baldness, as a bald head is beyond help, but if those who have hair and desire to retain it will follow our advice they need never show a clearing on the top of their heads. The cause of baldness is the habit men have of pulling their shirts and night shirts off over their heads. There are some who will laugh at this idea, but it is not intended that they should, as this is not a funny article. This is business. The pulling of a shirt or a night shirt off over the head causes friction of the scalp, which in time sears the roots of the hair, and leaves a barren plain, a Sahara, forever after. Suppose the night shirt comes to a man's feet, there is from five to six feet to be drawn over the tender hair, which, kept up for a series of years, would wear out any head of hair. Add to this the friction from taking off the shirt, and the natural scratching of the head for ideas, etc., and the hair has no rest, and the wonder is that there is a man left who has a spear of hair on his head. Now the preventive is for men to walk out of their night shirts the front way. Women are never bald, and some sneering men account for the fact by claiming that women do not have brain enough to become bald. That is a campaign lie. Women have more brain and a better quality than any bald-headed man on earth. But they do not wear their hair off by pulling their garments over the head. They open the storm door of garments, and walk out into the light of day, and never disturb a hair. This we state upon information and belief, and if we are wrong we can easily be corrected. It is alleged that they get out of their dry goods different from men, and thereby make a great saving in hair. Taking all the facts there is only one sensible way for men who desire to retain their hair, and that is to break off the destructive habit of pulling their garments off over their heads. They may have to be instructed in the best manner of getting out of a night shirt without using the head for a pivot, but that can be arranged. Let societies be formed, classes if you please, and secure a teacher to illustrate how to take off a night shirt the front way. If our discovery is acted upon bald headed men will be unknown in the next generation.

Pearls of Thought.

Lost time is never found again. The future destiny of the child is always the work of the mother.

He is rich who is satisfied with what he hath—whether it be little or much.

Sudden expectations, which kindle the mind to a fever sometimes chill the heart to a frost.

How long, how slow, how inscrutable can be one man's fate against another's finding out!

Do nothing by halves. If a thing is right, do it boldly and well; if it be wrong, leave it undone.

Truth—the open, bold, honest truth—is always the safest, for every one, in any and all circumstances.

That state of life is the most happy where superfluities are not required and where necessaries are not wanting.

This is the law of benefits between men: the one ought to forget at once what he has given; and the other ought never to forget what he has received.

Mr. Alex. Hall an old and esteemed citizen of Montgomery, is stopping at the Clifton House.

Miss Lizzie Browden, of Montgomery, is visiting Miss Minnie Barrett.

Mr. C. M. Williamson, telegraph operator and ticket agent at Greenville, Ala., is here visiting his parents.

An excursion train for colored people was run from Wetumpka to this place last Friday. The village was live with negroes from ten a. m. until four o'clock p. m.

Mrs. Abbe. H. Smith, of Prattville, vice president of the Woman's Missionary Society, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Davis.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Brooks and Rev. Mr. Thompson attended the Baptist State Convention at Tuscaloosa, last week.

Mr. Geo. Cook, one of Montgomery's most enterprising young merchants, paid our village a short visit last Sunday. He has many friends and relatives here who will always give him a hearty welcome.

The Pratt Saw Mill Co. gave a barbecue to its employees last Saturday. The one for the colored portion was given at the mill, and that for the whites was at the end of the log road. At the latter, public speeches were made by Judge Falkner, Dr. Robinson, K. Wells, Esq., A. J. Hall, Esq., Jno. Barber, Esq., Col. B. J. Baldwin and last but not least, Capt. Jno. Clisby.

Mr. Clark Frizzell, of Mathew's, Ala., is here visiting friends. He was among the first who moved here from the prairies and returned. He is one of Builock county's most enterprising farmers and a good neighbor, we hope he may decide to move back.

We are sorry to note that Mr. J. T. Mullins has moved his family from this place to Jemison, Mr. Mullins moved his store there some time since and only decided to move his family last week. They are an excellent family and we regret very much to lose them.

THE Bookwalter Engine IS THE BEST MADE

It is the best engine for cotton gins, wood-working, planing, grist mills, planing and cider mills, threshing machines.

Burch, Logan Co., W. Va., 1882.

The 4½ horse power Bookwalter Engine bought March 31, 1882, is complete. We are well pleased with it. It drives a 24-inch grist mill, and grinds eighty bushels a day. It is easily run; any one can run one of them. It gives entire satisfaction; it is the thing for farmers to have. A. D. FERREL & CO.

I have the exclusive right to sell this engine in Chilton, Shelby and Coosa counties, and will sell to farmers and others on easy terms. I mean business. Will put the engine up and guarantee satisfactory work.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the widely-known Agricultural Author John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. M. V. Ford and L. Maria Cheeny. An original humorous department, illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Sheriff of Chilton county at the election in August next, and respectfully solicit the support of my friends and fellow-citizens.

EDMOND H. LOWE, JR.

We are authorized to announce

JONATHAN BICE

as a candidate for the office of Sheriff of Chilton county, at the ensuing August election.

We are authorized to announce

WILLIAM M. WILSON,

as a candidate for the office of Treasurer of Chilton county. Election in August.

We are authorized to announce

RILEY M. HONEYCUTT,

as a candidate for the office of Tax Collector of Chilton county, at the approaching August election.

We are authorized to announce

K. WELLS

as the candidate of the Democratic party to represent Chilton county in the lower house of the Alabama Legislature. Election in August.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

The election is very near.

Miss Josie Wainwright has a school in the Chandler mill neighborhood.

Mr. B. H. Brown is visiting friends and relatives on Mulberry, this week.

Mrs. Ashley and son, of Montgomery, are visiting relatives at this place.

Mrs. Lillie Craker, of Montgomery, is visiting Clanton, for the benefit of her health.

Mrs. Dr. Greene, of Talladega, is visiting her sister, Mrs. F. A. Hannon, at this place.

A child of Mr. and Mrs. Isaiah Gullahorn, of Cooper's, aged about two years, was buried in our cemetery on Monday.

Mr. W. T. Smith and family and Miss Bettie Falkner, of Mountain Creek, left Sunday night for an extended Northern tour.

Mr. Wm. Walker, our nominee for tax collector was in Clanton on Monday. We regret that we were absent at the time he gave the VIEW a call.

Read the new double column advertisement of Messrs. Slaton & McGlathery, of Birmingham. This firm make a specialty of selling and putting up machinery.

We do not publish the county ticket at our masthead because we do not approve such a plan though it is pursued by the generality of Democratic newspapers. This in reply to a number of queries.

The tightness of money matters at the present time, may have the effect of making things easier in the fall when the crops are disposed of. A cautiousness and carefulness in spending now should bring about plethoric pockets in the near future.

Mr. John C. Lawrence, who left Clanton two months since to take a course in the Louisville Southern business college, has completed his course and has accepted a position as book-keeper in the Falls City Jeans and Woolen Manufacturing Company's office.

Mr. Baker says he is going to be elected by the people of Chilton as their next representative. We hear that Mr. Hall says ditto of himself, and we doubt not that Mr. Barbour also expects to be elected to the same position. So if three of them are going to be elected to one little office, what a squabble will arise over the spoils when the four dollars per diem comes in sight. It is generally hoped that these three are to be elected to stay at home only, as well as altogether and entirely.

Mr. Herbert E. Wooley, of Selma, visited relatives in Clanton during the past week. He forfeited his sense and good taste by declaring that Clanton had more pretty girls to the square foot of dirt than any town in Alabama.

We have received a beautiful picture of the Southern Exposition, which opens at Louisville, Ky., Aug. 16th, and continues until Oct. 25th. The view is of the main building, which is one of the largest Exposition buildings ever erected. It covers thirteen acres of ground, and will be lighted throughout by five thousand electric lights.

Notice.

A meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee will be held at the Court house on Monday next, the 28th inst. A full attendance upon this meeting is important, as it will be the last meeting of the campaign.

S. T. BRITTLE,
Chairman.

W. H. LAWRENCE,
Secretary.

School Exercises and Public Dinner.

The closing exercises of Miss Fannie McMath's school will take place on Friday, August 1st. The patrons of the school and the citizens of the neighborhood of Benson will give a public dinner on the occasion. The political speakers of the county and district are especially invited. The public generally are also invited.

Public Speaking.

By request of the county executive committee, W. A. Collier, W. E. Johnston, and J. S. Edwards, Esqs., will speak at the following times and places in the interest of the State and county Democracy:

Jemison, Saturday, July 19.
Providence, Wednesday, July 23.
Mims X Roads, Friday, July 25.
Benson, Saturday, July 26.
Maplesville, Tuesday, July 29.
Kincheon, Thursday, July 31.
Verbena, Friday, August 1.
Clanton, Saturday, August 2d.

EDITOR VIEW:—Your last week's issue called attention to the fact that of late we have been silent on the political campaign now waxing warm. Politics not being our forte, we considered it wiser to let the campaign pass by unnoticed; but since we have been called upon for some information regarding the political status of our section, we will at least set forth such views as we have gleaned from different sources.

This section previous to the convention was opposed to nominations and sent delegates instructed to that effect; but since the convention decided on nominations, and presented a ticket that insured success, our anti-nomination men are coming over to the support of the ticket. We can easily see that such action is necessary for the success of the democratic party. Loyalty to the party also demands this. The important truth that every democrat should bear in mind is that a division of the democratic strength will give the county over to republicans. We must bear in mind that the republicans control a large negro vote. The negroes will poll at least one third of the vote cast, and there will be enough white republican votes added to insure the success of the republican ticket, in the event of a break in the democratic ranks. The question then before the people is, shall we support the democratic ticket solid, or shall we submit to republican control?

The people have the power to answer this question for themselves, and we sincerely trust that they will be true to the best interests of the county. The democratic nominees are representative men, fully competent to discharge the duties of the respective offices.

Let every democrat do his duty, and when we say do his duty, we mean that duty demands the support of the nominees. BIJOU.

Calliaville Item.

The grass is growing fast.

It is prophesied that there will be an overwhelming corn crop made this year in this community.

Mrs. Collier and her son, Mr. John Collier, have returned from Florida. The former delighted with the trip, the latter disgusted.

Well; we have not had rain in several days. Our farmers are killing grass "while the sun shines" instead of "making hay." Where land was fertilized, crops are excellent, and where not fertilized but well cultivated, crops are pretty good—we are trying to make every edge cut that can. Where oats grew, have been replanted in corn, and peas or sweet potatoes, where not converted into a pasture. Mr. J. Dubose kindly presented a sack of chufa plants to a widow, who has had them transplanted. Oh, how grateful she seems to be!

A bountiful crop of Irish potatoes and onions have been harvested.

We are feasting on fine vegetables, melons, milk and butter.

Our pastor was much encouraged Saturday and Sunday by a large and attentive congregations.

Rev. W. Green was prevented, by rain, from filling his last appointment—we hope to see him here next Sunday evening.

Hon. Jefferson Falkner, our candidate for the State Senate, spent the night with Dr. Callier a few days ago. The 21st we had the pleasure of hearing him and Hon. Mr. Wells and Mr. Wilson, speak.

Sweet potatoes are in the markets. The first one that was taken out of the ground weighed eleven oz. Raised on Mrs. Crum's place.

The picnic that was to be at Parnell's old mill 1st of August, is postponed, for an indefinite time, on account of the Sunday School Association at Plantersville.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken out of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup For Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA,

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Head Pain, Sometimes with Pain over the eyes, Fullness after eating, Fretfulness, Dizziness, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Highly colored Urine, A SCALY SKIN. For these and many other similar symptoms, TUTT'S PILLS are especially adapted, as one dose effects such a change of feeling as to astonish the sufferer. They increase the appetite, and cause the body to take on flesh, thus the system is nourished and by their TONIC ACTION on the DIGESTIVE ORGANS, REGULAR STOOLS are produced.

ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

THE PEOPLE KNOW A MAN.

I have used Tutt's Pills with Constipation, two years, and can say they are the best of all the many kinds of pills, and TUTT'S are the best that I have found for me. They have cleared me out and made me feel like a new man. I recommend them to all.

TUTT'S HAIR DYE.

HOW TO DRIVE OXEN.

A Westchester Farmer Discloses the Mysteries of His Art.

"Raising a yoke of oxen," said a Westchester county farmer the other day, "is a good deal like raising children. You can never tell how they are going to turn out till they get too big for you to control. Now, there's that yoke—gentle, peaceable cattle as you ever saw. When I first put a yoke on them I said to myself: 'Well, if I can make anything out of these steers I'll give up farming and make a business of breaking cattle.' How did I do it? Well, I'll be hanged if I know. A little physical exertion and a good deal of coaxing. Brush the dirt off that stump and sit down and I'll tell you something about oxen.

"The first thing is your breed. Now, if you would keep a Durham down you'd get a good ox, but Durhams grow too stocky. Fifteen or sixteen hundred pounds is about as heavy as an ox ought to run, but a Durham will go up into 2,000 pounds without an effort. Holsteins are open to the same objection. Aldderneys, Ayrshires and Jerseys are too light, even if they were not too valuable. Common natives make the best oxen. The animal is called a steer till it gets to be two or three years old. Then it's an ox. The breaking in of a spring steer begins the following fall. I tell you, a calf six or eight months old is a frisky thing as a rule, and don't you forget it. But they soon come to time. The first thing to do is to learn the animal to mind the gad. Get him quieted down, and then strike him lightly on the flank, and he'll go ahead. Strike him on the nose, and he'll at first turn to one side; but if you work at him a little while he'll learn that a tap on the nose means to back up. When you've taught him to back, you must teach him to 'haw' or 'gee'—that is, turn to the left or right. This training usually includes two animals which you propose to yoke together, and they are as near the same size and disposition as you can get them. Disposition and size have to be taken into consideration in deciding which animal you will place on the off or right side and which on the nigh. The driver walks on the nigh or left side, and if there is any difference in the size of the animals he wants the one furthest from him to be the highest, so he can reach him with the gad over the back of the nigh animal. Then he wants the friskiest one next to him, so he can look after him.

"In trying to find out the dispositions of the cattle the yoke comes into play. The yoke, you see, is in three pieces. The bar which runs across the neck is the yoke proper, I suppose, but the whole thing is called the yoke. The bows run around under the throats of the cattle, and are made fast by a pin in the bar. The bows are made of oak or hickory and the bar of basswood. A good yoke costs about $5. Farmers used to whittle them out in slack times during the winter, but machinery does the work now.

"When you first put a yoke on a pair of steers it scares them, but they soon get used to it; then you train them around the barnyard or up and down the road; touch the off animal on the off side and he'll come around toward you—that is, swing around to the left or haw; the nigh animal may feel the off one coming around and come with him, or you may have to tap him on the nose. He backs, and that brings him around. To 'gee' a yoke, or swing them off to the right, you go through the same manœuvre, starting off, of course, with the nigh animal. Simple enough it seems, doesn't it? But it takes weeks and months to break a yoke of oxen.

"You can begin breaking steers when they are six or eight months old, but they are not fit to use much till they are two or three years old. While you're breaking them you can use them for light work around the yard or for bringing up a sag of wood, but heavy work is liable to injure them."

"In what way are oxen superior to horses?"

"Well, they cost less to keep and for some kinds of work they are altogether better. On rough ground, where a horse would be in danger of breaking its legs, an ox is all right, and for logging they can't be beat. A good yoke of oxen—that is, a yoke well broken and neither too large or too small—is worth $150."

Who Pays for It?

Speaking about getting married, Harper's Bazar says: It is not etiquette for the groom to furnish anything for his own wedding but the ring and a bouquet for the bride, presents for the bridesmaids and the best man, and other tokens to the others. He pays the clergyman. He should not pay for the cards, the carriages, the entertainment, or anything connected with the wedding. This is decided in the high court of etiquette. That is the province of the family of the bride, and should be insisted upon. If they are not able to do this, there should be no wedding and no cards. It is better for a particular girl to go to the altar in a traveling dress, and to send out no sort of invitations or wedding cards, than to allow the groom to pay for them. This is not to the disparagement of the rights of the groom. It is simply a proper and universal etiquette.

At the altar the groom, if he is a millionaire, endows his wife his equal by saying: "With all my worldly goods I thee endow"; but until he has entered them words she has no claim on his purse for clothes, or cards, or household furnishing, or anything but those articles which come under the head of such gifts as it is a lover's province to give.

A very pensive, old-time sentiment of New York broke her daughter's engagement to a gentleman because he brought her a drum from Paris. She said, if he did not know enough not to give her daughter clothes when she was under her roof, he should not have her.

THE OLD RIDER TRIAL.

It Rings Out in Court at a Texas Interior Town and Startles the Jurors.

A singular dramatic incident occurred in the Superior Court-room at Waynesboro, Texas, during the trial of the Rogers brothers for the killing of the Symmes, father and son.

When the court assembled after tea, the seats and the aisles within the bar were crowded with ladies, while without a dense throng of men filled up the auditorium.

Mr. Twiggs began his argument. He is an eloquent speaker. In the course of his address he at one time referred in the most feeling manner to the courage and devotion of women. The hour, the audience, and the dim light from which the rapt faces were bent upon him, all combined to form a surrounding well calculated to inspire the orator to his greatest effort. He closed his address upon the women as follows:

"At the battle of Gettysburg General Pickett was ordered to begin the charge which was to make him famous. As he went into the terrible battle his young bride, on horseback, followed him. When the hail of death was beating down men on all sides and the plunging shot and shell mingled their fierce screams with the moans and cries of the mangled, Pickett suddenly found himself in the presence of his wife. In an agony of fear for her safety, he cried out to her, as she sat cool and collected as a veteran:

"'Go back! Go back! For God's sake go back to the rear!'"

"'No,' replied the devoted woman, 'in the hour of danger a wife's place is by her husband's side.'"

At this moment through the court-room there rang out one wild, thrilling cry, which nearly lifted the excited throng to its feet. It was the old rebel yell, heard upon a hundred battlefields, and never to be forgotten. A deep silence followed. All eyes were turned toward the outer circle. Then Judge Roney's cold voice was heard bidding the sheriff to arrest the offender. A man was seen dodging through the crowd, and the judge continued:

"The man who is leaving is probably the one wanted."

"No, judge," exclaimed a voice, slowly; "I am the man."

The speaker stood in the aisle with folded arms, quietly contemplating the bench.

"I shall have to fine you $10, then, for disturbing the court."

"Very well, your Honor, I will pay the money," said the man, without moving; "but I mean no disrespect. I was a Confederate soldier at Gettysburg, and just could not keep from hollering."

The ladies present sprang to their feet, and in an instant the money was made up and paid to the clerk. The involuntary yell of the old soldier was an irresistible tribute to womanhood. Had the fine been ten times as large he would not have suffered.—Houston Post.

Can a Boy be Made to Sing?

A very curious case has been brought before the courts at Sing Sing, N. Y., says an exchange. Professor Gordon, principal of the public school, punished a boy because he would not sing, and the father of the boy had the professor arrested. It is now to be proved whether a boy may be allowed to decline singing, or whether it is cruelty to punish him for it. The teacher, who first complained of the boy for not being willing to sing, has evidently little knowledge of psychological peculiarities; but there is such a thing as "aversion to singing," an aversion that can be overcome only after a time. I have known boys whose nerves could not stand hearing their own voice in singing, and who could not be made to sing. It is seldom the case with girls, and yet I have known such instances, but with boys it is a frequent occurrence. A shudder will run through the boy's frame as he brings forth a sound, and he will tremble with terror at his own voice. It is a peculiar nervous debility, often noticed in strong boys. I once knew a case where a boy could not be made to pronounce French words, and he took beating after beating before he would give in. Finally the matter was given up. A friend advised that French should be spoken in the presence of the boy, without paying attention to him. This was done, and one day he came quite brightly to his mother, saying: "I can do it now," and said off half a dozen words correctly. The sense of hearing had to be cultivated first and the nervous system accustomed to the unusual sounds. It is the same with singing. A shy child stood for hours aside from its sisters and brothers taking their singing lesson; it couldn't be made to sing. One day it went up straight to the others and joined in the hymn they were then singing. Its fear and hesitation had been overcome.

Had the professor considered deeply this peculiarity he would have tried to accustom the boy, as he was a new scholar, to the singing, and he might have been sure that the instinct would have been aroused and the lad would have joined the others, at first sheepishly and then boldly. The cause of hearing should in all musical exercises be cultivated first before it is possible to expect an active response.

It is asserted that the Maine First Heavy Artillery lost more in "killed and died of wounds" in the late war of the rebellion than any other Union regiment, the exact figures being 2,202 men enrolled, and 415 killed and died of wounds, or 18.8 per cent. The Wisconsin Second Regiment came next, with 17.5 per cent., and the Pennsylvania One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment next, with 16.4 per cent.

"Look here, this piece of meat don't suit me. It's from the back of the animal's neck," said an American man to a German butcher. "Mine frient, all dot beef vot I sells is took of de neck. There was nodding but horns in front of dot neck."

SHARPSHOOTER PITCHER.

Fighting her Husband's Place at His Disabling and Finishing the Fight.

The heroic feat for the Monmouth monument represents Sergeant Molly Pitcher as a beautiful young Creolian. She stands bareheaded and bobtailed in front of a common rammings charge home. Her dead husband lies at her feet. The ponderous wheels of the gun, with old fashioned iron bands holding the joints of the felloes, are well brought out. A bareheaded gunner stands close by, ball in hand. Opposite another gunner thumbs the vent, holding the flintlock in his hand. The sponge bucket stands in place. An enemy's ball plows the grassy field. A battery flag sticks in the sod, with the old Freehold meeting house in the background. Artillerymen approach beneath its steeple. In the foreground General Knox rides away, flourishing his sword.

Molly Pitcher was the wife of a cannonier in Wayne's command. When the American forces retreated from Fort Clinton and the enemy was scaling the ramparts her husband dropped his match and fled. Molly caught it up, fired the piece and then scampered off. At the battle of Monmouth, on June 28, 1778, she brought water to her husband and his companions from a spring near by. A shot killed her husband, and the officer in charge having no one competent to fill his place, ordered the piece to be withdrawn. Molly heard the order as she was coming from the spring, dropped her bucket, seized the rammer and worked the cannon until the close of the fight. On the following morning, says Lossing, General Greene presented her, still covered with dirt and blood, to Washington, who at once gave her a commission as sergeant. She was placed for life upon the list of half pay officers, and soon after the battle left the army. She died near Fort Montgomery on the Hudson. "The venerable widow of General Hamilton," Lossing adds, "told me she had often seen Captain Molly. She was a stout, red-haired, freckled-faced young Irish woman, with a handsome, piercing eye. The French officers, charmed by the story of her bravery, made her many presents. She would sometimes pass along the French lines with her cocked hat and get it almost filled with crowns." Molly was twenty-two years old at the time of the battle. A painting by Colonel Custis, Washington's stepson, gives a spirited representation of the scene.

On the Wrong Car.

DESERVED EXPERIENCE OF A YOUTH WHO DRESSED TO KILL.

A writer in the Baltimore Every Saturday says: "A few evenings ago I was riding up-town in one of the Madison avenue cars. Among the passengers was a young lady, prepossessing in appearance, of modest demeanor, and neat but plain in apparel. She was evidently of the class whom necessity compels to earn her bread by the labor of her hands. At one of the cross streets a young fellow boarded the car. He was gotten up in point of dress to kill. In fact, he was one of those men who, in street parlance, are known as 'mashers.' After standing on the rear platform a minute, his eye caught sight of the lady passenger, who was, besides myself, the only occupant of the car.

"After apparently taking her measurement, he remarked to the conductor: 'Devilish pretty girl, that,' and tipping the change-taker a wink he entered the vehicle and took a seat beside her. The young lady, unconscious of the fellow's action, was wrapt in her own reflection, until a few moments later he addressed her. What the nature of the observation was I did not hear, but the lady arose and took a seat on the other side of the car. The fellow deliberately followed her and renewed his attentions. I was curious to know what would be the denouement, and an appealing glance at the conductor, a fine, strapping, manly and withal a gentlemanly fellow, relieved me of suspense. Entering the car he said to the lady, 'Do you know this man, miss?' 'No, sir,' was the reply.

"In a twinkling the dressed-to-kill masher was in his grip, and the next minute he was on the rear platform, wrestling and objecting to being put off. His efforts were vain, and as he landed on the street, his toilet considerably ruffled, he exclaimed: 'I'll have you discharged for this!'

"'Do you know him?' I asked. 'Know him! Yes. His father occupies one of the finest residences on Butaw place. He's one of the regulars. There is a set of his style, who make a practice of insulting unattended ladies, but they cannot do it on my car.'"

The Indiana Poet.

James Whitcomb Riley, the Indiana poet, whose verses have made him justly famous, was once a hotel-keeper, and he has had a strange career. He was born at New Bedford, Mass., and there he lived for many years. His father was the captain of a whaler, but the son never took to the sea. Captain Riley gave the young man an ample fortune when he attained his majority, and young James invested the bulk of it in a hotel, which he named the Ocean View House. Riley sold his hotel in the winter of '73, invested his money in Pennsylvania oil, lost everything, and then moved to Indiana to try farming. Until within the last four years he never wrote a line of poetry.

On pass bid at April there were in blast 160 iron furnaces, while 480 were out of blast. The weekly capacity of the furnaces in operation was 99,681 tons, and at the beginning of this year the 320 furnaces in operation were of the weekly capacity of 69,326 tons.

A museum journal contains an article entitled, "Notes of Cases of Ice Cream Poisoning." It is said that young ladies are clubbing together to raise a fund of five hundred dollars to secure the insertion of the article in all the papers in town. Their object is ignorance.—Norristown Herald.

HOW TO MAKE ICE CREAM.

Delicious Strawberries are Seasonable Now—Some of Which Have Found Their Way Into Print.

"The easiest of making good ice cream of any grade," says Miss Juliet Corson, "lies in the freezing. The old way of freezing cream, which is still in use among small confectioners, consisted of constantly stirring the cream while it was freezing in a tin can, set in a tub of ice and salt. A more easy and expeditious method is within the reach of the average housekeeper in these days of patent freezers. The same principle underlies all the best known patents, i. e., the mixing of the cream by a wooden beater which revolves inside the can by the same motion that slightly changes the position of the can in the outer tub of ice and salt. This freezing mixture should be composed of three parts of crushed ice to one of course salt, of which care should be taken that it does not reach high enough around the sides of the can to penetrate to the interior, and so spoil the cream; the water formed in the outer tub by the melting of the freezing mixture need not be drawn off while the cream is being frozen unless it is likely to get into the can, because the water is intensely cold. If it is desired to pack the cream after it is frozen the water may be drawn off and enough more ice and salt placed around the can to reach nearly to the top. Ice cream packed in this way can be kept over night, or longer, if the freezing mixture is properly renewed. When the cream is 'moulded' or packed in the moulds of fancy shapes all the openings should be closed with butter, or oiled paper fixed about the apertures of the mould with paste or gum tragacanth.

"Ice creams of the most ordinary sort are made with milk thickened with arrowroot or corn starch, in the proportion of a tablespoonful to a quart, dissolved in cold water and then boiled in the milk, which is cooled, sweetened and flavored before it is frozen. The sort of ice cream usually made at home is composed of milk, with a small proportion of cream, with eggs and sugar added to it; for instance, dissolve half a pound of sugar in a quart of milk; place it over the fire and let it heat to a boiling point; meantime beat three eggs to cream, pour the boiling milk into them and then return to the fire and stir until it begins to thicken, then at once remove it from the fire; stir until it is smooth, then flavor it, cool it, and when it is cool freeze it according to directions given. Frozen custard is made in the same way, only five eggs at least are added to a quart of milk.

"French ice cream, thick and yellow, is made by boiling a quart of cream with a long vanilla bean and then cooling and straining it; then the yolks of twelve eggs are beaten smooth with three-quarters of a pound of sugar; the flavored cream is then mixed with the eggs and stirred over the fire until it begins to chicken; directly the cream begins to chicken, take it from the fire and stir it for five minutes; then cool it and freeze it."

The Forrest Divorce Case.

I well remember the details of this famous suit, says a prominent New Yorker, which no one but O'Conor could have won. He turned the tables so adroitly that the plaintiff was transformed into a defendant, and, instead of obtaining a verdict, was beaten in the most shameful manner. New York has never witnessed a divorce case of an equally sensational character—this being occasioned not only by the dramatic distinction of the plaintiff, but also by the social rank of other parties complicated in the affair. One of these was N. P. Willis, who was one of Mrs. Forrest's friends, and was therefore the object of her husband's jealousy. Tom Hamblin left Iowa in order to escape a subpœna, and other witnesses absented themselves for the same purpose. Forrest's lawyer was John Van Buren, who made the best of his case, but his inferiority to O'Conor was vividly apparent. O'Conor, indeed bore down upon his antagonist like an iceberg, and for the first time in his life Forrest was made to feel that he was in the grasp of a giant. The result was that a man who began an action to divorce his wife was himself divorced and was thus prevented from marriage. He was at the same time obliged to pay her $8,000 a year, and was not allowed to leave the city until full security was given. Forrest was so irritated at Willis, whom he considered an instigator of his wife, that he assaulted him in public, and was made to pay $2,500 and costs for this indulgence in temper. The parties are now all dead, and it seems strange to recall the bitter scenes in which they were engaged. Mrs. Forrest died in California. John Van Buren died on shipboard, but his remains were brought home for interment. Edward Stanford, who conducted Willis' action for assault and battery, perished in the ill-fated steamer Arctic. Willis rests in Greenwood. Forrest, after life's fitful fever, found a grave in Philadelphia, and now his chief antagonist is also borne to the house appointed for all living.

The Biggest Forgery.

The biggest forgery that ever took place in England was Fauntleroy's in 1816, for £360,000 pounds. Fauntleroy was a book-keeper for Marsh, Sibbald & Co., bankers, in Berners street, London, that had dealings with the Bank of England. As the bank that he belonged to was a bad one, Fauntleroy, in order to keep up the credit of it, went to work and forged powers of attorney of a lot of wealthy depositors, and sold out their funds (?) to the bank he was doing business for. This enabled the bank to pay dividends to the men he was robbing. But the ones many on task, and before the police broke into Fauntleroy's house they found a note branding defalcation against the Bank of England for having refused acquiescence to his transactions, and having thus destroyed the credit of his house. Fauntleroy was hanged for his crime, and an eye-witness remarks that all London was present at the execution.

SUNRISE AMONG THE HILLS.

"His mercies are new every morning and His compassions fail not."

Heavy and long is the night,
The sea moans in blackness of darkness—
There may be a wreck ere the light—
Lo! sudden—a gleam on the mountain!
The shadows are fleeing away;
sun touches the clouds with sun-fingers
And opens the gates of the day.

His mercies are new every morning,
And oh, His compassions ne'er fail,
To the timid sheep cropping the herbage,
The mariner breasting the gale;
The child, [illegible] over its matter,
The sinner, whom tears cannot revive,
The mourner left "sleeping for sorrow,"
The sick man who wakes up alive!

"His mercies are new every morning!"
In the joy of [illegible]
"His mercies are new every morning!"
We sing yet with faltering tongue.
And we'll sing it till bursts the grand music
That all earth's faint anthem stills,
And we see the Day-star arising
Above the eternal hills.

Too Busy.

"Mother! mother!" cried my little Willy, coming in upon me, as I sat busily at work, "I've lost my arrow in the grass and can't find it."

He was just ready to burst into tears from grief at his mishap. "I'm sorry, dear," I said calmly, as I went on with my work.

"Won't you go and find it with me, mother?" he asked with a quivering lip, as he laid hold on my arm.

"I'm too busy, dear," I replied, gently shaking him off. "Go and tell Jane to find it for you."

"Jane can't find it," said the little fellow, in a choking voice.

"Tell her to go and look again."

"She has looked all over, and can't find it. Won't you come, mother, and find it for me?"

The tears were now rolling over his face. But I was too busy to attend to Willy. I was embroidering the edge of a little linen sack that I was making for him, and that, for the moment, seemed of more importance than the happiness of my child.

"No—no," I replied. "I'm too busy to go down stairs. You must take better care of your arrows. Go and ask Ellen to find it for you."

"Ellen says she won't look for it." Willy was now crying outright.

"There! there! don't be so foolish as to cry at the loss of such a little thing as an arrow," said I, in a reproving voice. "I'm ashamed of you."

"Won't you go and find it for me, mother?" he urged, still crying.

"No indeed, Willy. I'm too busy now. Go and look for it again yourself."

"But I can't find it. I have looked"

"Then go and look again," I said firmly.

Willy went crying down stairs, and I heard him crying about the yard for some ten minutes, until my patience began to give out.

"Such a to-do about an arrow! I wish I'd never bought him the bow-arrow!" said I, moving uneasily in my chair.

"Ellen, won't you make me another arrow? Here is the [illegible]" I heard him ask of the cook, in a pleading voice. But Ellen replied rudely—

"No indeed, I shall not! I've got something else to do besides making arrows."

The child's crying was renewed. I felt vexed at Ellen. "She might have made him the arrow," I said. "If I wasn't so busy I would go down and make him one myself. But I must get this sack done."

And I sewed away more rapidly than before. The crying went on. Willy had lost his arrow, and his heart was almost broken. Unfortunately, I was not in a mood to sympathize with him. An arrow, to me, was a very little thing, and it worried me to hear his cries as if his heart would break over a loss so trifling as that of an arrow.

"Willy!" I at length said, calling out of the window, "you must stop that crying."

"I can't find [illegible] and nobody will make me [illegible] of the little fellow.

"I can't. Oh, I can't find it!"

"I know better. Arrows don't usually run off of themselves. Will you stop that crying?"

To Willy the loss of his arrow was a grief, and he was too young to have forfeited [illegible] But I was [illegible] him.

"Stop [illegible] as the worry would [illegible] my own. "I can't have [illegible] the house."

But my words had no effect; they did not produce the arrow. Willy cried on.

Unable longer to endure the sound, and also thinking it wrong to let him indulge the habit of crying, I laid my work aside, and going down stairs, took hold of him resolutely, saying as I did so—

"Now, stop this instantly!"

The child looked up to me with a most distressed countenance, while the tears covered his face.

"I can't find my arrow," said he, with quivering lip.

"I'm sorry—but crying won't find it. Come up stairs with me." Willy ascended to my room.

"Now, don't [illegible] the heart for a word more of this. The next time you get an arrow take better care of it."

There was no sympathy in my tone; for I felt none. I did not think of his loss, but of the annoyance of crying. The little fellow stifled his grief, or rather the utterance of it, as best he could, and throwing himself at full length upon the floor, sighed and sobbed [illegible] minutes. A sigh, longer and more fluttering than usual, aroused my attention, and then I became aware that he had fallen asleep.

How instantly do our feelings change toward a child when we find that it is asleep. If we have been angry or offended, we are so no longer. Tenderness comes in the place of sterner emotions. I laid aside my work, and taking Willy in my arms, lifted him from the floor, and laid him upon my bed. Another long, fluttering sigh, agitated his bosom as his head touched the pillow. How reprovingly came the sound upon my ears! How sadly did it echo and re-echo in my heart!

"Poor child!" I murmured. "To him the loss of an arrow was a great thing. It has disturbed him to the very centre of his little being. I wish, now, that I had put by my work for a few minutes until I could have found his arrow, or made him a new one. I would have lost no more time in doing so than I have already lost. And, after all, what is a little time taken from my work to the happiness of my child? Ah, me! I wish I could learn to think right at the right time. Dear little fellow! He was so happy with his bow and arrow. But all was destroyed by the untimely loss, which I could have restored in a few moments. Unfeeling—unnatural mother! Is this the way you show your love for your child?"

I stood for nearly five minutes over my sleeping boy. When I turned away, it [illegible] my sewing, for I had no heart to work upon the little garment. I went down into the yard, and the first object that met my eye was the lost arrow, partly concealed behind a rose-bush where it had fallen.

"So easily found!" I said. "And much would a minute given at the right time have saved? Ah, me! We learn too late, and repent when repentance is of little avail."

It was an hour before the deep sleep into which my Willy had fallen, was broken. I had, in the meantime, resumed my sewing, after having [illegible] fully half an hour in consequence of being unwilling to lose a few minutes for the sake of attending to my child, and relieving him of the trouble that had come upon him. The first notice I received of his [illegible] awake, was his gratified exclamation at finding his lost arrow beside him. All his past grief was forgotten. In a few minutes he was down in the yard, shooting his arrow again, and as happy as before. No trace of his recent grief remained.

But I could not forget it. With me the circumstance was lost as the morning cloud and the early dew. The sunshine that came afterward did not dissipate instantly the one, nor drink up the other. I was sober for many hours afterward; for the consciousness of having done wrong, as well as having been the occasion of grief to my child, lay with a heavy pressure upon my feelings.

PRINCELY ECCENTRICITIES.

THE WAY THE GUESTS WERE RECEIVED.

How a Noted New Yorker Dispensed His Hospitality.

[From the New York Times.]

Mr. Henry Havemeyer, whose sanity is to be inquired into by a commission, has long been known to a wide circle of friends and acquaintances as a jolly good fellow and a princely host, and to this circle the announcement of his unfortunate mental condition, if it does not come wholly as a surprise, will at least be received with unfeigned regret. Mr. Havemeyer entertained freely at his house in New York city, but it is chiefly on his entertainments at his country seat that his fame for hospitality rests.

His country seat is on an islet known as Havemeyer's Island, in the Great South Bay, on the Atlantic shore of Long Island. Upon this property, which Mr. Havemeyer obtained by purchase a number of years ago, he set up a model country establishment, and instituted curiously and in many respects unique system of entertainment. Communication with New York is had chiefly by way of Babylon and the Long Island Railroad, and for the conveyance of his guests between the island and Babylon Mr. Havemeyer provided himself with a fine [illegible] launch. He frequently entertained parties of ladies and gentlemen, but "stag parties" were his particular delight. When a stag party approached the island in the steam launch its members were astonished, not to say startled, by a salvo of artillery from a masked battery at the landing. The surprise of the guests was increased on landing to find a corps of tormentors attired as United States Custom House officers, rushing for their baggage, and insisting on the formality of a rigid examination of portmanteaux and handbores. Being finally, and after all the delay ordinarily experienced by New Yorkers returned from a European trip, acquitted of attempted smuggling, the guests proceeded to Mr. Havemeyer's residence, and were struck speechless at the sight of uniformed and armed sentries pacing before the entrance.

If the arrival did not take place near his dinner hour, the party was beguiled, as it elected, during the intervening time, with a sailing or fishing excursion, or some other out-door amusement. It was at the dinner hour, however, that the farcial climax was reached. The guests were ushered into the dining hall with great formality by Mr. Havemeyer himself. When all were seated the host placed himself at the head of the table and tapped a silver bell. Instantly doors flew open on different sides of the room, and in filed what seemed to be an imposing visitation of military commanders, but really waiters bedecked in the grudy uniforms of Austrian and Prusian Generals, French Marshals, and officers of other effete European monarchies. The semblance was complete down to the smallest particulars. The mimic officers were helmeted and plumed, spurred, besworded, and epauleted. But to heighten the caricature each generalissimo bore aloft upon his gloved and uplifted hands a dish of sumptuous and savory viands.

But there the farce ended. There was no caricature about the cuisine. Those who have had the good fortune to sit at Mr. Havemeyer's hospitable board would have to go far to find a more sumptuous table. The peculiar features with which he encompassed his hospitality were regarded at the time as the enactment of a clever satire on foreign pomposity and certain existing domestic customs.

A Quarter of a Century.

At the meeting of the Society of the Army of the Potomac Gen. Horace Porter, in his address said:

"It is nearly a quarter of a century since the first gun was fired on Sumter. It was not a loud report, but it was the most significant shot ever fired from cannon's mouth. Its sound awoke a sleeping North, its echoes aroused to the frenzy of war a powerful people; its reverberations did not cease till they had reached to foreign shores and told the whole world that the Great Republic was at war. Then every man, woman and child in the land became a worker in the cause which moved the nation's soul. Then came the mighty gathering of that vast army. The doors of the workshops were closed, the field [illegible] deserted [illegible] men [illegible] surged up from the hilltops [illegible] the valleys. The whole land became one vast military camp, and man felt that he lived again in the heroic ages.

"Burke once said no war ever left a nation where it found it. It was eminently so with our war. It found slavery; it left freedom. It found secession; it left a redeemed and regenerated Union. It found the name of American citizen a by-word and a reproach in the world; it left the name American citizen the proudest passport that man can carry throughout the habitations of the earth. The great historic events of the war are present with us. The record of its battles has passed into history and the stand on which that history is written has been generally looked to the highest pinion of the temple of Fame."

VERY YOUNG MASONS.

Eight Rather Frightened Boys Led Blindfolded into La Sincerite Lodge.

The ceremony of Masonic baptism and adoption of children was performed in the Grand Lodge room by the French lodge La Sincerite, of New York. This ceremony had rarely been performed in public in this country, and the great hall was crowded with invited guests of the lodge, including many ladies and gentlemen in evening dress. A local paper thus describes the affair:

The members of the lodge formed open rank in the centre aisle with crossed swords held high, while, at a given signal, eight boys were brought in blindfolded, led by their parents, their ages ranging from three years to ten. Some of the boys looked a little frightened, and grasped their parents' hands rather tightly. Brother Herdet received them at the top of the steps, and at a given signal the bandages were removed from the youngsters' eyes, evidently much to their relief. They looked about in a dazed way, and timidly walked upon the platform. The youngest, to the great amusement of the audience, stoutly resisted being put in the place where he was expected to stand. His mother was obliged to go upon the platform and assist in the ceremonies.

The sponsors of the children took the solemn obligation to aid the children to the utmost in performing the duties of Masonry. Then the children were in turn taken to the font and baptized by washing of their hands, and thence to the altar, whereon was a blazing fire, and where they knelt. The youngest of the eight kept up his reputation, and continued to amuse the audience by stoutly resisting, and his mother was obliged to join the circle at the altar. Next the members of La Sincerite Lodge took the solemn vow binding them to accept the children, which was duly confirmed, the members of the lodge rising and clapping their hands in unison at a signal.

The children were then invested with the aprons and jewels of Masonry, all of them but the youngest being highly pleased with their regalia. The youngest, however, was again obstreperous and had to be persuaded by his mother, and possibly by surreptitious candy. Finally the youngsters were all settled. Then they were all consecrated, and the orator of the lodge, Brother Lellemand, made an address. Brother Charles T. McClenachan explained in English that La Sincerite Lodge had pledged itself to guard and protect these little children and see that they were educated in Free Masonry, to restrain them from vice and keep them from the snares that surround the young. The ceremony of the washing of hands was not intended to interfere in the slightest degree with any religious faith, but was symbolic of approaching the throne of divine grace with pure hearts.

Manuring Pear Trees.

Pear trees often suffer for lack of proper fertilizers. The correct way to manage pear trees is to apply each autumn a dressing of well decomposed stable manure, leaf mould, a little gypsum or lime and muck, this to be forked in around the extremities of the roots. Of course, on rich soils this compost is not necessary, but on poor lands a dressing of well rotted compost two inches deep will prove of value. Avoid fermenting manures for fruit trees. Also avoid the common error of permitting the trees to degenerate for want of plant food for several years and then apply an immense quantity. This plan induces an unnatural growth which is liable to be seized with disease. By the way, a good plan when manure is required is to apply the compost one year and wood ashes or ground bone the next." Pear blight remains more or less of a mystery to horticulturists. Trees grown on over-moist or too rich soil that stimulates to a late second growth are liable to blight. Avoid damp soil for pear trees and do not apply summer top-dressing that is liable to stimulate too late growth. Eastern horticulturists say to graft or bud the Kieffer on pear stock; it does not thrive when grafted on quince stock.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

HOW THE CONFIDENCE OF THE PUBLIC WAS ABUSED.

Locks Must be Built at Both Ends of the Ditch.

Most people are under the impression that the entrances to the Panama canal are to be open to the sea, without any locks or other hindrances. This, indeed, may have been the primitive intention of the originators of the scheme, but a more thorough study of the question has shown that, though it would be possible to construct the canal under those conditions, there are forcible reasons for closing the canal with a lock chamber at the extremity where it will join the Pacific ocean. It has been ascertained that the tides in the Atlantic and Pacific differ very materially. At Colon, on the Atlantic, the difference between high and low water mark is not more than fifty-eight centimetres, whereas at Panama, on the Pacific, the average variation in the height of the water is four metres, and is sometimes not less than six. Moreover, high water at Colon is about nine hours later than at Panama. The maximum difference which could exist between the level of the waters of the two oceans would therefore be equal to half the height to which the tide rises at Panama, on the Pacific. As regards the above-mentioned difference in the tides at Colon and Panama, all the above-stated facts have been well known for the past half a century. Fifty years ago Col. Lloyd, who ran a line of levels from sea to sea, made known to the engineering world the above facts, and they must have been known, or should have been known, by the French engineers who made the preliminary survey, for Count de Lesseps some four years or more ago. Since Col. Lloyd's survey, the American engineer who laid the line of the Panama railroad must certainly have rediscovered these facts in regard to the levels of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. However that may be, the present engineers of the canal company have only very recently discovered that they cannot make this an absolutely "sea level canal." That is a natural impossibility. They have greatly abused the confidence of the public and the innocent subscribers to the capital stock of the "Interocsanic Canal Company," by promising an open, unlocked "sea level" canal, at a certain (and comparatively cheap) cost, which promise served as a basis to catch contributions for the shares.

The Marshall Statue.

It is half a century lacking a year since the movement was started to erect in Washington a monument to commemorate the services of Chief Justice Marshall. The memorial has taken the form of a statue by Story, which was lately unveiled with appropriate ceremonies. Hereafter visitors to the national capital may view the striking features of the great Chief Justice, but not all will realize how original and unique is his title to the honor now paid him. It is not simply because he was a profound lawyer or a great judge, but because of his achievements in a field of public service which, when he entered it, was as new as it was important. He became Chief Justice when, for the first time in modern history at least, the fundamental law of a nation had been embodied in a written constitution, and hence when, for the first time, a judicial tribunal was called upon to expound such an instrument. The science of constitutional interpretation then had its origin, and Marshall was its founder. Without the aid of guiding authority or precedent he laid the foundation on which the body of our constitutional law as since judicially developed has been built up. The work of Marshall, therefore, differs from that of any other judge, American or foreign, for the reason that he was the great pioneer in a new department of judicial labor. His greatness lies in the extent, the importance and the success of his services in this field.

No Paper Next Week.

AN EDITOR WHO DOES [illegible] MAKE THE SAME [illegible] TWICE.

[From Carl Pretzel's Weekly.]

We have no desire to brush the down off the peach, but it becomes necessary sometimes. Occasions are not rare when citizens request us, personally, to place their names on our subscription list. Occasions are not rare when some of them positively refuse to pay for the paper when the collector calls upon them, averring that they had never ordered it sent to them. An instance of this kind happened last week, when an alderman requested us, personally, to send him the paper. We not only did that, but gave his business a slight introduction to our readers who live in his vicinity, not a thousand miles from Fourth avenue and Harrison street. The collector called upon him and he declared that he knew nothing about it and had never ordered it, yet admitted that he had read the article with a great deal of relish. The alderman, who, by the way, does not represent the ward in which his [illegible] store is located, will get our paper this week, and we do not consider that we have wasted any sympathy on the desert air, for in the future those who order the weekly will pay for it what they order it or the thief don't get

SEVENTY YEARS OF PROGRESS.

Mr. Beecher Gives the Baptist Conference Some Memories of His Life.

At the Baptist Conference held in New York, Henry Ward Beecher said:

"During my journey from Amherst to Boston, after graduating and while on my way to Ohio, the driver on the stage pointed out to me a bank of earth, and said: 'That's a railroad, I guess they call it.' That was the Boston and Worcester Railway, and it was the first, I believe, with the exception of a [illegible] railway between Quincy and Boston, that had ever been constructed. It took me ten days to go from New York to Cincinnati. I rode from Albany to Schenectady with Martin Van Buren, and as soon as it was known that we were on board we were saluted with salvos of artillery from every place that we passed, and that will account for the fact that I have been making a noise ever since.

"Looking at our railway system for hundreds and thousands of miles, I think that this iron road has been, under God, the means of changing the civilization of this country, both socially and politically, and it has had great influence aside from its other associations in war and in peace.

"The most important applications of steam have been in my time, and to-day the rivers are miserable democrats, looked down upon by the aristocratic steam road everywhere. Then the whole telegraphic system has been in my day, and the telephone, which I don't yet believe in. Although faith is the evidence of things not seen, things heard and not seen require more faith. Then the development of the electrical machinery, which has been the post-boy over land and under the sea, and is now coming to bring light everywhere. Then, when I was in college and had some love letter to write, I could write on a sheet as big as a newspaper, but if I put in a bit of paper as large as my little finger they charged me double price. It was first 25 cents, then 18¾ cents, then 12½ cents, and it was a great triumph when we could send a letter for 10 cents or five cents. So I have seen the problem of cheap postage solved in my time.

"The discoveries of Daguerre have been of great benefit in science and art. In my own case I don't know whether, from the representations of my own face taken when a boy, I am glad or not, but I would give all I am worth if the discovery had been made in my mother's time. Every minister should preach to his congregation that it is their duty to have the photograph of each child taken once a year until it is twenty-one, and then the children will take care of the matter themselves."

Soapstone Flour.

In Congressman Green's recent speech before the U. S. House on the adulteration of food and drugs he mentioned some of the doctored articles that are offered for human consumption. They included glucose syrup, soapstone flour, cocoanut-shell and red lead pepper and so on. Among these the flour said to be made largely of steatite or soapstone seems specially queer, and Mr. Green spoke of it in this fashion:

"Now, sir, what would be your inference, if told by the proprietor of one of these saponaceous quarries, as I have been, that he finds a ready sale for all the soapstone flour that he can grind. 'And who are your customers?' 'Chiefly commercial millers and sugar refiners.'

But at least it is consoling to reflect, says a Washington correspondent, that at the recent price of grain it must have become a somewhat less lucrative investment to mix even pulverized stone with flour.

What Caused a Disaster.

The explosion in the Pocahontas Mine in Southwest Virginia, by which so many men lost their lives, is now attributed to the presence of a great deal of fine coal and coal dust [illegible] the flower of the mine. This [illegible] mingled with air constitutes an explosive mixture which can be fired by the approach of a flame of any kind. In the Pocahontas mine, where this dust was very abundant, there was no lack of opportunities for the introduction of flame, as it was customary to use a great deal of powder in blasting out the coal. Some of the powder was undoubtedly wasted by the inexperienced miners and mingled with the fine coal, thus adding to the danger. A locomotive with an open fire was also being constantly run into the mine. It is considered certain that there was no fire damp.

NOT THAT KIND OF A BOY.—A couple of pretty tourists came down the lake in the steamer Vermont the other day, and while promenading the deck one of them suddenly exclaimed: "Oh, Nelly, there's a buoy!" "Where—where?" exclaimed the other, expectantly and gazing around during the scattered passengers. "There—out on the water, just to the right of the steamer's bow." "O, pshaw!" was the disappointed reply. "I thought you meant a real, live, sweet, good-looking New England boy. I've seen all the wooden boys I want to in New York this winter."

Every part of the soul, if it comes to any [illegible] of strength, goes through discipline.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER.

"No, but he wanted me to travel."—Austin Siftings.

CAN WHISKY TALK?

Dumley was making an evening call and the nice little boy of the family had been allowed to remain up a little later than usual. "Ma," he said, during a lull in the conversation, "can whisky talk?" "Certainly not," said ma; "what put that absurd notion into your head?" "Well," he replied, "I heard you say to pa that whisky was telling on Mr. Dumley and I wanted to know what it said."—Chicago Tribune.

RATHER PERSONAL.

When Gen. B. F. Butler was a young man, two girls, dwelling in the same boarding-house, were simultaneously in love with him. "To what place do you refer?"

"To a store kept by a friend of Mr Eno's in the next street."

"A store!" Why would he be safe from discovery there?"

"The proprietor does not advertise."—Evening Call.

SHOULD HAVE ACQUAINTANCE RENEWED.

"Did you know papa when he was a boy?" asked a Somerville urchin of his mother, as she doled him out half a dozen of strawberries at the table.

"Why, what a question, child! Certainly not. I didn't know your papa until he was a young man. Why do you ask?"

"Oh, 'cause I wanted to know."

"What for?"

"'Cause you give him more strawberries than you give me, and you've known me ever since I was born."—Somerville Journal.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., JULY 31, 1884.

Be upright in your dealings with all men.

Next Monday is the day for the election. Let every Democrat turn out and do his duty by voting the straight Democratic ticket.

There are now three graces in Chilton county—Baker, Barbour and Hall—and the greatest of these—a Kalamazoo medicine man couldn't guess.

Gen. Grant does not join the Republican chorus which affects to make light of the Democratic ticket. He declares that Cleveland is the strongest candidate the Democrats could have presented.

Let us roll up a large majority in Chilton for our able nominee for State Senator. He will be one of the very best men in the next Legislature. His wisdom and experience is what is needed in all such bodies.

It is said that Gen. Grant is losing his mind, and that though he was once known as the "silent man," a great change has come over him, and he now keeps up an almost incessant chatter against Ward and his son.

The business men of New York seem to be almost unanimous for Cleveland and Hendricks. The New York papers contain daily interviews with scores of them indorsing heartily the ticket and predicting its success.

Goree and Baker and Barbour and Hall and Tom and Dick and Harry, and a whole dozen independents besides, couldn't represent Chilton county in the Alabama Legislature half as well as one good Democrat could.

It looks rather odd to see the names of Cleveland and Hendricks at the head of the New York Herald's editorial columns. It is the first time since that paper was started that it ever thus printed the names of Presidential candidates.

It is said that by the following simple method almost instant relief of earache is afforded: Put five drops of chloroform on a little cotton or wool in the bowl of a clay pipe, then blow the vapor through the stem into the aching ear.

A man who has kept account of the number of kisses exchanged with his wife since their union consents to its publication, as follows: First year, 36,000; second year, 16,000; third year, 3,550; fourth year, 120; fifth year 2. He then left off keeping the record.

As a rule candidates who style themselves independents have been so unpopular that they cannot get a nomination from any party; and being desperate for an office, they suddenly conceive a holy horror of conventions, and run independent in order to redress the supposed wrong of the dear people. They start out under false pretenses.

Charles P. Lane, the nominee of the so-called Anti-Bourbon party, declines to make the race for Governor in this State on the grounds that he knows he will not be elected. He declares at the conclusion of his letter of declination that he intends to vote for Blaine and Logan in November. It is into the Republican party that the so-called Independents generally drift and Lane's declaration is not surprising.

The election in Alabama comes off next Monday. The people have a great deal at stake, and there ought to be a large vote. The Governor, Secretary of State, Attorney-General, Treasurer, Auditor, Superintendent of Education, half the Senators, all the members of the House and all county officers, except Probate Judge and Circuit Clerk, are to be elected. The Democrats of the whole Union expect those of Alabama to poll their full strength.

An old authority says: The jury of twelve was adopted because the prophets were twelve, the apostles numbered twelve, there were 12 Jewish Judges, 12 pillars of the temple, 12 patriarchs, 12 tribes of Israel, 12 stones on Aaron's breast plate, 12 gates to Jerusalem, 12 months in the year, and 12 signs in the zodiac. When juries were first established, the judge took the jurors about with him in a cart until they agreed. If they didn't agree they were fined and imprisoned.

A New Candidate.

A spread-eagle circular is before us in which one Langston F. Goree announces himself as a candidate to represent this district in the State Senate. He says that he announces himself "upon the solicitation of many friends." This circular has been distributed through the district by those "many friends" no doubt. We obtained one from a Republican, and a United States office-holder. Mr. Goree thinks that he may possibly deceive some one. A candidate should be known by the company he keeps, and here is evidence sufficient to prove that he is the candidate of the Republicans. He expects to be elected by the aid of the Republican votes he will get.

This is enough of Goree. He will be badly beaten; and as a tool of the Republicans he deserves to be beaten.

Independentism Means Radicalism.

It can mean nothing else in the South. Each and every independent candidate expects to be elected by the votes of those who are opposed to the regularly organized Democracy. Each and every independent candidate hopes to receive the votes of Republicans, negroes and soreheads and any others that go to make up the dirty conglomeration of elements that is always ready to ally itself against the true white citizens of the country. A negro member of a Blaine and Logan club at Birmingham, made a speech at a recent meeting of the club, and he boldly "showed up" the independents in their true light, as mere tools of straightout and dyed-in-the-wool Radicals. It was his idea, and is the idea of all the negroes supporting the independents that they are patting the independents on the back, and saying, "we are proposing to use you as our tools to break down Democracy; we propose to rule and run this county and State, and through you we will defeat Democrats, but we are the power behind the throne; we are the bosses, you are but our tools; we deem it expedient to use you now, and hence we tie on to you; through you we expect to get on juries, through you we expect to finger the reins of the government, through you we expect to unfurl the Republican banner in the State of Alabama, and through you ere long we expect the gentle evening zephyrs to waft the song of your damnation from centre to circumference of this grand old State."

This is the true inwardness of independentism in the South. The Independents are merely the tools of the Radicals.

H. A. Wilson, the famous knight of monkey-wrench renown, was in Chilton on Friday and Saturday last, distributing the circulars of the new Senatorial candidate, Goree. Wilson may be a clever fellow, and from our knowledge of him we believe him to be an honest man, but he has the failing of carrying around too much monkey-wrench and too little judgment. He is a government office-holder, and it is hardly within the fitness of things that he should be on the still-hunt for a so-called independent candidate. Another evidence of his bad judgment will be brought to light on next Monday, when he will learn that Chilton is a Democratic county, and wants no Radical or Independent candidates to represent her in any important body. If he had acted wisely he would have had those circulars distributed by some one else—but who else would have distributed them?

Independentism is the last resort for weak minds nauseated with ambition. They are bound to vomit, and there is no better receptacle than the independent pot.

The above copied from the Selma Times is a true diagnosis of the disease of independentism. We have several bad cases in our county, but think they will be cured after the election. Independentism is a poor excuse to ever resort to. It is merely another name for Republicanism.

Unless Chilton county polls a good vote for the county Democratic ticket, we will have a very small representation in the next State Democratic Convention. We cannot afford to divide among ourselves. Let every man turn out and vote next Monday. No man can offer a good excuse for not voting for his party candidate.

The Senatorial Convention never thought of nominating Goree, so he nominates himself, as much as to say that the people haven't the brains to nominate a candidate to fit suit themselves.

One of the leading colored republicans of Colbert, Ala., has been disposed of early in the campaign. George Lightfoot, colored, had a difficulty with a white man named Sam Hurst about the charging of a $5 bill. The matter was settled and Lightfoot went home. The next day, when walking to church with his mother, Lightfoot was confronted on the road by Hurst and another ruffian named Basden and murdered in cold blood. Hurst drew a pistol and fired at Lightfoot wounding him. Lightfoot wrenched the pistol out of Hurst's hand, and as he did this Hurst's accomplice shot him dead. Hurst ran away, but Basden gave himself up and will doubtless soon be at liberty. The Democratic newspapers have already set up a defense for him which no Alabama jury will disregard. At the time Lightfoot was killed he had Hurst's pistol in his hand, and Basden will prove by his own testimony that Hurst's life was in imminent peril, and that he was obliged to kill Lightfoot to keep him from shooting Hurst with his own pistol. The glittering generality in the Democratic platform about all men being equal before the law has no practical application in Alabama. It was simply thrown in to ease the conscience of the republican belters.

The above is a specimen of the bloody shirt campaign lies that are being promulgated by some of the Republican speakers and newspapers north. It is taken from the National Republican, a newspaper published at Washington, D.C., as the national organ of the Republican party. It is unnecessary to say that the difficulty spoken of is a fiction out of whole cloth; at least no one in Alabama has ever heard of it though the Republican Munchausen says that our Democratic papers are attempting to defend it. These Radical sheets have never taken to heart the advise which Shakespeare puts in the mouth of Hotspur: "O, while you live, tell truth and shame the devil."

Every candidate who asks for the public suffrages becomes an object for public criticism, for the people should know something of a man before they vote to place him in office. We say to every citizen examine the record so far as possible of each candidate you intend to vote for. But because a candidate is an object for criticism, it does not follow that he is an object for abuse, either publicly or otherwise, and abuse should not be indulged in, as it frequently re-acts upon the abuser. The VIEW holds itself above abusing any man, but claims its legitimate right to criticise the public acts and principles of any man who stands out boldly and asks for the votes of the people.

L. F. Goree, the independent candidate for State Senator in this district is a man of no education, no mental training, with no claims upon the people, and his candidacy shows that he is a man of no wisdom. But his supply of egotism is larger than he can conveniently carry, and he desires to place part of it upon the shoulders of the people of this district. What will be said of us if we send such a man to represent this district in the Senate?

Hon. John M. Martin, of Tuscaloosa, was nominated by the Democratic Congressional Convention of the 6th Alabama district on 139th ballot. As the Democratic candidate for Congress in the 6th district Capt. Martin will be an able and a worthy leader. He possesses the capacity and the energy to be a power for good in our congressional delegation, we earnestly hope to see him elected.

It will be good for the Democratic candidates if Tammany continues to mark its disapproval of Cleveland's nomination by sulky abstention from the campaign. The Democrats have supposed two or three good chances for showing that they could carry New York State without the aid of Kelly and his friends, but if they cannot dispense with that aid this year, the party might as well disband.

Next Saturday the last speeches of the State and county campaign will be made at Clanton. Everybody should turn out to hear them, not only in the town but from the surrounding country and neighboring beats. The Radicals will have a pow-wow here on the same day. To-morrow the Democratic speakers have an appointment at Verbena.

There is living near Conerville, Fla., a colored man named Romeo, who is wedded to a maid of his race Juliet. This couple have twins whom they have named Rosculus and Regula, and the family is conveyed to church on Sundays by a horse named Pontius Pilate.

Independent Candidate.

Mr. L. F. Goree, of Elmore county, has announced himself an independent candidate for the State Senate, from the counties of Elmore, Coosa and Chilton, in opposition to Judge Jefferson Falkner. Mr. Goree was an independent member of the last legislature, and professed to be a good Democrat. Yet he voted against Gen. Morgan, for United States Senator, and for the candidate selected by the opposition.

Mr. Goree has come out against a sterling Democrat and a gentleman against whom rests not the slightest imputation. The people of that district owe it to themselves and to the State to rally to the support of Judge Falkner, the regular nominee, and bury Mr. Goree under an overwhelming majority in August next.—Advertiser.

To Kill the Taste for Alcohol.

There are many drinkers who can break up the habit for a time, and who would gladly refrain from ever touching it again, but an uncontrolable thirst for the beverage attacks them and never lets up until they give way. A prominent gentleman in Richmond, Va., tells us how he broke this up.

"I was one of these unfortunates given to strong drink. When I left off I felt a horrid want of something I must have or go distracted. I could neither eat, work or sleep. Explaining my affliction to a man of much education and experience, he advised me to take a decoction of ground quassia, a half ounce steeped in a pint of vinegar, and to put about a small teaspoonful of it in a little water, and to drink it down every time the liquor thirst came on me violently. I found it satisfied the cravings, and it gave a feeling of stimulus and strength. I continued this cure and persevered until the thirst was conquered. For two years I have not tasted liquor, and I have no desire for it. Lately, to try my strength, I have handled and smelt whiskey, but I have no temptation to take it. I give this for the consideration of the unfortunate, several of whom I know have recovered by the means which I no longer require.

It is pretty generally thought up this way that Chilton county is entitled to the State Senatorship for the next four years. Judge Falkner is our nominee, and a representative citizen of our county. He can accomplish a great deal more than could Goree in the way of "having the present obnoxious election law repealed," which quotation is from Goree's circular. It seems that Goree's heart's desire is to have the election law repealed, and he asks to be sent to the Legislature that he may see to it. He will see to it if sent, without fail, of course.

Is a ticket "fixed up" by one or two men, such as the Baker-Parish-Knox ticket, to be preferred by the citizens of Chilton to a ticket regularly nominated by representatives of the people from every section of the county assembled in convention by the votes of the people themselves? We think not, and we believe that when election day rolls around the people of Chilton will give a rousing majority for the Democratic ticket.

THE Bookwalter Engine IS THE BEST MADE

It is the best engine for cotton gins, wood-working, planing, grist mills, planing and cider mills, threshing machines.

Burch, Logan Co., W. Va., 1882.

The 44 horse power Bookwalter Engine bought March 31, 1882, is complete. We are well pleased with it. It drives a 24-inch grist mill, and grinds eighty bushels a day. It is easily run; any one can run one of them. It gives entire satisfaction; it is the thing for farmers to have. A. D. PERRELL & CO.

I have the exclusive right to sell this engine in Chilton, Shelby and Coosa counties, and will sell to farmers and others on easy terms. I mean business. Will put the engine up and guarantee satisfactory work.

"SOUTH AND WEST."

A valuable opportunity for our old subscribers to renew and new ones to add their names. We offer to each one who renews, or to every new subscriber sending cash in advance for a year's subscription, our paper and the "SOUTH AND WEST" (one of the most popular and valuable Agricultural Journals in the Mississippi Valley), both for one year at the price of a single paper.

"SOUTH AND WEST" is not a cheap publication gotten up for the purpose of being offered as a premium, but is a large sixteen page sixty-four column Agricultural and Home paper, well established, terse, spicy, pungent and humorous. As an Agricultural paper it is unsurpassed, edited by the John M. Stahl, who is supported by a corps of practical farmers. As a Home paper it is pure, chaste, fearless, and filled with matter adapted to all ages from the pens of such writers as Rosella Rice, Mrs. E. J. Ford and L. Maria Cheney. An original humorous department illustrated by special artists, is a distinctive feature.

We are also offering the "American Farmer" as a premium. In subscribing state which premium you wish. All three papers will be sent one year for $2.00. Subscribe at once.

In answering advertisements please mention this paper.

Miss Wilburn, of Columbus, Ga., is visiting Miss Mattie Wright.

The Democratic ticket, without a scratch, is the ticket for white men to vote.

Died, in this place, on the night of the 27th inst., of flux, Mrs. Josephine Gillam.

Miss Myrtle Alvis, of Brierfield, is visiting relatives in Clanton. We hope she may have a pleasant stay.

The VIEW returns thanks to Mr. Willis Lowe for a large 35 pound water-melon and some very fine peaches.

Clanton is soon to have three new business houses opened. Our merchants intend to make things boom here in the fall.

Slaton & McGlathery, at Birmingham, are the coming machinery men of Alabama. Try them if you want new machinery.

Mrs. Mac. Thompson and family, of Wetumpka, are spending the summer at this place. They are stopping with Mrs. A. M. Adams.

Mr. W. F. Claughton, of Cooper's, sends the VIEW the champion peaches of the season. They are of the variety known as the "Claughton Favorite."

On election day there will be a county registrar at every voting precinct in the county; and any voter, who has not been registered, and who is a qualified elector, may register then and there.

Mr. S. T. Brittle, the excellent superintendent of the Pratt Saw Mill, was in Clanton on Monday. As chairman of the county executive committee, he is hard at work for the Democratic ticket.

Mr. Whittaker has removed his shop into the Randolph store west of the railroad. He has some wood material on hand and says he is prepared to do work in his line in the best style and at low rates.

Prof. W. U. Abbee, principal of Verbena Academy, and our worthy County Superintendent of Education, has been tendered an assistantship in the State Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Auburn, of which Institution he is an alumnus. We learn that he has not yet accepted the position.

Mr. A. J. Hall expects to raise 200 bushels of corn on five acres of land this season. This is another evidence that our pine lands are good for something. Why is it that such a farmer has such a hankering for legislative honors? Echo answers, why?

Withdraws from the Race.

Mr. E. H. Lowe, Jr., requests us to say that he is no longer a candidate for the office of Sheriff. He says that he made a mistake in running against the Democratic nominee, and he intends to give the nominee his hearty support. A good example set.

Jemison Jottings.

Health of our community good.

Work on Messrs. J. P. Allen & Co.'s new store house is progressing finely. Mr. J. L. Gartman, of Clanton, is the contractor.

Mr. J. T. Mullins, of Verbena, has moved his family to our town. It is with pleasure that we welcome them to our midst.

Politics booming—booming for the nominees of course. Mr. J. S. Edwards, of Clanton, spoke at this place on the 19th inst., and Hons. Wilour F. Foster, of Tuskegee, Jefferson Falkner, of Mountain Creek, and Richard H. Powell, of Union Springs, delivered splendid speeches here Tuesday, the 22d. All the above in the interest of Democracy, and A. J. Hall, and J. G. Barbour spoke in the interest of Independents, Republicans or Radicals.

Fellow-citizens, remember that next Monday is election day. Be sure to go the polls, and persuade your neighbors to go with you, and remember the importance of voting right. Go to the polls and cast your votes for the nominees.

E.

And old time "Brunswick stew" and dinner given at Lomax on last Saturday by that whole-souled gentleman, Mr. J. F. Maull, to his mill hands, was enjoyed by quite a number from this place. During the day Mr. Maull showed us over his new mill. Its capacity is about 18,000 feet per day. He had just filled an order for 13,000 feet, which he had shipped to Provo, Utah Territory, which shows how far our lumber is shipped. Mr. Maull ships regularly to the States of Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin and other Western and Northern States, as we noted from his order book. Mr. Maull is an energetic and enterprising citizen and deserves the success with which he is meeting. His planing mill is turning out some beautiful flooring and ceiling. Mr. Maull is laying aside every strip of "curled" ceiling, and proposes building a dwelling for himself and to ceil it with this. Such a house will be beautiful and unique, and a curiosity in this section in its way. Lomax is on a general rise and we are glad to note the fact.

The Radical circulars which have been distributed announcing the grand pan-jam-drum to come off here next Saturday are said to contain the likeness of a dirty looking bird printed at the head. A certain citizen remarks that this is significant—significant of how the buzzards will hover around the carcasses of the entire "kangaroo crew" after the 4th of August.

A printed circular states that the "kangaroo crew," headed by the captain of the band, will orate and give another exhibition on Saturday next at Clanton. A large crowd may be expected on that day to hear these hybrid performers and orators. The "big kangaroo," especially, is known far and wide as an "amoosin' cuss," and is bound to draw a crowd.

A negro comitted rape upon the person of a respectable white woman in the western part of the county about six miles from Calliersville last week. He made his escape. A number of the citizens of the neighborhood were making a vigorous search for the fiend at last accounts and our informant stated that if caught, he would certainly be hung.

It is useless to talk of there being no Radical party in this county. The Radical and negro vote on next Monday is going to surprise not a few, and if there is a serious divide in the Democratic ranks, the Radical ticket may be elected.

Let us roll up a big majority for the nominated ticket next Monday. The ticket will certainly be elected, but every man should go to the polls and help to swell the majority by casting his vote for the ticket.

A Printer's Dream.

A printer sat in his office chair,
His boots were patched and rent;
His coat the gaudiest, whitest hue,
He'd nearly worn it out.
While sadly thinking of business debt, old Morpheus slowly round him crept, and before he knew it he soundly slept; and sleeping, he dreamed that he was dead, from trouble and toil his spirit had fled, and that not even a cow-bell tolled for the peaceful seat of his cowhide soul. As he wandered among the shades, the smoke and scroll in lower Hades, he shortly observed an iron door that, creakingly swung on hinges sear, but the entrance was crossed by a red-hot bar, and Satan himself stood peeping out and watching for travelers thereabout, and this to the passing printer spoke, and with growling voice the echoes woke: "Come in, my dear, it shall cost you nothing, and never fear; this is the place where I cook the ones who never pay their subscription dunis, for, though in life they may escape, they will find when dead it is too late; I will show you the place where I melt them thin, with red-hot chains and scraps of tin, and also where I comb their heads with broken glass and melted lead, and if of refreshments they only think there's boiling water for them to drink; there's the red-hot grindstone to grind down his nose, and red-hot rings to wear on his toes; and if they mention they don't like fire I'll sew up their mouths with red-hot wire; and then, dear sir, you should see them squirm while I roll them over and cook to a turn." With these last words the printer awoke, and thought it all a practical joke; but still at times so real did it seem that he cannot believe it was all a dream; and often he thinks with a chuckle and grin, of the fate of those who save their tin and never pay the printer.

Goree was seen prowling around Wetumpka the day of the Democratic Senatorial Convention. He may possibly have the opportunity to visit Clanton next Saturday, and if he does, we may all get a peep at the big ugly "leader of the Lilliputians."

Some men object to a nomination made by fifty of the best men of the county, but they are willing to vote for a nomination made by one or two dissatisfied "Independents."

DEATH IN THE BREAKERS.

THE TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE OF SEVEN MEN.

Rescued by the Steamship of Gen. Babcock and the Lost Expedition.

Col. E. B. Smith, of the Lighthouse Department, gives the following story of the disaster in Florida:

"The lighthouse tender Pharos sailed from Charleston May 23 bound for Mosquito Inlet, Fla., having on board Gen. O. E. Babcock, Messrs. Suter, Luckey and myself, besides the crew. Off Tybee we were struck by a northeaster, which blew very hard until we anchored off St. John's bar. Before leaving Charlestown we had written to the tug agent at Jacksonville, notifying him that we would telegraph him from St. John's bar for a tug to tow us into Mosquito Inlet. We did telegraph for the tug, and then set sail for Mosquito Inlet, where we arrived on Saturday evening. We kept off the inlet until Monday morning, occasionally running near enough to see if we could get in. That morning we anchored about half a mile off the outer buoy, in order to attempt the passage in a boat. Capt. Anderson did not think it would be safe to attempt to go inside, but in order to ascertain how matters stood, Capt. Anderson and myself got into a boat with six seamen and proceeded to the outer bar buoy. Capt. Anderson decided that an entrance was impracticable, and we returned to the vessel and so reported to Gen. Babcock, who concluded not to make the attempt that day. At 12 o'clock, however, a large whaleboat, manned by six sailors and a coxswain, came out and boarded the vessel. The General, thinking that as the boat came out so easily she could return with as much safety, changed his mind and decided to make the attempt. He, Luckey, Suter and myself got in with the seven seamen, making four landsmen and seven sailors in all who started. Of the four landsmen I alone lived to reach the shore. The boat made headway enough until we passed the bar buoy. Then a roller struck us, which we weathered all right. On the crest of the second roller the steering oar snapped in two and the coxswain was washed overboard. The boat then filled. The third roller brought the coxswain back to the boat and he was saved. By this time the boat had turned over. We passed a line lengthwise her keel to hold on by, and all of us grasped it and held on while sea after sea washed over us. These seas were about one hundred and fifty feet apart, which allowed us a little breathing spell between them. For a quarter of an hour this struggle with the waves continued, and I do not hesitate to say that a cooler and braver set of men under such circumstances I never saw. Not a man asked for help, though we frequently assisted each other when we saw help was needed and we could possibly do so. There was none of that cowardly shoving aside, and fighting for the best positions, which is too often witnessed when life is the prize contended for. We were washed away from the boat time and again, but another wave would take us back. At one time Gen. Babcock was swept off, and the next wave failed to bring him all the way back to the boat; he floated near it, however, and by clinging to the rope with my left hand, I managed to reach him with the tips of the fingers of my right hand. Finally I got his hand into mine and pulled him up on the boat again. Soon after this I noticed that Mr. L. P. Luckey was exhausted, and a moment afterward he gave up and was swept away. As he floated off he appeared to me to be unconscious. Very shortly after the drowning of Luckey the wind and tide, which had been setting in shore all the time, took us into the surf. In the surf Suter and Gen. Babcock both gave out and were drowned, and soon after them one of the men also. All of us had been washed from the boat. The last I saw of Gen. Babcock, before his body came ashore, he was floating away face downward. I concluded, as did the rest, if I remained in the surf I would be killed by the boat, so I made for the shore followed by the rest. I could not see the the shore, but I knew the breakers were going in and I followed them. But the trouble was when we would touch bottom the undertow would whirl us out to sea again. I made effort after effort to gain a foothold, and if I had not succeeded when I did I would have been too exhausted to make another effort."

Pensions for Veterans.

The Rev. Coryden Millard, of Milwaukee, who served as Chaplain of the Fourth Heavy Artillery, United States Army, during the war, arrived in New York on Tuesday. His slender, erect figure and unmistakably military bearing will be seen by many old soldiers during the coming week, as well as by civilians, on whom he will call to secure signatures to a petition urging the passage by Congress of the Lovering Pension bill. This bill is the outcome of the petition of the Soldiers' and Citizens' National League, organized at Milwaukee last year by Mr. Millard, asking that all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war be granted a pension of at least $8 per month.

"I have just returned from a visit to Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Colorado, Indiana and Kansas," said Mr. Millard to a Times reporter, "and in all of these States I found that the petition for the passage of the bill received hearty encouragement from the people, the Governors, and all the departments of State. Some 12,000 citizens and soldiers have signed my petition, which is also indorsed by 1,600 of the 2,000 posts of the Grand Army. I called on Gen. Cleveland recently and he gave me his support. Ten Governors and chiefs have signed the petition.

"I think the bill will become a law.

"Certainly," said Mr. Millard. "Our cause is just, deserved to meet with success. We have the right on our side, and we will win."—New York Times.

"I'm kinder lookin' around the diggin's to-day," he exclaimed as he stopped at one of the stands and nibbled at an onion. "I kinder need one, but yet I kinder hope I shan't be able to find him."

"How's that?"

"Well, there ain't no profit in a hired man no more. No, sir, he's no good any longer."

"What's the reason?"

"Oh, a dozen reasons. First and foremost, times have changed, and the hired man has changed with 'em. Ah! sir, it makes me sad when I think of the hired men we had before the war—great big fellers with the strength of an ox and the vim of a locomotive. I didn't have to holler my lungs out to git one of 'em out of bed at 3 o'clock in the morning, and it was all I could do to coax 'em to go to bed at 10 o'clock at night. I'm afraid that we shan't never see no more hired men with keepin' around for their bread."

"That's sad."

"It's sad, and more, too. Now, as I said, I want a hired man. I'm willing to pay $11 or $12 a month for a smart one. Some farmers want a man to work all day and all night, but that ain't me. I have never asked one to git out of bed before 3 o'clock—never. I allus give my man three-quarters of an hour at noon, unless the hogs git out, or cattle break in, or a shower is coming up. After a man has worked right along for nine hours his system wants at least half an hour to brace up in. They don't quit work on some farms till 8 o'clock, but I'm no such slave-driver. At half-past 7 I tell my man to knock off. All he has to do after that is to feed the stock, cut a little wood, mow some grass for the horses, milk four cows, fill up the water-trough, start a smudge in the smoke-house, and pull a few weeds in the garden. I never hired a man who didn't grow fat on my work, and they allus left me feeling that they hadn't half earned their wages."

He stopped long enough to wipe a tear from his eyes, and then went on:

"And now look at the hired man of to-day! He wears white shirts and collars. He won't eat with a knife. He wants napkins when he eats, and if we don't hang up a clean towel once a week he wipes on his handkercher. Call him at 8 and he gets up at 6. He wants a whole hour at noon, and after supper he trots off to a singing-school or sits down to a newspaper. Fifteen years ago if my hired man was sick for half a day I could dock him. If he died I could take out a month's wages for the trouble. He was glad to git store-orders for his pay, and he would wash in the rain-barrel and wipe on the clothes-line. There's been a change, sir, an awful change, and if a reaction don't set in pretty soon you will witness the downfall of agriculture in this country."

"Then you won't hire another?"

"Wall, I don't just say. Work is powerfully pressing, but I'm going slow. Before I hire him I want to know whether he's a man who'll pass his plate for more meat and taters, and whether we've got to use starch in doing up his shirts. The last man I had took me to task for not holding family prayers twice a day, and after I had done so I found it was only a game of his to beat me out of half an hour a day. He thought he had a pretty soft thing, and he looked mighty lonesome when I cut "Old Hundred" down to two lines and got through with the Lord's Prayer in forty seconds."—Detroit Free Press.

DOMESTIC RECIPES.

For the filling for an orange short-cake, take two large oranges, peel them, chop them fine, remove the seeds, add half of a peeled lemon, and one cup of sugar. Spread between the layers of short-cake while it is hot. This may be used for layer-cake filling also, but in that case add the well-beaten white of one egg.

Cream cake, so dear to the heart of the children, can be made by splitting patty-pan cakes; taking out a portion of the center and filling the space with thick custard. There need be no waste as the pieces cut out may be used in the foundation for a nice pudding.

Prairie beans when young and tender make a good salad. Cut them in small pieces, boil in salted water until they are tender, drain them well, and mix with them some onions chopped fine, and pour over them a mayonnaise dressing. The onions may be left out if you prefer to do so.

A correspondent says she has canned pie-plant with good results, by taking it instead of boiling it, she cut the stalks in pieces about an inch long, put in earthen pudding dishes, or on pie plates, scattered sugar over it abundantly and baked; then she put jar cans into a pan of hot water, on the top of the stove, and when the pie-plant was tender put it into the cans, covered by the juice and the sugar in the dish, and when the cans were full sealed it up. She says that the juice thus formed is much richer, and that it takes less sugar to sweeten it than is required in the boiling process.

IS THE MOON INHABITED?

THE IMPORTANT DISCOVERY MADE BY PROFESSOR BLENDMANN.

How it was Made and What it Revealed—More Observations to be Made.

At the astronomical observatory of Berlin, says a translation from Nyt Dagen Helsingfor, a discovery has been made which, without doubt, will cause the greatest sensation, not only among the adepts in science, but even among the most learned. Professor Blendmann, in that city, has found, beyond a doubt, that our old friend, the moon, is not merely a lantern which kindly furnishes light for the loving youth and gas companies of our planet, but the abode of living beings, for which he is prepared to furnish proofs most convincing. This question has agitated humanity from time immemorial, and has been the object of the gravest interest. But the opinions have always differed very widely, and no two minds held one and the same. Already in ancient times the belief prevailed that the moon was inhabited with some higher organized, intelligent beings, somewhat resembling man, and in order to communicate with them the earthly enthusiasts planted rows of trees several miles in length so as to form the figure of the Pythagorean theorem.

The celebrated astronomer, Schroder, in the beginning of the present century, fancied that he could detect places on the surface of the moon which periodically grew lighter and darker, and from this fact he derived the conclusion that the phenomenon was a proof of existing vegetation. During the last few decades, however, the idea of life on the moon has been held up to ridicule and totally scorned by men of learning. But, nevertheless, it has been proved to be correct. By accident Dr. Blendmann found that the observations of the moon gave but unsatisfactory results, owing to the intensity of the light power of the moon's atmosphere, which is so strong that it affects the correctness of the observations in a very high degree. He then conceived the idea to make the object glass of the refractor less sensitive to the rays of light, and for that purpose he darkened it with the smoke of camphor. It took months of experimenting before he succeeded in finding his right degree of obscurity of the glass, and when finally found he then, with the refractor, took a very accurate photo of the moon's surface. This he placed in a sun microscope, which gave the picture a diameter of fifty-five and a half feet. The revelation was most startling. It perfectly overturned all hitherto entertained ideas of the moon's surface. Those level plains which formerly were held to be oceans of water, proved to be verdant fields, and what formerly were considered mountains turned out as deserts of sand and oceans of water. Towns and habitations of all kinds were plainly discernible, as well as signs of industry and traffic. The learned professor's study and observations of old Luna will be repeated every full moon when the sky is clear, and we venture to predict that the time is not far off when we shall know more about the man in the moon than as being an agent in English politics.

An Empty Tin Can.

PICKED UP BY TWO TRAMPS IN THE OIL REGIONS WITH STARTLING RESULTS.

Two tramps begged some coffee at a store in Warren, Pa. They had an old tin can, in which they said they intended to boil it. They took the coffee and went to an out-of-the-way spot near the gas works. One of them began to build a fire, and the other placed the can on the ground. Seating himself on the can, he watched his companion busying himself with the fire. When the latter was ready the tramp who had built it picked up a stone and jokingly exclaimed to the other one:

"Get up there and produce the supper!"

At the same time he tossed the stone toward his companion. It struck the can with considerable force, and instantly there was a terrible explosion. The tramp who was sitting on the can was thrown several feet in the air, and the other one was knocked down by the concussion. The latter jumped up and ran away. The other one was picked up and carried to the county poorhouse. His hips and thighs and the lower part of his back were literally torn away. He at first gave his name as Robert Ellis, but on being told that he would die he said that Ellis was not his name. He then gave to the authorities another name, which is that of a member of one of the most prominent families in Pennsylvania. The authorities will not reveal it, at the request of the dying tramp.

The can which the tramps had picked up was an empty nitro glycerine can. Enough of the compound remained in it to cause the explosion as stated, only a few drops being required to prove extremely destructive. Similar explosions through the careless disposal of empty cans are not uncommon in the oil regions.

The Kamtchatkans.

According to a report sent by Lieut. Pilkenfeck to the Moscow Gazette, there will soon be no Kamtchatkans left in Kamtchatka. The population is a diminished league (less than the whole of France, which was once above 50,000) had in 1830 fallen off to 6,300. The only occupations of the inhabitants are shooting and fishing; fish food consists almost exclusively of fish, for the annual increase of crops rarely exceeds 90 for which not even forty pounds of flour can be brought. On the glorious local things are very cheap; thus mortality is there yearly if even greater than in the rest. Of the Commodore Islands, however, which are separated by a distance of less than 200 miles from Kamtchatka, the population is flourishing again under the humanitarian supervision of an American [illegible].

Locating Gold Mines.

When the chief [illegible] were [illegible] Public Square last Saturday afternoon.

Let's start this Saturday to go fishing. A father who can't shove in half a day with his boy now and then is a poor stick of a man. If we fish from a wharf or log or boat we may sing and talk as much as we will, but we must keep feet and hands as quiet as possible. Why? Because the fish will feel us. Fish do not hear, but they feel in place of it. At a great fish exhibition in New York State a few years ago Seth Green proved this fact to the people in a very plain manner. He placed a brass band among the squeals, and at a given signal every horn blew its loudest blast. Not a fish in any of the tanks moved, Mr. Green then took out his knife and struck a blow on an iron rod running along in front of the tanks, and 10 every fish made a sudden jump as the jar reached him. If you are on a wharf keep the feet still. If you are in a boat, be twice as cautious. Every sound will be taken up by the water and carried along for many feet.

Let's post ourselves a bit as we fish. Now, then, if you fish for rock-bass drop your hook near an old wreck—close to the piles of a wharf—down beside a rock. These bass are shad caught in called domestic fish. They make their homes in one spot instead of traveling about. They will bite either minnow or worm.

Black bass feed in weedy spots and along the channel banks. Mullet and suckers will take the bait only when the hook rests on the bottom. A pickerel will bite at your hook much quicker if it is moving.

Every species of fish has its regular hours for feeding, the same as you have for taking your meals, but bass and pickerel digest their food the soonest, and are therefore most always hungry. A pike or pickerel weighing ten pounds will pull a dead weight of twenty pounds off a level bank when hooked. These same fish have been known to jump at least four feet clear of the surface, and to throw themselves from one pond into another.

"Can a fish see at night?"

"Just as well as a cat."

"Does he ever sleep?"

"He does. If you will watch a gold fish for a day or two you will find him taking occasional naps."

"How fast can a fish swim?"

"If man could invent some way to get up a race between fishes the result would astonish you. A pickerel is probably one of the swiftest of our fresh water fish. He moves for a short distance so fast that you simply see a flash. Almost every species of fish can see on all sides and behind him as well as in front. Their gills are the most delicate filter in the world. Every tooth in the mouth of a fish which preys upon other fish is set in such a way that every attempt to escape fastens the victim more firmly. A red-horse or mullet weighing five pounds could not take a small apple into its mouth. A pike weighing three pounds could almost swallow a man's fist. When a bass is first hooked he will run toward you. A pike or pickerel will run from you. A [illegible] and [illegible] will jump for the surface. A mullet will dive for the bottom.

"Indeed, my boy, if I were your teacher I'd sooner post you on our domestic fish, their anatomy, habits, etc., than to have you sit for two hours and rattle off to me in a sing-song way:

"Goose Creek rises in the mountains of eastern part of Japan—and the Virgin Islands are in the Caribbean Sea—and the soil of the Channel Islands is said to grow cross-eyed men and hump-backed women without fertilizers," etc.

An Unnatural Mother.

A drunken woman, dragging a screaming girl, aged seven years, through the street, attracted a crowd. The little one's eyes brightened as she spied a tall, well-dressed man, and lifting her hands appealingly, she exclaimed:

"Oh, papa, come and help me. Mamma wants to kill me!"

"My God! Mary," said the man, in astonished tone of voice, "can it be you?"

"Yes," the woman responded, sheepishly. "You can't get rid of me. I'm like a bad penny, always sure to turn up. Shut up, you brat," she said, as the child began to cry, "or I'll thrash the life out of you."

The man sprang forward, there was a tussle, the woman's face was scratched, and an officer approaching, took the party to Essex Market.

"She is my wife," said the man. "I was once a prosperous clergyman, but she drank heavily. I neglected my business, and ruin was the result. Six months ago I had her committed to the Inebriate Asylum and placed my two children in an orphan's home. She was released from the asylum this morning, immediately got drunk again, and went to the home and stole the child."

The unnatural mother was committed for six months.—N. Y. World.

The Wealth of Trinity.

"I believe," said a down-town real estate man, "$300,000,000 would about cover the total wealth of the Trinity Church corporation. It is certainly as rich as the Vanderbilts, and has a greater ring of profit. Besides the immense rents coming in from property in New York city, the church corporation holds mortgages by certain wealthy Episcopal Church citizens all over the country, on which it loans money at 7 per cent. interest, payable quarterly. The fund is under the control of a board of Trustees, unlimited from the vestrymen of old Trinity and St. Paul's, and if you think they give money away, or handle the revenue on benevolent gospel principles, go and try to negotiate a loan. They will tie you up with iron bonds and make you come to time like a Shylock. They keep it in the family, because it's too good a thing to let go. All the members get rich."

Nothing Like It.

No medicine has ever been known so effectual in the cure of all those diseases arising from an impure [illegible] blood as Scovill's Sarsaparilla, or Blood and Liver Syrup, the universal remedy for the cure of scrofula, white swellings, rheumatism, pimples, blotches, eruptions, venereal sores and diseases, consumption, goitre, boils, cancers, and all kindred diseases. There is no better means of securing a beautiful complexion than by using Scovill's Sarsaparilla, or Blood and Liver Syrup, which cleanses the blood and gives permanent beauty to the skin.

MARGARET.

BY ROSE HARTWICK THORPE,
Author of "Curfew Must Not Ring To-Night."

Oh, Margaret, beautiful Margaret,
In the hush of the twilight cold,
The sun on a glittering throne has set
In a cloud of amber and gold,
And the great, green waves with their white caps wet
O'er the beach to thy feet have rolled.

Oh! what is the charm of the great, green sea,
The sea with its roar and its gloom?
The treacherous sea, how it shouts in glee
O'er each jewel-decked coral tomb.
Art waiting the lover who went from thee
In the light of a golden moon?

Art waiting the lover whose kiss one day
Was pressed on thy quivering lips?
The lover who sailed from your side away
In one of those swift-sailing ships;
O'er the waves that bright in the sunshine lay,
'Neath the glow of his finger tips?

Whenever the hush of the twilight creeps
O'er the earth, with her fair feet wet;
When the stars come out and the great world sleeps,
When the murmuring waters fret
On the sandy shore, then she comes and weeps,
Lonely, sorrowful Margaret.

Then she sits 'mid the gleaming sands
By the shadowy ivied wall,
And over the clasp of her trembling hands
Like a show'r the tear drops fall,
While the sea brings whispers of far-off lands
And the blue sky bends o'er all.

"Oh! bring back my lover to me," she cries,
"Must I die by the sea alone?
Oh! pitiful Father, in Paradise,
Stoop down from Thy glorious throne,
And grant to the light of my waiting eyes,
One glimpse of his face, only one."

And the sea rolls in with a mighty swell,
Will it bring a curse or a crown?
For no echoing murmur comes to tell
Of the home-bound ship that went down
'Mid the hidden reefs, with never a knell
From the slumbering harbor town.

All about her the water moans and raves,
She is drenched with the falling sleet.
Something lies dark in the arms of the waves
Where the sky and the waters meet.
Lo! a victim snatched from the coral graves
Is cast on the beach at her feet.

Oh! beautiful Margaret, pale and fair,
By the sea no longer alone;
For two faces lie in the midnight there
With their features like chiseled stone,
And the sea weed drifts from his tangled hair
To the sunny locks of her own.

MRS. MILLS'S SPRING SUIT.

BY MARY N. PRESCOTT.

"Now," said Mrs. Mills, as she took her semi-annual dividend from the envelope—"now I will have a spring suit; it's high time, too, and I mean to have it made by Furbelow. Once in my life I want a dress that will fit like a glove and look stylish. I'm dead tired of being dowdy, and running about in ready-made gowns that hang on me like a bag, and ravel apart if one looks at them. I think I will have a gray Henrietta cloth and gray velvet. I saw one at an 'opening' that was too lovely for anything—but a wedding. I am so sick of black cashmere and black silk; it seems to me I've never worn anything else. To be sure, black is more economical; your next neighbor can't be certain whether you had your black gown this spring or last, and it's becoming and lady-like. I shouldn't care to have Mrs. Brown say, 'There goes Mrs. Mills in her everlasting gray gown; when shall we see the last of it?' Perhaps I should get to be known as the woman in gray; and then gray spots so easily, and benzine isn't all that fancy painted it. To be sure, it would dye—and shrink. Brown is a durable color, and not so pretentious. I could never wear a gray gown except on fete days; still that gray gown has haunted my imagination; it's like a poem, like the first sight of the silver catkins, the first sound of the robbin. However, I'll go into town, and get patterns, and see Furbelow."

So Mrs. Mills went in to town, and obtained patterns at the best shop; patterns of velvet, of Henrietta-cloth, of cashmere, of armure, of bourette, of bison-cloth and what not; patterns of gray, of London smoke, of ashes of roses, of clover red. Then she proceeded to Furbelow's, and looked at fashion plates, and asked questions. "Here's a gray we have just finished for Mrs. Hyson, of Mount Vernon street: it's thought to be very chic," said the assistant. "Our price for making is forty-five dollars only." Mrs. Mills sighed. It was plain she could not have a gown made by Furbelow, fit her never so wisely. Her check was but for fifty dollars. When she reached home with her patterns, in rather a pleasant frame of mind—for even the selection of patterns is a kind of shopping which exhilarates the feminine heart, more or less—she found Mrs. Armstrong waiting for her.

"You see," explained Mrs. Armstrong, "we are getting up a testimonial for dear Mr. Glucose—his thirtieth anniversary—and we knew you would wish to add something; all of our best people have given. Miss Clapp gave fifty dollars; nobody has given less than five except old Mrs. Blunt, and you know how stingy she is. She gave a dollar."

Mrs. Mills gave five dollars. "She couldn't do less," said Mrs. Armstrong afterward. "I was determined she should get off with a dollar."

"That rather cuts into my spring suit," said she; "but I can hope it made without the velvet, I suppose."

She returned to her patterns that day, and meditated upon them; it was so hard to decide. If gray shouldn't happen to become her. Brown might look old-womanish. Black was the safer, of course. She consulted with her friends and with several of her feminine relatives. She made up her mind in favor of gray on Monday, and chose brown on Tuesday. She found her attention wandering in church from the preacher's text to the parishioners' toilettes. The woman who hesitates is lost, we are told, and Mrs. Mills was still debating the subject when a letter arrived from her dearest friend.

"You will be glad to hear" (she wrote) "that my wedding day is set for the 29th. You must come and stop here. It will be a quiet affair, without much dress. Malcolm's partner has sent me such a lovely necklace. In haste.

"NELLIE."

"That means a wedding present," thought Mrs. Mills. "She gave me such a beautiful vinaigrette when I was married; and ten dollars is all I can spare. Well, I suppose I can get my gown for thirty-five, and have a dressmaker come to the house; that will be cheaper. Of course it won't fit like Furbelow's." And she went to look up a wedding present for ten dollars; and as she couldn't find anything for just ten dollars that suited the circumstances of her friend, and as she had the money in hand, she paid fifteen for the loveliest piece of bric-a-brac, that had just been marked down from twenty dollars. "I needn't give so much for the material for my gown," she reflected, as she counted her remaining ducats.

"Have you decided about your spring suit yet?" asked a friend, later. "Is it to be gray or brown?"

"I don't know," answered Mrs. Mills. "I have been obliged to spend some of my money, and that makes it difficult to decide."

It was a few days afterward, when she had happened in at a neighbor's in the evening for a game at whist, that the conversation fell upon the Cincinnati sufferers. Everybody expressed great commiseration. "Yes," said Mr. Salem, one of the guests present, "we are all very sorry, but it doesn't keep us awake nights, and we don't like to abridge our own material comforts for their sake; we are sorry in a poetical, immaterial way. Now who of us would give our personal adornments for their benefit? I mean to pass round the hat, and see who is in earnest about this business. Here goes my seal ring, my intaglio, for an example; it came from Rome, and was blessed by the Pope."

"And here go my ear-rings," said a lady present. "I always disliked them!"

"And here's my locket," cried the hostess; "lockets have gone out of fashion."

"I have no ornaments to give," said Mrs. Mills.

"You have a tiny gold chain around your neck, Mrs. Mills," whispered her neighbor. "Do you wear it for a charm?"

"Mrs. Mills has charms enough without it," said Mrs. Langworthy, aside, at her elbow.

"Hush!" returned Mrs. Mills. "I have my pocket-book. Perhaps ten dollars will answer quite as well: it is the smallest bill in it."

"Oh, give him the chain—he only asked for ornaments—and save your money," advised a friend.

But Mrs. Mills only replied with a flush, and threw in a ten-dollar bill, mentally calculating the shrinkage of her spring suit, perhaps.

"Twenty dollars is rather a small amount for a spring suit," she reflected later. "Let me see, ten yards at a dollar a yard—it's no use to buy cheaper, for the elbows will be out in no time if I do; that leaves ten dollars for the dressmaker, linings, buttons and extras. I'll ask how much Miss Slasher has a day."

"Three dollars a day is my price, madame," reported Slasher; "and I might have it done in three days if you are in a hurry. I suppose you have a machine?"

"No."

"I could bring mine, but that's a dollar extra."

"And nothing left for linings and extras," thought Mrs. Mills. "I must give up Slasher too." She went home lost in thought. Her spring suit was a problem which would have vexed Newton's ingenuity to solve: the laws of gravitation were trifling in comparison; and while she worked over its solution an acquaintance who had seen better days rang her bell.

"You can't guess what I came for," she said, coloring furiously, and unfolding a lace fichu. "You know I got into debt when the children had the measles, and just now I want ten dollars desperately. Now here's this fichu—what earthly use is it to me, a poor widow doing her own house-work? I haven't worn it for ten years. I see they're coming in again, and I thought maybe you would give me ten dollars for it; and not feel cheated."

"But, Mrs. Knowles, it's worth fifty at least. I couldn't think of giving you ten dollars for it; it would be like grinding the face of the poor. But why don't you raffle it?"

"I don't want to publish my poverty, that's all. If don't mind [illegible] old friend like you knowing it; it's [illegible] enough anyway. But when you raffle anything people always feel as if they were conferring an everlasting favor upon you, and those who don't draw the prize think they've made you a present. I don't care if it is worth a fortune. I want ten dollars now more than I ever shall again."

"But I will lend it to you—I will give it to you. I have ten dollars that I don't exactly know what to do with. Do let me have the rare happiness of making a present."

"No; let me pawn the fichu to you—that's a dear!—and maybe I'll be able to redeem it some day; and if I can't, maybe you'll be able to pay me what you think it's worth. Now, is it a bargain?"

And Mrs. Knowles went home with her money, and Mrs. Mills laid the fichu in the drawer and counted her change. "Well, I must have a gown," she said; and before the remaining ten dollars should melt away she went out and bought ten yards of black bunting.

"A black gown is always safe, especially for a widow," she thought, and she purchased the last Bazar pattern, and hired a sewing machine for a week. And while she puzzled over the paper pattern, Mr. Langworthy dropped in. Before she married, Mr. Langworthy had been a lover of Mrs. Mill's, and there had been a lovers' quarrel, and Mr. Mills had stepped into the breach he had helped to make. All that had happened years ago—Mrs. Mills would have told you, when she was very young and foolish.

"Dressmaking, eh?" said Mr. Langworthy. "Why is this thus?"

"I don't know why I can't make a gown as well as Furbelow."

"Is this the gray cashmere and velvet with which you were to astonish the natives?"

"The very same."

"You should not give five dollars to Mr. Glucose, nor fifteen for Miss Nellie's wedding gift, nor ten to Mrs. Knowles, nor ten to the Cincinnati—"

"How did you know Mr. Langworthy?"

"Mrs. Armstrong told me of the first indiscretion. I assisted you to select the wedding present, Mrs. Knowles confided in me, and I saw the ten dollars drop into Mr. Salem's hat for Cincinnati. Let me ask, by-the-way, why you didn't put in the necklace you wore that night. Was it because you had forgiven the donor, and loved the gift for his sake?"

"Perhaps so," answered Mrs. Mills.

It was a few days later when an expressman left a huge box and a tiny letter at Mrs. Mills's door.

"DEAR COUSIN" (the letter began),—"I've just lost an uncle in the Cincinnati flood, a great-uncle whom I never saw, and hardly ever heard of; but papa says we must wear black, and here's my lovely gown, that Furbelow just sent home, going a-begging. As your gowns used to fit me to a T when I visited at your house in the days of my impecuniosity—that word's so big I'm not sure of the spelling—perhaps you won't mind accepting this from your loving cousin,

"LUCIA.

"P.S.—I can't bear to part with it, but it's no use to me, and will be out of style before I can wear it."

It was a gray silk and velvet, a perfect symphony of a gown, the very shade Mrs. Mills had coveted.

"It will answer for my wedding dress," she said, with a little blush.—Harper's Bazar.

The Holland Succession.

The serious illness of William III., King of Holland, and of his son the Prince of Orange, heir to the crown, renders the question of the succession a matter of grave importance to the Dutch people. The long existing sense of danger to the national autonomy, both of Belgium and Holland, from the recognized longing of Prussia for the aggrandisement of these two countries, was exhibited by King William during his recent visit to Leopold II. at Brussels, when at a banquet, addressing the general officers present, he alluded to a possible union of the armies of the two countries to oppose invasion of one or the other by some Power which he failed to designate. Last year the two kings had a friendly meeting at Spa, and the entente cordiale existing between them is noticeable. King William is not liked by the Hollanders. He is irascible, overbearing and takes no pains to ingratiate himself with his subjects. Queen Emma, on the contrary, is the delight of the people, her affiable manners, her charming person and the ease with which she manages the ill-tempered old monarch having made her a universal favorite. It is not strange, therefore, that a large and powerful party should be preparing to support her for the regency in the event of the demise both of the King and the Crown Prince, and that determined objection should be made to Bismarck's intrigues in favor of the house of Nassau. Germany, which is hungry both for Antwerp and for the mouth of the Rhine, may yet find herself confronted by the Belgian and Dutch armies, which combined would be by no means an ignoble foe.

THE plan adopted last year in London of sending poor and delicate children into the country for three weeks in midsummer has proved very successful. They are boarded in cottagers' families at the rate of about $1.25 per week. Manchester and other towns are making an effort to the same end.

GREENLAND ICE PACKS

THE SUPERINTENDENT OF MINES ACCOUNTS FOR THE MYSTERY.

Why We Have Icebergs in Such Large Quantities—A Bad Look Ahead.

[From the New York Herald.]

The report of the ice packs near Greenland, just brought by the bark Fluorine to Philadelphia, clears up the mystery of the early efflux of ice on the Atlantic this year. The barks Fluorine and Silica arrived at Arsuk Fiord, April 9, from Hamburg, and took refuge in the harbor of Kyrtalik. The Silica, after having been driven north to latitude 63 degrees, longitude 54 degrees west, encountered a broad ice belt, and subsequently sailed along a pack fifty miles, which was so high that one could not see over it. The superintendent of the mines at Ivigtut, South Greenland, stated that the past winter has been extraordinarily severe for frost, snow and gales, and the adjacent fiord froze deeper and further out from shore than ever before.

Fortunately for the navigation of the Arctic seas beyond the great rush of heavy ice from Davis's Strait ceased after May 4, and the Fluorine encountered no ice in coming southward. This fact suggests that the ice masses in the approaches to Smith's Sound may have thinned out in some degree by the time the relief steamers—the Thetis, the Bear, and the Alert—reach that latitude. It may, however, be found that the extraordinary stream of ice which for some months has been moving off the Labrador coast, will not be exhausted till the middle of next month.

The exceptional iciness of the Greenland seas last winter may have been, as Dr. John Rae has recently suggested, the indirect cause of the exceptionally mild winter of 1884, in the British Islands. The natural effect of so large a flow of cold water from the north, meeting the warm Gulf Stream at right angles, says an English explorer, would not only be to deflect the latter to the southward of its usual course, causing it to strike our shores further south, but also in much greater volume, because a much larger supply is required to replace the increased quantity from the Arctic." This reasoning is sound, but it would seem as if both the phenomenal glacial flow west of Greenland and the mild British winter are rather to be ascribed to one cause—the prevalence of a vast cyclonic area of low barometer over and east of Iceland, which would induce powerful polar or northwesterly winds in Baffin's Bay, and equally strong equatorial currents over the British Islands. If this be the case, as the present summer advances and the seas northeast of Iceland grow warmer, this area will move farther to the eastward, possibly subjecting Great Britain, especially Scotland, to occasional boreal winds in July, which may be injurious to the grain crops.

Dickens in this Country.

Ben Perley Poore recalls poor "Boz" in the reminiscences which he is writing for the Boston Bulletin in the following way: "Charles Dickens, when he first visited Washington in 1842, was just entering his thirtieth year. He was a middle-sized, somewhat fleshy person, and he wore a brown frock coat, a red figured vest, and a fancy scarf cravat that concealed the collar and was fastened to the bosom in rather voluptuous folds by a double pin and chain. His hair, which was long and dark, grew low upon the brow, had a wavy kink where it started from the head, and was corkscrewed as it fell on either side of his face. His forehead retreated gradually from the eyes, without any marked protuberance save at the outer angle, the upper portion of which formed a prominent ridge a little within the assigned position of the organ of ideality. The eyeballs completely filled their sockets. The aperture of the lids was not large nor the eye uncommonly clear or bright, but quick, moist and expressive. The nose was slightly aquiline, the mouth of moderate dimensions, making no great display of the teeth, the facial muscles occasionally drawing the upper lip most strongly on the left side of the mouth opened in speaking. His features, taken altogether, were well proportioned, of a glowing and cordial aspect, with more animation than grace, and more intelligence than beauty.

"Seat, You Wretch!"

A citizen of a hamlet in Kidder went to the cars in White Haven one day to see his favorite daughter off. Securing her a seat, he passed out of the cars and went round to her window to say a parting word, as is frequently done on such occasions. While he was passing out the daughter left the seat to speak to a friend, and at the same time a grim old maid from Wilkesbarre took the seat and moved up to the window. Unaware of the important change inside, he hastily put his face up to the window and hurriedly exclaimed:

"One more kiss, sweet pet." In another instant the point of a blue cotton umbrella caught his seductive lip, followed by the passionate injunction:

"Seat, you gray-headed wretch!" and he vanished.

THE MORMON QUESTION.

A Bill Passed by the United States Senate that it is Hoped Will Reach the Evil and Eradicate It.

At last, after much debate and several interruptions, the United States Senate has passed the Utah bill presented by Mr. Hoar from the Judiciary Committee. The provisions are so important, and will, if the bill becomes law, be so far reaching, that it may be well to summarize them. They are substantially as follows:

Testimony in case of prosecution for bigamy, etc., may be given by the lawful husband or wife.

Every marriage ceremony shall be certified in writing, and such certificate filed and recorded in the Probate Court, under penalty of a fine not to exceed $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

Territorial laws conferring rights of inheritance on illegitimate children, and all other such laws contrary to the provisions of this bill, are annulled.

The corporation known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is placed in the hands of fourteen trustees, appointed by the President, who shall make an annual report to the Secretary of the Interior on the business affairs, property and operations of the corporation.

The Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company is dissolved; the Attorney-General is to institute proceedings to dispose of the property and assets according to law, and all funds over and above its just debts and liabilities are to escheat to the United States for the benefit of the common school fund of the Territory.

The Territory is to be redistricted by the Governor, the Territorial Secretary and the Federal judges.

The right of dower is secured to widows.

Female suffrage is abolished.

It will be seen that, if enforced, this bill ought to be a long step toward the disarmament of the Mormon hierarchy. By breaking up the emigration company the great source of supplies is cut off. By putting the corporation in the hands of trustees, with power to enforce the act that prohibits the holding of more than a limited amount of property by a religious corporation, the concentration of power is broken up. By securing the right of dower to widows, polygamy is rendered less profitable. By providing new ways of getting testimony, the punishment of polygamy is rendered more possible. By the abolition of female suffrage, a large part of the political power of the priesthood is taken away.

The bill now goes to the House.

A Hearty Welcome.

In the fall of 1860 Stephen A. Douglas was a Democratic candidate for President. He made a tour of New England, showing himself to the people wherever possible, making several speeches, and being received with almost universal enthusiasm. The Mayor of Bangor was a Republican and he was induced to preside at the meeting. The Mayor could never make much of a speech. He was a business man, a staid, respectable citizen, and a good Mayor, but did not shine as an orator. His duty, however, was to present and welcome the renowned Senator from Illinois, and he did it in very nearly this fashion, hesitating and stammering:

"HONORED SIR—We cannot show you the magnificent prairies of your—of your own native State; we cannot show you the magnificent architecture of your—of the nation's capital; we cannot show you the magnificent—magnificent railroads and—buildings and—steamships and—the business of the nation's metropolis; we cannot show you the grand and magnificent mountains—and rivers—and lakes; but we, the Republicans of Bangor, welcome you without distinction of party."

A Woman Frightens a Panther.

The Brookville Crescent tells this singular story: What came near being a tragedy occurred on Salt Lake River on Thursday a week ago. Mr. Shiver, well known in this part of Florida, was absent from home on business, and his wife, after attending to her household duties, had seated herself near the door at her sewing, while her little one played around on the floor, near at hand. Hearing a slight noise, Mrs. Shiver looked around and saw crouched within a dozen feet of her and her baby an immense panther, ready to spring. With a shriek she sprang to her feet and dashed the heavy shears with which she was cutting her work in the panther's face, snatched her child, and rushed back into the house. The panther, disconcerted by the sudden attack and the noise, beat a deliberate retreat for the swamp.

TEN years ago a penniless man, with a peculiarly-shaped head, made a bargain with a London professor of anatomy by which the latter was to have the head on payment of the dead's funeral expenses. Meanwhile the man became wealthy, and when he died the other day his friends tried to avoid fulfilling the contract. But the professor insisted, and the matter is to be brought before the law courts. Pending the decision, the defunct gentleman has been buried with his head on his shoulders.

THE AMERICAN SOLDIER.

How he is Swindled in the Matter of His Clothing and Kit.

On entering the office and making his wishes known, says an intelligent United States soldier, the recruit is taken to a side room, stripped and examined by the doctor, after which an outfit of clothes, consisting of blouse, cap, drawers, stockings, shirt, shoes, pants, and blanket, is issued to him. He signs a blank form for the clothes he has just drawn, his signature being witnessed by the officer. A note at the bottom of the form declares that all spaces not used to denote articles drawn shall have a red ink line drawn through them, to prevent any person having charge of the same from inserting other articles of clothing than those drawn after the blank has been signed. This filling is never done and when the recruit reaches his company he is apt to find himself charged with clothes he never drew, and is truly fortunate if the company commander does not prefer charges against him for disposing of clothes he never had. As there are several grades of clothing he often gets the poorest and is charged for the best, while when any of the recruiting squad draw clothes they draw the best and pay for the poorest. After drawing his uniform he is informed that he must dispose of his citizen's clothing as he will not be allowed to keep it. The sergeant or one of his men accompanies him to a dealer in old clothes who offers him one-twentieth what his suit is worth. He refuses to part with them at the price but is told by the sergeant that he cannot be running around town with him as he has other duties to perform. Not wishing to make enemies at the start he takes what is offered, knowing he is imposed upon, and returns to the office. Had he kept his eyes open he might have seen the old clothes man place a bill in the sergeant's hand which would explain why he could get no more for his clothes.

When, at last, he is shipped with a number of others to the depot, he is again examined, and having passed, is put out to drill. His drill master, nine times out of ten, is a Swede, German, or foreigner of some sort, whose slight fund of English is composed principally of oaths. Under such a teacher he does not progress very rapidly, for which failing he receives an ample share of abuse.

I neglected to tell about the cleaning kit sold to the recruits at the depot by the post sutler. It consists of one clothes' brush, one blacking brush, hair brush, brass brush, two combs, one towel, one cake of soap, button stick and small paper of tripoli for cleaning buttons and a box of blacking. I did not ask the cost of these articles, but on reaching the company found $3 charged for sutler's kit. Now, omitting the brass brush, button stick and tripoli, I have seen the other articles sold in Chatham street for fifty cents and of a better quality. After the recruit has reached his company and learned his drill he is assigned for duty with his company and draws another outfit of clothes. As the price of these clothes is taken out of his pay he usually serves six months or more before he draws any money.

The New Pension Office.

The Government is erecting on Judiciary Square, in Washington, a large structure for the exclusive use of the Pension Office, for which Congress has already appropriated $440,000. It is four hundred feet long and two hundred feet wide, the height being three stories, with a vast central sky-light rising a full story above the roof of the third story and lighting the court. The roof of the inclosed court is supported by two rows of enormous columns.

This court, with its triple colonnade on all sides, promises to be the best architectural feature of the edifice, which from the exterior suggests a temporary exhibition building, by the cheapness of its material and decorations. The entire structure is of brick, and the cornices and friese are of terra cotta. Between the first and second stories a yellow band, or friese, three feet in height, is carried entirely around the building, and on this are represented scenes from military and naval life—infantry, artillery, and cavalry on the march, wounded men, sailors in boats, etc. This much at least can be said in praise of the figures, that they are not the stereotyped soldiers and sailors of the picture books, but seem to have been designed by some one who has seen actual warfare. They are too small, however, to be effective. The building is not yet far advanced, but one or two things are clear; it will have the beauty of usefulness, which is lacking in so many of our public structures, and it will be a wide departure from the classical ideas that long dominated our Government architects. For the purpose of providing a large number of well-lighted and well-ventilated office rooms, the plan seems an excellent one. The architect is General Meigs, formerly Quartermaster-General of the army.—Century for July.

ATHERTON (at a lecture)—"How rude of that couple to go out, Algernon!" Algernon (gleaming toward the door with a sigh that signifies he thinks the lecture a bore)—"Yes, but how happy they are now!"

QUAKER CITY WIT.

A BATCH OF JOKES FROM THE "EVENING CALL."

MAKING PROGRESS.

Fond Parent—"Well, Johnny, how are you getting along at school?"

Johnny—"Oh, first rate. I started on third, but I am on first now."

"Glad to hear it, my son. Always try to be first. There is fifty cents for your industry."

"Ain't that nice! I'll try to get higher yet."

"Higher? How can you be higher than first?"

"Easy enough. I can get to be short stop or pitcher."

DROPPING THE R.

Minks—"The New Yorkers hate the letter 'r' as much as the English do the 'h.'"

Finks—"I noticed that in speaking they are quite apt to give the 'r' the go-by."

"That probably accounts for their very tender treatment of their big thieves."

"In what way?"

"Instead of putting them in cells they keep them in luxuriously furnished apartments."

"What has that to do with the letter 'r?'"

"Why, don't you see, they drop an 'r' from arrest and it becomes a-rest."

A DESIRABLE STYLE OF MAN.

"Miss Smith," he remarked, as they seated themselves in the ice-cream saloon, "will you begin on vanilla and follow it up with lemon and chocolate, or would you prefer the chocolate first?"

On the way home he asked her to marry him, and whatever she said it wasn't "No."

SPEAKING FROM OBSERVATION.

Little Nell—"Mamma gave me a strawberry. Ain't it big?"

Little Jack—"She gave me one, too. Here it is. It's just as big as yours."

"Ain't that nice? Let's pretend it's a strawberry festival!"

"But it don't seem like a festival!"

"Why don't it?"

"There's too many strawberries."

THREE OBJECTIONS.

Jones—"I have a great mind to buy a bicycle."

Smith—"What for, pray?"

"To ride on, of course. A friend of mine who is a dealer in bicycles says they have many merits and only three objections."

"Did he tell you what the objections were?"

"Well, no."

"I had one once. Your friend is right. A bicycle has but three objections. The first one is that you are liable to break an arm; the second one is that you are liable to break a leg——"

"Good gracious!"

"And the third is that you are liable to break your neck."

BIG WORDS.

It is never well to use big words when small ones will express the same meaning. A lady who was making a call on some acquaintances observed that the furniture had been changed, and remarked to the lady: "You have been metamorphosed, haven't you?" "Y-e-s," said the other hesitatingly. "You mean calcimined, I suppose; it looks much better, doesn't it?" "What caused your little boy's sickness?" asked a plain mother of a mother whose little son was very ill. "He was climbing a ladder," said the lady, "and lost his equilibrium." "Poor little fellow," said the sympathetic woman; "do buy him another; he'll be more careful the next time!" "Did you find the people indigent?" asked a clergyman of a wealthy member of his church who had been calling on some very poor families. "(I), dear, no," answered the lady; "they were respectable, but as poor as poverty."—New York Observer.

MIGHT MISUNDERSTANDING.

Mr. Purseproud—"No, sir, you shall not marry my daughter."

Augustus—"Your objection, sir."

Mr. Purseproud—"Whoever marries my daughter must earn her."

Augustus—"Oh! it's all right then. If there is no law against cremation when the time comes I'll urn her."

DIFFERENCE IN MILK.

Jones—"What a lot of lunatics there are in this world. A New York crank thinks he can live sixty days on a milk diet."

Smith—"Milk contains all the elements of the human blood. Why do you call that experimenter a lunatic?"

Jones—"Because he intends to try it with New York milk."

A BAD BUSINESS.

Minks—"Why, howdo do, Finks? Where have you been?"

Finks—"Right here. I have changed my business."

"What are you doing now?"

"Manufacturing burglars' tools."

"What?"

"Manufacturing burglars' tools."

"Great Cæsar! And you confess it! How do you know that I won't betray you?"

"Tell everybody you wish. All the world knows it, however."

"Was there ever such shamelessness! Well, what kind of burglars' tools do you manufacture, anyhow?"

"Account books for Wall street firms."

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., AUG. 6, 1884.

Let justice be done though the heavens should fall.

Three white men were hung for the crime of arson in the first degree at Scotteboro, Ala., on last Friday.

A San Francisco woman is suing a man for $10,000 damages, because, on the 21st of last month, he promised to marry her within "a reasonable time," and has not yet fulfilled the agreement.

Buffalo Bill recently said to an audience at the conclusion of his exhibition: "You have seen more of life on the frontier this afternoon than you would in ten years living on the frontier."

Mr. Moody is said to have remarked, on leaving London, that nearly all the rich men in the United States were born poor; while London had a large number of families who "were born in wealth and were able to breath its atmosphere without choking."

A Minnesota man took two little slabs of a peculiar stone, common in that State to the Philadelphia Centennial. The value of the stone had hitherto been unknown. The result was that thousands of dollars now remain in the country that otherwise would have been sent to Scotland for Scotch granite.

The value of expositions may be understood from one fact that seems to illustrate the point. North Carolina has already received a million of dollars from persons who have invested in her mineral lands since she made her display of mineral resources at the fair in Boston last fall. North Carolina expended $17,000 for the exhibit and in return for her sagacity has received $1,000,000.

Elections for State officers occur as follows: Alabama, August 4; Arkansas, September 1; Vermont, September 2; Maine, September 8; Georgia, October 1; Ohio and West Virginia, October 14. There is hardly any doubt as to how all of these States will go, except Ohio and West Virginia, and there would not be any doubt as to the latter were it not for Democratic dissatisfaction in regard to the State ticket. The extent of the Republican majority in Maine is a question of some interest.

Thomas A. Armstrong, of Pittsburg, the well-known Greenback-Labor leader and editor of The Labor Tribune, says of Blaine's letter: "Mr. Blaine's letter of acceptance I consider the work of a demagogue. He is a director of the Ohio Coal Company, that is now filling its mines with imported laborers guarded by officers. The working people will know that, and they will also know then how much weight to attach to his smooth sentences about the welfare of the laboring classes."

And now the Birmingham Chronicle takes the reins from the Selma Times and inaugurates a reformation of our convict system—on paper. The Chronicle wants the convicts taken away from the Birmingham mines and placed at work upon the farms and public roads. The VIEW advocated such a change two years ago, as did a great many other State papers. The last Legislature did very little in the way of reforming the convict system, and it will remain for the next General Assembly to take the matter in hand and finish the work, if it will.

A Washington letter says: "There is no concealing the fact that the Republicans are a good deal annoyed at the result of the Prohibition Convention at Pittsburg recently. Their more cautious leaders don't admit this publicly, but in private they acknowledge that the action of the Convention in making nominations is very unfortunate for the Republican party. They admit that this result was brought about through the efforts of the Democratic leaders. The effect is likely to be very material in several of the doubtful States. This is especially true of Ohio and Indiana, where the Prohibition sentiment is strong. It may also materially effect the general situation in Iowa, where the prohibition element is large and where Republican majorities have been wonderfully reduced in the past few elections. This is also true of Wisconsin and Minnesota."

The Election.

The result of the election in our State and county, held last Monday is published elsewhere. As to the State ticket the result is all that could have been expected, when opposition was entirely wanting. The State Democratic ticket is elected by a unanimous vote of the people, and four years more of an economical administration of the affairs of State are thus assured.

In our county, the Democrats claim a victory, having elected three out of five of the important officers, and all of the county commissioners, and also given a good majority for the Senatorial nominee. Though the two opposition candidates that have been elected cannot be called Democrats, in a strict sense, as no man can be a party man who opposes the nominee of his party, yet they will claim that they have received the votes of many good Democrats, however paradoxical that may seem. Their popularity is to be based upon the fact that they have been tried and found true, weighed in the balances of public opinion and not found wanting. They will continue to fill the offices well, as they have heretofore done. It is unnecessary to remind them that "public office is a public trust." They realized and appreciated this fact, and therein was their strength. Yet their opponents can feel, as every true Democrat should, that it is better to be defeated as the nominee of the Democratic party than to be elected under any other colors. The new officers elected, have yet to be tried, and it is to be hoped, for the good name and fame of our county, that they be found always seeking to subserve the interests and welfare of the people, who have placed them where they are.

With the announcement of the result, let us lay aside all asperities that the campaign may have engendered, and, forgetful of petty bickerings, go about our daily work with renewed desire to build up and better our country, and thus to brighten our own lot and the lot of our neighbor.

A Word to the Independents.

The VIEW did all that it openly and honestly could in support of the Democratic ticket, as best for the interests of the county. Some of the independent candidates seem to have taken up the idea that the Democracy generally and the editor of this paper in particular had a special spite against them. In this they are mistaken. Some of the independent candidates we considered personal friends, but as Democrats our duty was to support the nominee of our party even at the sacrifice of personal friendships if need be. The VIEW knows that some independents are worthy men, and men whom we have thought well of personally, though politically we may oppose them. Some of them are honestly unable to see where they have erred. Democrats who voted against the independents, voted as they did from political, not from personal motives. It is frequently the case that a Democrat has no acquaintance with his party nominee, or no personal association with him, and though a warm personal friend may be the opposing candidate, yet, as a Democrat he must accept the decision of his party convention, forget personal friendships for the time, and support that nominee. This is one of the points of difference between Democracy and Independentism.

Every Democrat of sound faith thinks as we do in this, though they may not have had the opportunity to express themselves as the VIEW has expressed itself, or, as in some cases, they may have refrained from expressing themselves from motives of policy. Policy is a deceit which we hope this paper will never find necessary to practice.

No Harm Intended.

Some of our valued friends have expressed surprise or disappointment because the Mirror did not put the list of nominees at the head of its editorial columns. We assure them that no treason was intended by this omission. This is a custom that we never could see any great amount of patriotism in, though we have no serious objection to it if the papers see proper to follow it. We regard it as very much like the action of the little boy who drew a picture of a horse and then wrote in large letters over it, "This is a horse." We prefer for people to find out the animal by looking at the picture. —Eutaw Mirror.

Out in Montana, no less than 7 horse thieves were hung the other day.

The World's Exposition.

The World's Exposition that is to be opened at New Orleans, is so far perfected in all its departments that it is now in order to state that it will be the largest world's fair ever held. The buildings are larger than those erected for the Philadelphia centennial. The exhibits out-number those of any previous exposition. Each of the States, except possibly one or two, will be represented by an exhibit. Congress has made a loan of $1,000,000 in favor of this centennial exposition. The United States government will make a special exhibit, the largest it has ever attempted, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, and to that end a mammoth building is being erected in the group of exposition buildings. The Mexican government has appropriated $200,000, and will erect a special building for its unique display. The Central American republics have been aroused from their long slumber and will be fully represented for the first time among the great nations of the earth. At the exposition one may learn more about the natural resources of those regions than by an ordinary visit to Mexico or Central America. To lovers of music a visit to the Exposition will be highly gratifying as there is a music hall capable of seating 11,000 persons and a stage large enough to hold 600 musicians. Grand concerts will be given during the season. Besides this the fact ought to be known that New Orleans is the only city in the Union that has had an established opera during half a century. Nor is this all. Strangers think themselves well paid by making a visit of pleasure to the quaint old city at any time. During the carnival season tens of thousands of visitors flock to the Crescent City to see the gorgeous pageants prepared annually at an expense to the citizens of from $100,000 to $200,000. This lavish expenditure of money is for the gratification of strangers and home folks, and the displays are absolutely free. The citizens of the Southern metropolis who do such large things, in such a large way, have pledged their word to make their World's Fair the crowning event of the century and they will do it.

The Personal Character of Candidates.

A newspaper in Buffalo has published some scandalous charges of immorality against Mr. Cleveland, and our esteemed contemporary, the Utica Herald, compares these accusations with the charges which are circulated against Mr. Blaine, contending that if the one set of imputations is a proper subject of discussion, the other set is equally proper. Other journals, however, aver that the personal character of candidates is not a thing which should be considered in the canvass preceeding an election.

Neither of these propositions seems to us tenable. The personal character of a candidate is a subject of high importance, and it is always right to consider it. As for the charges against Mr. Blaine, they are matters of public-notoriety. They were brought up before a committee of the House of Representatives and before the House itself, and all the facts alleged against him appear in the investigations and discussions which took place in the House. There is not only nothing wrong in the fullest examination of these things, but it is a duty to examine them and to dwell upon them. If the character of Blaine will not bear such an examination, he is not fit to be President.

But the accusations against Mr. Cleveland are first produced on the eve of a Presidential election, just after he has been nominated. They have never been things of public notoriety, but of private scandal. If they were true, it is fair to infer that they would have been produced and established long ago. Moreover, there is now no time to inquire into them, and to determine whether they are true or false. Accordingly, they must be dismissed as so much gossip. They cannot be taken into estimation in ascertaining Mr. Cleveland's fitness for the office for which he is a candidate.

No accusations produced without legal proof after the nomination of a candidate, are worth a copper; and the publication of such accusations is a scandal of itself.—N. Y. Sun.

How to Advertise.

Boston Star.]

We have lately had our attention called to the enormous amount of circular advertising done upon the streets.

It is invariably indulged in by typos, as, take it all in all, it is about the most costly advertising imaginable.

If circulars are thrown about they are almost worthless. If they are sent by mail in considerable quantities the postage aggregates a large amount. Besides, there are so many circulars and so many varieties of them that people have begun to look upon them as a nuisance and give them no heed.

We have no doubt that nine-tenths of the money put into this form of advertising is utterly lost.

Of course the best medium for the advertiser is a newspaper of good circulation. It is not only the best, but also the cheapest and most convenient.

And its pre-eminent merit is that a man is able to determine exactly what benefit he has received.

A "Vigorous" Foreign Policy.

Cincinnati Enquirer.]

Did it ever occur to Young America that it is only under Republican rule that the flag has been disgraced in foreign countries and on the high seas? By reference to history he will learn that after every European power had tremblingly paid tribute to the Algerine pirates, James Madison, a Democratic President refused it, and ordered Commodore Decatur to run the Algerine squadron down, a command that was obeyed with alacrity. It was a Democratic administration in 1812 that at the point of the bayonet made the British Government apologize for her oppression of American seamen. Under the administration of the Democratic James K. Polk the Mexican greaser captured Captain Thornton an American soldier, and they paid for it with the richest half of their territory, viz: Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California. The British occupied Oregon, and would be there to this day but for a Democratic administration.

It is the best engine for cotton gins, wood-working, planing, grist mills, planing and cider mills, threshing machines.

Burch, Logan Co., W. Va., 1882.

The 4½ horse power Bookwalter Engine bought March 31, 1882, is complete. We are well pleased with it. It drives a 24-inch grist mill, and grinds eighty bushels a day. It is easily run; any one can run one of them. It gives entire satisfaction; it is the thing for farmers to have. A. D. FERRELL & CO.

I have the exclusive right to sell this engine in Chilton, Shelby and Coosa counties, and will sell to farmers and others on easy terms. I mean business. Will put the engine up and guarantee satisfactory work.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., AUG. 6, 1884.

Let justice be done though the heavens should fall.

Three white men were hung for the crime of arson in the first degree at Scottsboro, Ala., on last Friday.

A San Francisco woman is suing a man for $10,000 damages, because, on the 21st of last month, he promised to marry her within "a reasonable time," and has not yet fulfilled the agreement.

Buffalo Bill recently said to an audience at the conclusion of his exhibition: "You have seen more of life on the frontier this afternoon than you would in ten years living on the frontier."

Mr. Moody is said to have remarked, on leaving London, that nearly all the rich men in the United States were born poor; while London had a large number of families who "were born in wealth and were able to breath its atmosphere without choking."

A Minnesota man took two little slabs of a peculiar stone, common in that State to the Philadelphia Centennial. The value of the stone had hitherto been unknown. The result was that thousands of dollars now remain in the country that otherwise would have been sent to Scotland for Scotch granite.

The value of expositions may be understood from one fact that seems to illustrate the point. North Carolina has already received a million of dollars from persons who have invested in her mineral lands since she made her display of mineral resources at the fair in Boston last fall. North Carolina expended $17,000 for the exhibit and in return for her sagacity has received $1,000,000.

Elections for State officers occur as follows: Alabama, August 4; Arkansas, September 1; Vermont, September 2; Maine, September 8; Georgia, October 1; Ohio and West Virginia, October 14. There is hardly any doubt as to how all of these States will go, except Ohio and West Virginia, and there would not be any doubt as to the latter were it not for Democratic dissatisfaction in regard to the State ticket. The extent of the Republican majority in Maine is a question of some interest.

Thomas A. Armstrong, of Pittsburg, the well-known Greenback-Labor leader and editor of The Labor Tribune, says of Blaine's letter: "Mr. Blaine's letter of acceptance I consider the work of a demagogue. He is a director of the Ohio Coal Company, that is now filling its mines with imported laborers guarded by officers. The working people will know that, and they will also know then how much weight to attach to his smooth sentences about the welfare of the laboring classes."

And now the Birmingham Chronicle takes the reins from the Selma Times and inaugurates a reformation of our convict system—on paper. The Chronicle wants the convicts taken away from the Birmingham mines and placed at work upon the farms and public roads. The VIEW advocated such a change two years ago, as did a great many other State papers. The last Legislature did very little in the way of reforming the convict system, and it will remain for the next General Assembly to take the matter in hand and finish the work, if it will.

A Washington letter says: "There is no concealing the fact that the Republicans are a good deal annoyed at the result of the Prohibition Convention at Pittsburg recently. Their more cautious leaders don't admit this publicly, but in private they acknowledge that the action of the Convention in making nominations is very unfortunate for the Republican party. They admit that this result was brought about through the efforts of the Democratic leaders. The effect is likely to be very material in several of the doubtful States. This is especially true of Ohio and Indiana, where the Prohibition sentiment is strong. It may also materially affect the general situation in Iowa, whose the prohibition element is large and whose Republican majorities have been wonderfully reduced in the past few elections. This is also true of Wisconsin and Minnesota."

The Election.

The result of the election in our State and county, held last Monday is published elsewhere. As to the State ticket the result is all that could have been expected, when opposition was entirely wanting. The State Democratic ticket is elected by a unanimous vote of the people, and four years more of an economical administration of the affairs of State are thus assured.

In our county, the Democrats claim a victory, having elected three out of five of the important officers, and all of the county commissioners, and also given a good majority for the Senatorial nominee. Though the two opposition candidates that have been elected cannot be called Democrats, in a strict sense, as no man can be a party man who opposes the nominee of his party, yet they will claim that they have received the votes of many good Democrats, however paradoxical that may seem. Their popularity is to be based upon the fact that they have been tried and found true, weighed in the balances of public opinion and not found wanting. They will continue to fill the offices well, as they have heretofore done. It is unnecessary to remind them that "public office is a public trust." They realized and appreciated this fact, and therein was their strength. Yet their opponents can feel, as every true Democrat should, that it is better to be defeated as the nominee of the Democratic party than to be elected under any other colors. The new officers elected, have yet to be tried, and it is to be hoped, for the good name and fame of our county, that they be found always seeking to subserve the interests and welfare of the people, who have placed them where they are.

With the announcement of the result, let us lay aside all asperities that the campaign may have engendered, and, forgetful of petty bickerings, go about our daily work with renewed desire to build up and better our country, and thus to brighten our own lot and the lot of our neighbor.

A Word to the Independents.

The VIEW did all that it openly and honestly could in support of the Democratic ticket, as best for the interests of the county. Some of the independent candidates seem to have taken up the idea that the Democracy generally and the editor of this paper in particular had a special spite against them. In this they are mistaken. Some of the independent candidates we considered personal friends, but as Democrats our duty was to support the nominee of our party even at the sacrifice of personal friendships if need be. The VIEW knows that some independents are worthy men, and men whom we have thought well of personally, though politically we may oppose them. Some of them are honestly unable to see where they have erred. Democrats who voted against the independents, voted as they did from political, not from personal motives. It is frequently the case that a Democrat has no acquaintance with his party nominee, or no personal association with him, and though a warm personal friend may be the opposing candidate, yet, as a Democrat he must accept the decision of his party convention, forget personal friendships for the time, and support that nominee. This is one of the points of difference between Democracy and Independentism.

Every Democrat of sound faith thinks as we do in this, though they may not have had the opportunity to express themselves as the VIEW has expressed itself, or, as in some cases, they may have refrained from expressing themselves from motives of policy. Policy is a deceit which we hope this paper will never find necessary to practice.

No Harm Intended.

Some of our valued friends have expressed surprise or disappointment because the Mirror did not put the list of nominees at the head of its editorial columns. We assure them that no treason was intended by this omission. This is a custom that we never could see any great amount of patriotism in, though we have no serious objection to it if the papers see proper to follow it. We regard it as very much like the notion of the little boy who drew a picture of a horse and then wrote in large letters over it, "This is a horse." We prefer for people to find out the animal by looking at the picture. —Eutaw Mirror.

Out in Montana, no less than 7 horse thieves were hung the other day.

The World's Exposition.

The World's Exposition that is to be opened at New Orleans, is so far perfected in all its departments that it is now in order to state that it will be the largest world's fair ever held. The buildings are larger than those erected for the Philadelphia centennial. The exhibits out-number those of any previous exposition. Each of the States, except possibly one or two, will be represented by an exhibit. Congress has made a loan of $1,000,000 in favor of this centennial exposition. The United States government will make a special exhibit, the largest it has ever attempted, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, and to that end a mammoth building is being erected in the group of exposition buildings. The Mexican government has appropriated $200,000, and will erect a special building for its unique display. The Central American republics have been aroused from their long slumber and will be fully represented for the first time among the great nations of the earth. At the exposition one may learn more about the natural resources of those regions than by an ordinary visit to Mexico or Central America. To lovers of music a visit to the Exposition will be highly gratifying as there is a music hall capable of seating 11,000 persons and a stage large enough to hold 600 musicians. Grand concerts will be given during the season. Besides this the fact ought to be known that New Orleans is the only city in the Union that has had an established opera during half a century. Nor is this all. Strangers think themselves well paid by making a visit of pleasure to the quaint old city at any time. During the carnival season tens of thousands of visitors flock to the Crescent City to see the gorgeous pageants prepared annually at an expense to the citizens of from $100,000 to $200,000. This lavish expenditure of money is for the gratification of strangers and home folks, and the displays are absolutely free. The citizens of the Southern metropolis who do such large things, in such a large way, have pledged their word to make their World's Fair the crowning event of the century and they will do it.

The Personal Character of Candidates.

A newspaper in Buffalo has published some scandalous charges of immorality against Mr. Cleveland, and our esteemed contemporary, the Utica Herald, compares these accusations with the charges which are circulated against Mr. Blaine, contending that if the one set of imputations is a proper subject of discussion, the other set is equally proper. Other journals, however, aver that the personal character of candidates is not a thing which should be considered in the canvass preceeding an election.

Neither of these propositions seems to us tenable. The personal character of a candidate is a subject of high importance, and it is always right to consider it. As for the charges against Mr. Blaine, they are matters of public notoriety. They were brought up before a committee of the House of Representatives and before the House itself, and all the facts alleged against him appear in the investigations and discussions which took place in the House. There is not only nothing wrong in the fullest examination of these things, but it is a duty to examine them and to dwell upon them. If the character of Blaine will not bear such an examination, he is not fit to be President.

But the accusations against Mr. Cleveland are first produced on the eve of a Presidential election, just after he has been nominated. They have never been things of public notoriety, but of private scandal. If they were true, it is fair to infer that they would have been produced and established long ago. Moreover, there is now no time to inquire into them, and to determine whether they are true or false. Accordingly, they must be dismissed as so much gossip. They cannot be taken into estimation in ascertaining Mr. Cleveland's fitness for the office for which he is a candidate.

No accusations produced without legal proof after the nomination of a candidate, are worth a copper; and the publication of such accusations is a scandal of itself.—N. Y. Sun.

How to Advertise.

Boston Star.]

We have lately had our attention called to the enormous amount of circular advertising done upon the streets.

It is invariably indulged in by typos, as, take it all in all, it is about the most costly advertising imaginable.

If circulars are thrown about they are almost worthless. If they are sent by mail in considerable quantities the postage aggregates a large amount. Besides, there are so many circulars and so many varieties of them that people have begun to look upon them as a nuisance and give them no heed.

We have no doubt that nine-tenths of the money put into this form of advertising is utterly lost.

Of course the best medium for the advertiser is a newspaper of good circulation. It is not only the best, but also the cheapest and most convenient.

And its pre-eminent merit is that a man is able to determine exactly what benefit he has received.

A "Vigorous" Foreign Policy.

(Cincinnati Enquirer.)

Did it ever occur to Young America that it is only under Republican rule that the flag has been disgraced in foreign countries and on the high seas? By reference to history he will learn that after every European power had tremblingly paid tribute to the Algerine pirates, James Madison, a Democratic President refused it, and ordered Commodore Decatur to run the Algerine squadron down, a command that was obeyed with alacrity. It was a Democratic administration in 1812 that at the point of the bayonet made the British Government apologize for her oppression of American seamen. Under the administration of the Democratic James K. Polk the Mexican greaser captured Captain Thornton an American soldier, and they paid for it with the richest half of their territory, viz: Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California. The British occupied Oregon, and would be there to this day but for a Democratic administration.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Mr. T. D. Parnell, of Callierville, paid Clanton a visit Sunday.

The young people enjoyed a picnic at Mims' mill on Saturday.

Miss Mattie Townsend, of Wetumpka, is visiting relatives in Clanton.

The election passed off very quietly at the Clanton box. A full vote was polled.

The barbecue at Verbena last Friday was a great success. Citizens attended from all over the county.

An independent paper is being talked of. Let us have it. There's millions in it; and "the more the merrier."

The public speaking at Clanton was very well attended. The Democratic and Republican speakers divided time.

Mr. J. M. Marcus, living some miles northeast of Clanton, died on the night of the 5th inst., with paralysis. He was 49 years of age.

The election returns were difficult to get at on account of being so badly mixed, as the result of having so many candidates for one office.

The Democracy of Chilton have done as well as the most sanguine could have expected, and will feel inclined to hurrah over a Democratic victory.

Dr. J. P. Robinson killed his yard dog last week. The brute had developed symptoms of hydrophobia. Others should be on their guard against rabid canines.

The crop prospects in this section are very fine. Better looking stands have never been seen here, and if the weather continues favorable the harvest will be abundant.

Clanton box polled 356 votes. A very good vote considering the fact that rain fell here the greater part of the afternoon and prevented some from coming to the polls no doubt.

Now that our Democratic ticket has been so successful as it has, the Democracy will keep its organization intact. Two years hence other important offices are to be filled.

The VIEW is not run upon policy, nor does it get its support from policy. It is a paper with principles to guide it, and it makes its living by hard work, and by its merits.

The Southern Business College, of Louisville, Ky., is the best business school in the South. It is located in a large city, where the opportunity for employment is good.

Some good advise for the times: Kickers should learn to control their tempers and keep cool until they know what is the matter with themselves, and in time they may learn to be good Democrats.

Charley Taylor, a negro boy of about 20 years, was arrested and tried before Justice Vanderveer on last Friday at Clear Creek, on the charge of committing a nuisance in a house of public worship. He was sentenced to ninety days hard labor for the county.

Toll McCary, a negro boy about eighteen or nineteen years of age, was arrested in the Dixie neighborhood on last Sunday and brought to Clanton and jailed. He is charged with attempting to commit rape upon a white woman of the neighborhood.

When a so-called independent feels the Radical shoe pinching, he is always ready to howl and to deny that he is a Radical. So mote it be.

Dixie is the banner Democratic beat of the county. The vote there stood: Wells 155, Baker 6, Hall 16, Barbour 14. Dunlap 13, Smitherman 175, Bice 0. Walker 137, Honeycutt 54. Smith 185, Gentry 00, Wise 3. Parish 40, Wilson 151.

Prof. W. U. Acree, of Verbena Academy, we are glad to state, has decided not to accept the assistant professorship in the State Agricultural and Mechanical College to which he was recently elected by the Board of Trustees of that institution.

Mr. H. A. Wilson says he was not in Chilton county for the purpose of distributing the Goree circular and that he distributed them no further than around Lomax, at which point his family is summering. We are glad to be able to publish this fact.

A difficulty occured at Lomax on last Friday, between Mr. James Hill better known as "Doll" Hill and Mr. James A. Dudley. Mr. Dudley was stabbed in a number of places and his wounds are considered serious though not dangerous. Mr. Hill escaped, but returned and surrendered himself to the authorities. At last accounts Mr. Dudley was improving, and we are glad to be able to state that he will recover.

Clanton Academy.

The announcement of the reopening of this school appears in another column. The next session will begin the first day of September. A new feature, that of military discipline and uniform, has been added and it is one which will be both attractive and instructive. Read the announcement.

Election Returns.

We give below the vote upon the county ticket. The vote of Kincheon box cannot be given, on account of the failure of the returning officer to make a proper record of the count and return it with the box. The vote of the box was known to be about 100 total, with a majority in favor of the Democratic ticket. The vote for State officers and Senator will be published next week.

FOR REPRESENTATIVE.

Wells	951
Barbour	341
Hall	248
Baker	129

Wells majority over all opponents, 233, plurality, 610.

FOR SHERIFF.

Smitherman	851
Dunlap	588
Bice	265

Smitherman's majority 29, plurality, 293.

TAX COLLECTOR.

Honneycutt	975
Walker	738

Honeycutt's majority 237.

TAX ASSESSOR.

Smith	1253
Gentry	512

Smith's majority 741.

TREASURER.

Parish	963
Wilson	734

Parish's majority 229.

There was no opposition to the nominees for commissioners of roads and revenue, and they polled the full vote of the county, which was about 1800.

Callierville Dots.

Your correspondent received a nice present from our esteemed friends, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. King, the 27th ult. It was a nice section of musk melon which measured 33 and a fraction inches in length. It was raised by them.

Dr. A. Callier, of Perry, raised a squash this year as large as a water bucket—who can beat that?

Rev. Mr. Green filled his appointment last fourth Sabbath evening with a splendid sermon. But sorry to say he had a very small congregation. Will not the people of this community turn out and give Mr. Green a good congregation after this? We think it is much better to go to church and hear a good sermon, from a good man, than to be around the stores, all Sabbath evening.

Callierville had a large voting crowd the 4th.

The District meeting will begin at Ebenezer church Saturday, the 9th, and end Sunday, unless the meeting is protracted. The community is requested to turn out both days with provisions for a basket dinner.

The continued wet weather is doubtless injuring cotton, also potatoes unless the vines are trimmed and prevented from taking roots all over the ground; fortunately most farmers have clean crops, that is not much grass to hurt.

There seems to be quite a spirit for visiting now, several persons from a distance are enjoying the salubrity of our atmosphere. H. J. H.

One of the Independents told us the VIEW injured the Democratic ticket. Perhaps that is why some of the independents fell so hopelessly in love with the paper.

The next Vice-President Hendricks, will not make any campaign speeches until after his return to Indiana, which will be near the end of August.

The Vote by Beats.

We publish the vote by beats for representative and for county officers this week. The vote for State officers will be published next week.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken out of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup For Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhoea, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. [mal

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructations of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt, causing all impurities through these channels to expel the poisons of the system, producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

HE FEELS LIKE A NEW MAN.

"I have had Dyspepsia with Constipation, two years, and have tried almost all kinds of pills, and TUTT'S are the first that have done me any good. They have cleaned me out nicely. My appetite is splendid, food digests readily, and I now have natural passages. I feel like a new man." W. D. KIMBALL, Palmyra, O.

INTELLIGENT ANIMALS.

GRAPHIC ACCOUNT OF HOW THEY RESCUE BELATED TRAVELERS.

The Wonderful Dogs of the St. Bernard Hospice.

"Some years ago I visited some of the monasteries of the mountains of St. Bernard for the purpose of seeing the manner in which those famous dogs are trained to their life work," said a famous dog-trainer. "That I realized for the first time what a grand, noble thing the education of even a dog may be when it has a high and lofty aim. The monks begin to teach their dogs in the earliest stages of puppyhood, and not only is physical and mental training included in this teaching, but spiritual culture is by no means neglected. At meal time the dogs sit in a row, each with a tin dish before him containing his repast. Grace is said by one of the monks, the dogs sitting motionless meanwhile with reverentially bowed heads. Not one of them stirs until the 'Amen' is spoken. If some young novitiate should venture to taste the contents of the dish ere the arrival of the proper time some of the older dogs forthwith cause him to desist by deep admonitory growls and sharp pullings of the ear.

"The intelligence displayed by these animals in rescuing travelers is simply marvelous, though perhaps you will say it is only memory that they show, for all that they do has been most carefully taught them by the monks. After a severe snow-storm or an avalanche two dogs are sent out from the monastery Around the neck of one is fastened a flask of cordial and to the back of the other is bound a heavy blanket. If a traveler lies buried in the snow their keen scent soon brings them to him. Then they search for the place where the snow is softest, for they know that it is the warmth of the traveler's breath that has made it so and that beneath that spot must lie his head. They scratch away the snow and when the unfortunate's head and breast are exposed they devote all their efforts to arousing him from that lethargic slumber into which he has fallen, the sure precursor of that terrible end—freezing to death. With their powerful paws they smite him on the chest and face. With their mouths close to his ear they give vent to loud barks and cries. Meanwhile other dogs, accompanied by the monks, have left the monastery a short time after the former ones, whose trail they follow, the result being that the almost frozen traveler soon finds himself well-housed and fed and restored to warmth and life."

"Salt Horse" in the Navy.

HOW RECRUITS ARE STARVED AND ROBBED ON THE RECEIVING SHIPS.

"Do you know that sailors in the United States Navy are half starved?" remarked a recruit of a few months to a reporter.

"What do you mean?" asked the reporter.

"I mean simply what I say. They are starved and also robbed, and if their treatment was generally known there would not be one recruit where there are now ten."

"Of what do you chiefly complain?"

"Of the food. For breakfast we have hard tack which has to be broken with a hammer and so-called coffee, a decoction more nearly resembling burnt sawdust and hot water. Once a week roast beef is served, and while it is of the poorest quality it is really the only meal we get. At other meals we are given cuts of salt pork with five inches of fat, and of twenty pounds of it we have only about one pound of lean. It is impossible to eat the fat, and the men throw it overboard. One day in the week we are dealt out so-called boiled beef which is as tough as a piece of canvas. But of all the stuff served to us sailors the worst by far is the alleged corned beef, known among us as salt horse. This is our Friday dish. It is simply impossible to eat it, and the chief duty of the cook on that day is to throw the stuff overboard. This is the bill of fare of the receiving ship, Vermont, and on scalawag ships it is even worse. Each man is compelled to pay $3 a month into the mess to buy a little extra food in order that he may be able to live. There ought to be no trouble about feeding the recruits on the receiving ships if the men had their rights.

"The men receive $9 a month, and many of them spend it all rather than eat salt horse, but after their money is gone they must eat it or starve. The starvation and privations to which a sailor is subjected prompt many to desert. That is why the Powhatan cannot obtain recruits. No man will enlist in the navy if he can get anything else to do, or unless he knows nothing about the way recruits are treated."

Origin of the Word "Boss."

"Boss," or "to boss," was, according to some philologists, originally introduced into the New World by Irish or Scottish immigrants, from the Gaelic bos, the hand. But this is erroneous. The word is derived from the Dutch settlers who first colonized New Amsterdam, first called New York by the English when the colony changed masters by coming into the possession of the British Government. Boss, in the Dutch language signifies a master or the foreman of a workshop. Perhaps even the English-speaking population of the State, if they had known that "boss" was no other than Dutch for "master," might, in their republican pride, have repudiated the word and invented another.

Women in China are deeply interested in wedding divorce, as with Chinese ideas the honorable position of a wife. The Chinese lady, strongly developed, avoids both scandals and intrigues. The magistrate often compliments querists instead of pronouncing a decree of divorce, and the wife has an unfailing source of consolation in the upbringing of her children.

THE STRUGGLE FOR FOOD.

From a London Board-Schools' Diary.

To-night I saw one of my lads sitting on a doorstep, doubled up over his slate, and he covered his head this way and that in his vain endeavors to avail himself of the light of the street-lamp. When I took his slate out of his hands, I found that the poor little man had worked out his sums in a sprawling fashion. The light was very uncertain and his little fingers were so cold that anything like neatness was out of the question, but he stuck gallantly to his post—or, rather to his doorstep—and grinned all over his face while I patted him.

I asked him what he was doing out on the street on such a nasty evening, and he replied:

"We ain't got no candle, sir. Father and mother has got to sit in the dark, and I came out under the lamp to get my home lesson done."

As I walked into a better neighborhood, I saw the bright lights in pleasant rooms, and heard the laughter of children and the tinkle of pianos, I thought rather kindly of my poor little man sitting with cold fingers groping through his sums by the yellow light of the gas. It is a curious kind of topsy-turvy business altogether.

That little boy is as bright as bright can be. When I first knew him he was in dire distress because he could not read his little book right away. I explained to him that there were certain formalities and drudgeries to be gone through before one could tell what was inside books, and we had great fun while he was learning his alphabet. He christened the letters by names of his own. The small d he called "belly in front," and the small b "belly behind." And he was charmed when he had become able to tell the difference between d, p, b and q with absolute certainty.

He begged the loan of books to take home; he never played, and even when he was walking to and from school he puzzled himself over various "Readers" until he had mastered all we had in stock.

The lad was fit for anything, but his parents managed to make only about nine shillings (2.25) a week at the best of times, so there is not much chance for him in the future. I have to do with lazy boys who need to be scolded into learning; but this poor little soul—the son of a costermonger and a collar-maker—would go without his dinner to get an hour with a new book. Yet, I rather fancy, he will end as a laborer, or something of that sort. The struggle for food will crush ambition out of him, and very likely by the time he is twenty years of age he will not care for reading even the Sunday newspapers.

A Memorial from Temperance Women.

W. G. Donnan, of Iowa, presented to the Republican National Convention a memorial and petition from the National Women's Christian Temperance Union. After some debate it was read. It bears the signatures of the officers of the Women's Christian Temperance Union in forty-eight States and Territories, and reads as follows:

"We, the members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the United States, herein represented by the signatures of our officers, while believing that while the poison habits of the Nation can be largely restrained by an appeal to the intellect, through argument to the heart, through sympathy, and to the conscience through the motives of religion, believe that the traffic in those poisons will be best controlled by prohibitory law. We believe that the teachings of science, experience and the golden rule combine to testify against the traffic in alcoholic liquors as a drink, and that the homes of America, which are the citadels of patriotism, purity and happiness, have no enemies so relentless as the American saloon; therefore, as citizens of the United States, irrespective of sex or religion or section, but having deeply at heart the protection of our homes, we do hereby respectfully and earnestly petition you to advocate and adopt such measures as are requisite to the end that prohibition of the importation, exportation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages may become an integral part of the National Constitution, and that your candidate shall be by character and public life committed to a national prohibitory constitutional amendment."

The Plaster Experiment.

A farmer can never certainly know what plaster will do for him till he tries it on his own fields. There is hardly a farm crop which, if everybody's testimony can be accepted, is not under some conditions improved by a dressing of this substance; and, on the other hand, there is not a farm crop that has not failed on somebody's land to give any satisfactory return for such an application. Very few advocate it for potatoes; its use on clover is more common than on any other crop, while there are many witnesses to its excellent effect on Indian corn and grain—applied on corn in the spring when it is two or three inches high, a tablespoonful to the hill, and on wheat in the fall. It will not do any good on a poor soil, for it is not manure itself; in general, it only helps the crop to make a better use of the plant-food provided for it in the soil or in real manures. A bushel to the acre is a common dressing, while some apply twice or even three times as much; on grass a bushel applied at least once a year is regarded as better than a larger quantity even at longer intervals. A moderately dry soil is far more likely to give a good return for plaster than a wet one; on the other hand moist weather after it is applied is welcomed as beneficial.

HUGE ELECTRIC BATTERY.

CARE REQUIRED IN KEEPING THE METALS APART.

Bartholdi's Statue of Liberty and Some Possibilities of It.

In erecting the great Statue of Liberty, two things had to be considered that seemed very trifling, and yet, if neglected, might destroy the statue in one day, or cause it to crumble slowly to pieces. One is the sun, the other is the sea breeze. Either of these could destroy the great copper figure, and something must be done to prevent such a disaster. The heat of the sun would expand the metal and pull it out of shape, precisely as it does pull the Brooklyn bridge out of shape every day. The bridge is made in four parts, and when they expand with the heat of the sun they slide one past the other, and no harm is done. The river span rises and falls day and night, as heat and cold alternate. The great copper statue is likewise in two parts, the frame-work of iron and the copper covering; and while they are securely fastened together they can move past over the other. Each bolt will slip a trifle as the copper expands in the hot August sunshine, and slide back again when the freezing winds blow and the vast figure shrinks together in the cold. Besides this, the copper surface is so thin and elastic that it will bend slightly when heated, yet keep its general shape.

The salt air blowing in from the sea has thin fingers and a bitter, biting tongue. If it finds a crack where it can creep in between the copper surface and the iron skeleton, there will be trouble at once. These metals do not agree together, and where there is salt moisture in the air they seem to quarrel more bitterly than ever. It seems that every joining of points of copper and iron makes a tiny battery, and so faint shivers of electricity would run through all the statue, slowly corroding and eating it into dust. This curious, silent, and yet sure destruction must be prevented, and so every joint throughout the statue, wherever copper touches iron, must be protected with little rags stuffed between the metals to keep them from quarreling. It is the same wherever two different metals touch each other. Imagine what a tremendous battery the Liberty would make, with its tons of copper surface and monstrous skeleton of iron. However, a little care prevents all danger, as provision will be made, of course, for keeping the metals from touching each other.—St. Nicholas for July.

The Gas Wells.

Natural gas has long been utilized for heating and lighting purposes in all the towns of the oil regions. At Pittsburg attention is now seriously turned toward economizing it and making it serve upon a large scale. This gas is brought to the city in five and eight inch mains from as far as twenty-five miles away; it flows with suicidal wastefulness and many wells give out in less than five years.

The gas is used in all kinds of furnaces for making steam, iron, glass, etc. Its value as a heating agent is high, and the best method of burning it has been found to be by numerous jets in contact with the whole heating surface of the boiler. Household use has begun, although it is almost impossible to make tight joints in the pipes, and no method of removing the vile odor of the gas has yet been contrived. From it also are made electric light carbons and the finest lampblack for printing inks.

Erie, Warren and many other towns have long used natural gas either alone or mixed with artificial coal gas as an illuminator, the only object being the bad smell. The committee which lately reported upon the subject to the Society of Mechanical Engineers stated that the value of the gas as compared by evaporation tests with coal at $1.40 per ton, is only eight cents per thousand feet.—The Hour.

The Bogardus Kicker in War.

While Colonel Jenkins, of Confederate cavalry fame, is not remembered to any great extent as a fighter, he did a bit of work at Hagerstown during the Pennsylvania campaign which caused General Mead to say that he should be treated like a gentleman in case he ever fell into Federal hands as a prisoner. The colonel was left in the town for a day or two to hurry up Confederate stragglers and pick up news, and half a day after the last regiment had passed on six or eight Federal soldiers, among whom was a lieutenant and a first sergeant, appeared at his headquarters and desired to surrender. Come to question them, Jenkins ascertained that they had deliberately left their regiments and hidden themselves away for just this opportunity. He was so indignant that he refused to receive their paroles, but, on the contrary, ordered them to be taken to his picket line and kicked out of sight. A detail of champion kickers was made for this purpose, and the sole leather was applied with all the vigor possible to be had from leg muscle. The officer was held up by two men and booted by a third until the kicker could kick no more.—M. QUAD.

The Landlord's Pets.

An incident of English country life is thus given: A certain noble lord keeps colonies of pooks—a snow-like bird greatly given to thieving—because they are an interesting addition to his pack. A farmer near by sees his barley disappearing under the attacks of the birds, and puts down poisoned grain. Children find several dead birds, and, in the scarcity of meat which makes any flesh coveted by the peasantry, take them home to be eaten. The noble lord's gamekeeper has everybody arrested, and sets out the farmer who laid the grain. The magistrates "commit on the dangerous nature of the case," and impose fines and penalties amounting to nearly $50.

THE STAGE-DRIVER'S STORY.

How Colonel Sidney Lay was Saved and How He Drove Twice Around Death.

The traveler of the present day, as he is hurried along by the lightning express, in its buffet cars and palace sleepers, seldom reverts in thought to the time when the stage coach and packet were the only means of communication between distant points. It is rare that one of the real old time stage-drivers is met with nowadays, and when the writer recently ran across Fayette Hasbell, of Lockport, N. Y., he felt like a bibliographer over the discovery of some rare volume of "forgotten lore." Mr. Hasbell, although one of the pioneers in stage driving (he formerly ran from Lewiston to Niagara Falls and Buffalo), is hale and hearty and bids fair to live for many years. The strange stories of his early adventures would fill a volume. At one time when going down a mountain, near Lewiston, with no less a personage than General Scott as a passenger, the brakes gave way and the coach came on the heels of the wheel horses. The only remedy was to whip the leaders to a gallop. Gaining additional momentum with each revolution of the wheels the coach swayed and pitched down the mountain side and into the streets of Lewiston. Straight ahead at the foot of the steep hill flowed the Niagara river, toward which the four horses dashed, apparently to certain death. Yet the firm hand never relaxed its hold nor the clear brain its conception of what must be done in the emergency. On dashed the horses until the narrow dock was reached on the river bank, when by a masterly exhibition of nerve and daring, the coach was turned in scarce its own length, and the horses brought to a stand still before the pale lookers-on could realize what had occurred. A purse was raised by General Scott and presented to Mr. Haskell with high compliments for his skill and bravery.

Notwithstanding all his strength and his robust constitution, the strain of continuous work and exposure proved too much for Mr. Haskell's constitution. The constant jolting of the coach and the necessarily cramped position in which he was obliged to sit, contributed to this end, and at times he was obliged to abandon driving altogether.

Speaking of this period he said:

"I found it almost impossible to sleep at night; my appetite left me entirely, and I had a tired feeling which I never knew before, and could not account for."

"Did you give up driving entirely?"

"No. I tried to keep up, but it was only with the greatest effort. This state of things continued for nearly twenty years until last October, when I went all to pieces."

"In what way?"

"Oh, I doubled all up; could not walk without a cane and was incapable of any effort or exertion. I had a constant desire to urinate both day and night and although I felt like passing a gallon every ten minutes only a few drops could escape and they thick with sediment. Finally it ceased to flow entirely and I thought death was very near."

"What did you do then?"

"What I should have done long before: listen to my wife. Under her advice I began a new treatment."

"And with what result?"

"Wonderful. It unstopped the closed passages, and what was still more wonderful regulated the flow. The sediment vanished; my appetite returned and I am now well and good for twenty more years wholly through the aid of Warners' Safe Cure that has done wonders for me as well as for so many others."

Mr. Haskell's experience is repeated every day in the lives of thousands of American men and women. An unknown evil is undermining the existence of an innumerable number who do not realize the danger they are in until health has entirely departed and death perhaps stares them in the face. To neglect such important matters is like drifting in the current of Niagara above the falls.

Went as Express Matter.

Horace H. Buell, of Chicago, not having sufficient money to buy a ticket, conceived the scheme of being sent as express matter to Manhattan, Kansas, and was successful. He arranged a box so that he could sit in it, and could, if necessary, release himself. He got into his box and was placed on board the cars. He left Chicago and arrived in Manhattan shortly after midnight two days later, and was dumped out on the platform with other freight.

His expectation was that he could escape in the darkness, but the box was set down bottom side up, with the lid against the platform, and his scheme was frustrated. When he was rolled into the express office at the depot a still worse misfortune attended him, for the box was so placed that he stood on his head. The clerk then began checking up, using the box for a table. Buell stood it as long as he could and then made his presence known, greatly frightening the agent, who was going to shoot into the box. At length, however, they released him. He paid the express charges—$9.25. A ticket would have cost $18.54.

IT STILL WORKS.—A good amateur actor carried a satchel into a Baltimore groggery and displayed its contents that seemed to be money to the amount of $95,000, at the same time pretending to be demented. A companion soon intimated to the rumseller that the treasure ought to be taken care of, and agreed to leave it in his possession if he would hand over $500 as security. "But this must be your own money," said the friend, "for nothing in the bag must be disturbed." The sum was eagerly advanced by the saloon man, who, of course, intended to keep the bag, in which he subsequently found nothing but waste paper.

THE FINISH.—"Make it very strong and close, Uncle John," said the lady of the manor to the negro who was building a new garden fence; "my Christianity can't stand the test of my neighbor's pigs and chickens." "I b'lieve you, mistus," was the old man's emphatic response, "case I hin allus notice dat dar was an end to all peace an' good will, an' neighborliness, an' Tigleus when dey wasn't no fence."

A Simple Twist of the Wrist.

"It was as good as a circus," said Sergeant Malholland. "I was walking along Broadway the other morning when I saw a black-and-tan cab coming furiously up Murray street; the driver seemed to be doing his best to stop the animal, but it was unmanageable. A tall, well-built man, who did not see the runaway, was crossing the street. Everybody cried out to him, but the horse was close upon him before he saw it. Quick as thought he put out his right hand, seized the horse by the nostrils, gave a sudden twist, and the runaway was lying flat on his side on the crossing. The cab driver was too much astonished to say a word, and the stranger picked up his hat and walked off as coolly as though nothing had happened. I learned that he was Mr. Lemuel R. Sturges, the owner of a cattle ranch in TEXAS. He knew a trick that the cowboys have of throwing a steer by giving its head a little twist. He practiced it on Broadway, and that runaway horse got a lesson that he won't forget if he has any sense."—New York Sun.

NOT POOR.—There is a general impression, says London Life, that the Empress Eugenie is poor. I can say with certainty that she is rich. Besides possessing large sums, well invested in England, and the whole of the Prince Imperial's fortune, Her Majesty owns immense tracts of pine forests in the Landes, from which she derives a very substantial income. Thus, she spends nothing.

A BERKSHIRE man calls his dog "Cork," because his bark is so light.

STUFFED.—A large district in Drogheda, Ireland, was suddenly deprived of water the other day and the water company's men were puzzled to account for the stoppage. On examination being made it was found that a pipe had been stopped by an enormous eel several feet in length and of unusual thickness.

CONCEIT.—Ex-Senator Sharon publicly admits that his employment of Miss Sarah Althea Hill as his private secretary cost him in wages $200,000, exclusive of the expenses of the so-called divorce suit.

Arson enduring for years the visits of book canvassers and the rest of the office-hunting tribe, a Glasgow firm tried what banter would do, and issued a notice as follows—"The hours of attendance in this office are—To canvassers for church subscriptions, 10 till 2; book and insurance agents, 3 till 4; commercial travelers, beggars, and advertising men, all day. We attend in our own houses at night."

NINE GRAVES IN EDINBRO.

[From the Century for July.]

In the churchyard, up in the old high town,
The sexton stood at his daily toil,
And he lifted his mattock and drove it down,
And sunk it deep in the sacred soil.

And then as he delved he sang right lustily,
Aye, as he deepened and shaped the graves
In the black old mold that smelled so mustily,
And thus was the way of the sexton's staves:

"It's nine o' the clock, and I have begun
The settled task that is daily mine;
By ten o' the clock I will finish one—
By six o' the clock there must be nine;

"Just three for women, and three for men;
And, to fill the number, another three
For daughters of women and sons of men,
Who men or women shall never be.

"And the first of the graves in a row of three
Is his or hers who shall first appear;
All lie in the order they come to me,
And such has been ever the custom here."

The first they brought was a fair young child,
And they saw him buried, and went their way;
And the sexton leaned on his spade and smiled,
And wondered, "How many more to-day?"

The next was a man; then a woman came;
The sexton had loved her in years gone by;
But the years had gone, and the dead old dame
He buried as deep as his memory.

At six o' the clock his task was done;
Eight graves were closed, and the ninth prepared—
Made ready to welcome a man—what one
'Twas little the grim old sexton cared.

He sat him down on its brink to rest,
When the clouds were red and the sky was gray,
And said to himself: "This last is the best
And deepest of all I have digged to-day.

"Who will fill it, I wonder, and when?
It does not matter; whoe'er they be,
The best and the worst of the race of men
Are all alike when they come to me."

They went to him with a man, next day,
When the sky was gray and the clouds were red,
As the sun set forth on his upward way;
They went—and they found the sexton dead.

Dead, by the open grave was he;
And they buried him in it that self-same day,
And marveled much such a thing should be;
And since, the people will often say:

"If ye dig, no matter when,
Graves to bury other men,
Think—it never can be known
When ye'll chance to dig your own,
Mind ye of the tale ye know—
Nine graves in Edinbro."

NOTE.—The following is related concerning the death of Jemmy Camber, one of the jesters of King James I. during his reign in Scotland:

"Jemmy rose, made him ready, takes his horse, and rides to the churchyard in the high bowse, where he found the sexton (as the custom is there) making nine graves—three for men, three for women, and three for children; and whose dyes next, first come, first served. 'Lend me thy spade,' says Jemmy, and with that digs a hole, which hole box fell him make for his grave; and doth give him a French crowne. The man, willing to please his fancy more for his good than his pleasure, did so; and the foole gets upon his horse, rides to a gentleman of the towne, and on the sodaine within two houres after dyed; of whom the sexton telling, he was buried there indeed."—ROBERT ARMIN, "The Nest of Ninnies." IRWIN RUSSELL.

Twice Taken.

A STORY OF THE TROUBLOUS IN 1812-13.

In the year of 1813, while the British fleet was blockading the Chesapeake Bay, the schooner Ruby, laden with flour and bound for Boston, was lying in the Rappahannock river, waiting for a chance to run the blockade and get to sea. Captain Handy, a native of the State of Maine, was a shrewd, practical man, full of energy and pluck, and equal to any emergency. At this time he was right in the prime of life, being about 40 years of age.

One stormy night the "Ruby," shrouded in mist and almost impenetrable darkness, passed unheard and unseen the vigilant blockading fleet, and the morning found her well out to sea, veiled in thick, but friendly fog. For four days she had light southerly winds and foggy weather. On the morning of the fifth day, Captain Handy judged himself in the vicinity of Montauk Point, and indulged the hope of reaching the Vineyard Sound in safety. But he was doomed to disappointment, for as the gray dawn began to appear, the fog settled down on the water, disclosing above the mist the homing spars and rigging of an English seventy-four, not 200 yards distant.

Too late to escape. The loss of his vessel and introduction of himself and crew to the horrors of a British prison seemed inevitable. As if to dispel the last hope of escape, a thirty-two pound ball with a frightful and unearthly scream shot across the bow. Interpreting the fire as a command to heave to, the topsail was promptly thrown back and the flying jib hauled down to await the coming of the ship, which very soon ranged up a short distance to windward, hauled up her course and backed her main topsail.

The schooner was immediately boarded by a boat from the ship in charge of the first lieutenant. All of the Ruby's crew, with the exception of Capt. H., were conveyed to the ship, while two midshipmen and four seamen were transferred from the schooner, with orders to proceed at once to Halifax. The two vessels soon separated, the Ruby sailing towards Halifax, and the ship in company lay cradle off New York.

Capt. Handy once began to task his brain to devise some plan to retake the schooner, of which he was a large owner. The captain's pleasing address, ingratiating manner in which he related his stirring personal adventure as a pioneer on shore, and as a seaman along the coast, and the deference he paid to the young officers in command, resulted in quickly gaining for him the confidence and good-will of all on board; and last, but not least, as a reconciler of hostile feelings, a jug of Jamaica rum did very much to wash out from the British hearts the bitter national prejudice which was at first entertained against the Yankee prisoner.

The morning following the capture, the Ruby passed the south shore of Nantucket. At this time it was blowing hard from the southward, the vessel was put under short sail, the appetite of the midshipmen for Jamaica rum increased with the gale, and after numerous unsuccessful attempts to quench their thirst, they became very drowsy, and when Capt. H. very generously offered to stand their watch, they made no opposition. As soon as the officers were asleep, the crew were invited to go and do likewise; an invitation which an "old salt" never hesitates to accept.

Capt. H. on taking command, changed the course of the vessel from east northeast to north northeast, which was continued till late next morning. As the vessel was running at least ten knots an hour, the captain went far on his way literally rejoicing. At eight bells when they came on deck the next morning, the Ruby was running again east northeast, and so continued during the day.

As the following night closed in the wind was still blowing hard, now from the south southeast a heavy sea was running and the thick fog rendered it impossible to discern any objects half a cable length distant. In view of these facts, and knowing his close proximity to the shores of Maine, Capt. H. advised heaving the schooner to under a double reefed foresail, giving as a reason that as they were approaching the coast of Novia Scotia, it would be very dangerous to run further in the darkness. His advice was accordingly acted upon.

As the morning dawned, an island covered with trees, its shores lashed by the breaking waves, was discerned only a short distance to leeward. There was no time to be lost; the jib was hoisted, the helm put hard to starboard, and the vessel falling off before the wind, ran around the island and came to an anchor in a quiet land-locked harbor. The island, so dimly seen through the rain and fog, was not recognised by Capt. H., though he well knew he was somewhere on the coast of eastern Maine.

Soon a boat containing two men came alongside. Capt. H. saw at once that its occupants were old acquaintances, whose silence he secured by signs and gestures, and managed to inform them of the situation of affairs without exciting the suspicions of the Englishmen. He was informed that his vessel was lying in the harbor of Little Kennebec, an inlet within the limits of the Town of Machias.

The visitors under the direction of the Captain, gave the midshipman to understand that they were in a snug harbor, and only a short distance from Halifax.

The officers, taking their own boat and two of their own men, invited the Captain to accompany them on a stroll on shore. On landing they walked some distance from the boat, when Capt. H., who had loitered behind with two Americans, who had accompanied them, proposed that with their assistance he would recapture the vessel.

This proposition was assented to. Suiting the action to the word, they turned and ran to the shore; but the officers quickly discovering the flight, a very exciting race commenced then and there, each party making almost superhuman exertions to be the first to reach the boats. The Americans came in ahead, having the start of the Englishmen. To throw the oars of one boat far out in the water and jump into the other and shove off from the shore was only the work of an instant. To pull for the vessel at the highest rate of speed attainable was the next thing in order.

The officers finding themselves outwitted, began hailing the vessel with the intention of arousing the two men on board, and warning them of the impending danger; but the men were below, and before they reached the dock, the indomitable captain with his followers were on board. Seizing the two pairs of pistols which lay on the pinnacle and making belligerent demonstrations, the Yankees compelled the English seamen into an immediate surrender.

Very soon the middies came sailing off using two boats thwarts in lieu of oars, Capt. H. promptly challenged them and told them they could come on board only to make an unconditional surrender of themselves as prisoners of war, which alternative they accepted without parley. Two hours after they were duly put into the custody of the commander of the fort at Machiasport, where they remained until exchanged and sent to Halifax.

LITTLE MIS. Jeanne was finishing her dinner. She had already eaten a small saucer of strawberries, and was preparing to eat another, when her mother gently stopped her. "You know one of these saucers was for me," she said. Mlle. Jeanne hesitated for a moment, and then exclaimed suddenly: "What a pity; I ate your's first!"

THE LONG FELT WANT.

TRIALS AND TRIBULATIONS EXPERIENCED IN PUBLISHING A NEW PAPER.

Bill Nye Tells us How he Printed a Daily Paper in a Town Where there Was No Room For It.

I toyed with a daily once which was incorporated to fill a long felt want. I did not know it was loaded. We made it our business to boom everything that was boomable and to sneer at the lack of enterprise of our adversary. We got specials by mail, press reports by slow freight and showed a style of fearless enterprises that was the envy and the admiration of many large metropolitan journals. We thought that our adversary wouldn't last more than a month after election, but Thanksgiving came and found the Evening Squawker still on deck. The editor would come and borrow print paper of us and then use it to call us the slime-bedecked and putrid exponent of a still more baneful political faction. We would borrow a font of brevier of him and characterize his paper as the wailing foundling, dying in the poisonous vapors of the deadly swamp of political filth, wherein it had chosen its bed, edited by the bitter foe of the laundress and Lindley Murray, a man who had evaded justice for forty years, and, not content with the outrage of all moral sense, had declared war on the spelling book.

Thus we kept up a spirited contest for a long time. Sometimes we couldn't get our paper out of the freight office and sometimes he couldn't, but we would loan each other the last quire we had and keep friendly, while through the columns of our respective papers we spoke of each other in language which might have been construed as reproachful to some people.

It was an exciting time. One day the Squawker would offend a subscriber and he would come over to us, and the next day we would unwittingly tread on the toes of one of our great army of subscribers and he would go over to the enemy.

The editor of the other paper and myself saw that it was going to be a war of extermination. We ground our teeth and our shears and sailed in. At the end of the first year he had discharged his servant girl and my paper owed me $300 salary. At the end of the second year he had blown in his fine brick residence and I had taken my salary as Police Justice and thrown it into the rapacious maw of my little hungry long felt want.

One day the little, muddy, measly, long-suffering features of the Evening Squawker failed to appear. We kept asking the office boy why the Squawker didn't come. He didn't know. Finally he went to the publication office. The door was locked. A map of Dakota was hung over one window and a printer's towel over the other. The office boy raised the map and stole in. The uncertain light here and there broke in straggling rays through the threadbare places in the towel. On the desk lay a letter from the advertiser of a Colic Eraser in which he offered to take a column in the Squawker a year, following pure reading matter and with 2,000 lines of reading notices to be strung along through editorials from day to day, in bold-faced type, and in consideration therefor to furnish for two years to the editor or his order fifty bottles of the Colic Eraser at publisher's price, delivered on board the cars.

Everything about the office showed that the work had been going bravely on when the summons came. In fact the summons lay there on the desk among other papers, along with a writ of attachment for $263.85. This shows what a hold a paper gets on its subscribers and also what a hold the subscriber gets on the paper. The Sheriff had been a subscriber to the Squawker ever since it started, but we didn't know his attachment for the paper was so great.

We won the day, but at what sacrifice. The smoke of conflict cleared away and showed that the victory was not worthy of the carnage. We had survived but we were not proud. The Squawker had fought us bravely, and now its still, cold form lay in State in the basement of the chief creditor and the usual notice of attachment was tacked on the door.

The editor and myself met on the following day, and he was the more cheerful of the two. He said he felt sorry for me.

"I can use what I got hereafter on my family," said he; "but you can't. You will feel guilty if you buy a barrel of flour for your own use, knowing that it may imperil the next issue of the paper. I have passed all that."

And he was right. The quicker a man decides to cease publishing a daily paper where it is not needed, just simply through a high moral sense of duty, the sooner he will become light-hearted and joyous. I paid $9,000 for the privilege of knowing this, and I present it to every paid-up subscriber without money and without price. I don't know very much, but if there's anything I do know, and know it hard, and know it with one hand tied behind me, it is that.—Detroit Free Press.

THE great end of life is not to think but act.

A TERRIBLE STORY.

The Torture Said to be Practised in Private Insane Asylums.

[From the St. James's Gazette.]

A gentleman, giving the name of C. G. Ethelson, attended before Mr. Flowers at Bow Street to ask for a summons against the medical superintendent and officials of a private asylum where he was confined in the year 1879. The applicant said that he could testify that by scientific methods the most severe tortures might be inflicted with as much suffering as was endured in former times when patients were chained to the floor and flogged. He complained that all the food tasted intensely bitter, so much so that he could with difficulty touch anything, the eatables being heavily drugged. In addition to the loss of the natural functions of his body his throat commenced to close up. The third night he was overpowered by the fumes of chloroform and he was removed to a room where the chimney had been blocked up and a fire lighted, and he was compelled to sleep in that suffocating atmosphere all night. He attributed this to a desire on the part of the superintendent to cause his death by coughing. At the end of the three days he was on the verge of insanity and suffered from an internal complaint, and in a week was nearly dead. At last the superintendent relented, and it was significant that the day before he (the applicant) had a Bible placed near him with a mark at the passage "He shall not die, but live." During his convalescence he complained that sulphurous fumes were passed into his room, and had the effect of causing him great agony.

One night the watchman came to the door of his room and said, in a sepulchral voice: "Have you got the foot blocks ready?" but he dared not ask previous occasion he had been told that "Dead men tell no tales." His principal food was pork, and he was informed that the object of this was "to keep the lamp of life burning low." On the occasion of his being sent to Eastbourne he noticed at his lodgings a coil of rope with a black silk necktie placed upon it. In the room next the window, about eight feet high, a large iron staple had been driven into the wall to make it conspicuous. He immediately realised that it was to provoke him to commit suicide, and if he had only touched the rope out of curiosity he would have been seized and detained for life. Mr. Flowers said this was a matter beyond his jurisdiction and referred the applicant to the Lunacy Commissioners.

A Romance of the Flood.

HOW A CALIFORNIA MECHANIC SAVED A FAMILY AND GAINED A BRIDE.

Robert Drape was married to Guadalupe de Bandini, in Sacramento city, California. Under such an announcement rests hidden a gallant deed which has passed unperceived. It was during the flood. A young widow with her two children was standing on the porch of a house situated on the bank of the river, and there was no escape for her. Spectators looked horrified, for the waters had completely surrounded the frail building, and the cries of the poor little children and the agonizing looks of the mother were piercing their hearts, but none would brave what appeared to be certain death, to rescue the unfortunates. A young mechanic, brought to the locality by curiosity, appeared among the spectators. Realizing the danger, and divesting himself of his surplus clothing, he plunged into the turbid waters. Soon he reached the doomed building. To strap the children on his back and seize the mother in his strong arms, was but the work of a moment. Soon he landed them on the safe ground, amid the plaudits of the crowd, and as he assumed his outer apparel the house disappeared in the roaring waters of the river. The gratitude of the mother found vent in the flowing language of the natives of Spain, and our hero, who could only guess at the meaning of the musical words, read in the eyes of the Guadalupe incipient love. His blushes were a response to this language of the heart, and, moved by an irresistible impulse, they flew into each other's arms in words, for he understood not her language, nor did she know his, but by look, and the pledge was ratified in the presence of Father Peter and a crowd of mutual friends.

Chicago's Quaintest Horsewoman.

Chicago has a young horsewoman who goes in for carrot color of a bright shade. Her hair is bleached to exactly match the steed. One day she wore a jockey cap, under which the reddish hair was cropped close, in a bogish fashion, and the tail of the horse was docked, thus making a harmony of style. On a subsequent occasion the girl's hair fell in a fluffy mass down her back, save when speed or wind raised it. It was obvious at a glance that the enormous abundance was false. The horse presented a more difficult problem. His tail nearly touched the ground. Was this another horse, or had his tail been brushed right? Neither. The long tail was false.

VETERANS IN LIFE.

Parr who Took a Wife at 80 Years of Age and Another at 122.

Thomas Parr, or, as he is familiarly known "Old Parr," is everywhere cited as the oldest man of modern times, a distinction that was not his by right and obtained probably from the prominence given him in history through the introduction to, and notice afforded by, his sovereign. True, for twenty-one years he was entitled to such distinction, when the death of Bowles procured for him a rival, while both were eclipsed by Jenkins a quarter of a century later. Further, Parr was buried in Westminster Abbey, while his rivals obtained no more post-mortem courtesy than was afforded by Potter's Field.

When eighty years of age Parr first felt the wounds of Cupid's darts and he courted and married one Jane Taylor, presumably a lass in her teens, since she was described as a "young maiden." Jane died after thirty-two years of connubial bliss, having borne her spouse two children.

At the modest age of 122 Parr again succumbed to the wiles of the "little god," and assuaged his grief by a marriage with one Jane, widow of Anthony Adda, and daughter of one Lloyd, of Gilfells, Montgomeryshire. She also was of a long-lived family, being a niece of Richard Lloyd, a centenarian, before mentioned, and she survived her husband many years.

In the later days of the nineteenth century the number of persons who have more than accomplished a century of years appears to be multiplying. In the city of Guadalajara, Mexico, there resides a "Greaser" who claims to have been present at events that took place in that city in 1740, and he certainly evinces therewith all the familiarity of an eye-witness. Another resides in Sonora, 127 years of age, in perfect health and full possession of all his faculties, and who passes his time in rolling cigarettes for himself and friends. Two distant relatives of the writer are still living at the advanced ages of 103 and 107 respectively. Sojourner Truth, a negress of Battle Creek, Michigan, claims to be 110, and is somewhat celebrated as an evangelical exhorter and temperance lecturer. I have known also two squaws who attained a great age; one, known as "Old Mother Rodd," resided on the Ojibbeway Reservation, near Sarnia, Ontario, and died a few years since at, as supposed, 120 years; the other, a Seteaux witch or medicine squaw, who was murdered in her 125th year by a French half-breed she had threatened to bewitch—an act that was generally applauded since she was feared by the Indians and mixed bloods for miles around.

COIN CLIPPING.

The practice of clipping or robbing coin is at its height in all parts of the country. It has become so common to see silver coins with holes through them that very many give the matter no attention, if what is taken may be passed to the next man as easily. But so much mutilated coin is in circulation that the banks and many tradesmen, even, refuse every piece that has been tampered with. Government will not take them in regular business, but accept them, unless at a depreciated value, according to weight. Until all follow the practice of the few the coin robbers will continue to thrive. In the innocent age of the world it was supposed that a punched coin had been at some time attached to a pretty ribbon to serve as a charm, or that some curious-minded person had disfigured a piece in order to recognise the same if it came into his hands again. But now it is well known that these small splinters are systematically clipped off for profit. The United States law fixes a fine of $2,000 and two years' imprisonment for whoever defaces, mutilates, impairs, diminishes, falsifies or lightens any coin. The practice is half a century old, and the only way to stop it is to stop the outlet for the clipped coins, and refuse to take them at all times. They are not legal currency.

AN INGENIOUS FRAUD.

It remained for a French seaman named Bonavois to invent an entirely new and original device for supporting himself by fraud. His practice was to fall through the side entrance of a railway carriage, pretending that the door had been carelessly left unsecured by the guard. He would fall out, cling desperately to the door, and eventually be dragged back by the other passengers, who would innocently corroborate his statements. The man's training as a seaman had given him sufficient agility to perform the feat in a natural manner, and he found no difficulty in simulating a sprained ankle or arm as the result of the accident. To avoid a lawsuit and damaging notoriety, the company would promptly compensate him for the pretended injury. In this way he collected in one month, on five separate occasions, sums varying from 40 to 160 francs. At length he attempted the trend at Meudon, on the Versailles line, but he had lost or failed to procure his ticket, and this led to an inquiry which resulted in exposure.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

The Light Muslin Dress—How to Do It Up—Starching Ginghams and Calicoes.

If there are no children in the family and the cares of the house sit lightly upon its mistress, she may be able to wear a light muslin for a season without its requiring washing. The same may be said of other summer dresses, but most women like to know the best methods of renovating them. Of course they will never have the freshness and beauty they had when new, but if carefully washed may do good service. Borax added to the water in which they are washed helps to remove soil and stains without removing the color also; it should be added to the water in the proportion of a tablespoonful to the gallon of water. Powdered borax may be purchased at any drug store; it should be dissolved in hot water; when you fear that the color will be washed out it will sometimes be a good plan to dissolve a tablespoonful of alum in enough lukewarm water to wet the dress thoroughly; rinse it up and down several times, then rub it gently in warm, not hot suds; rinse thoroughly in cold water into which you have put a small handful of salt; iron if possible before it becomes dry; but if it should become dry more speedily than you expect, iron it under a damp cloth. Care must be taken in making the starch to have it free from lumps, and not scalding hot when the dress is dipped into it. The dress should be hung where the sun will not shine on it, and wrong side out; it should be ironed on the wrong side whether it is calico or muslin.

It was a tradition in my own family that flour starch is better for starching ginghams and calicoes than fine starch. It certainly has the merit of economy, and it is said that calico dresses will keep stiff and fresh looking longer than if starched with fine starch. It can do no harm to try it; to one quart of boiling water allow three heaping tablespoonfuls of flour; mix this with a little cold water, and stir it until it is perfectly smooth, then stir it into the quart of water which should be boiling. Boil for five minutes, watching and stirring to keep it from burning; strain it through a bag made of crash and kept for the purpose. This bag should be made of a piece of crash doubled so that there will be no seam at the bottom, and it should be immediately rinsed in water and be cleaned and dried and put away for use the next week.

He Canvassed the Train.

BUT HE HAPPENED TO STRIKE A DROVE OF AMERICAN HOGS.

There was a funny scene on a railroad train from Paterson to New York. As is usual, the train was filled with passengers on their way to business and at Passaic a new arrival entered the smoking car. He was an unmistakable Englishman, but he had run all to seed. His plug hat looked like a concentrated concertina and his long coat nearly touched his shoes, but not near enough to expose the fact that his trousers were of the high-tide pattern that are always picked before they are ripe.

As the train neared the tunnel he took the concertina off and showed unmistakable evidence that he had either grown too fast for his hair to catch up or had lunch spun on his head for drinks so frequently that most of the capillary substance had got tired of the fun and gone home early.

"I see that Cleveland is likely to receive the nomination," he said in a nutmeg-grater tone of voice, "and I propose to see how the crowd stands as between him and Blaine."

"Why didn't you bring your hair along with you?" asked a young broker with eighteen-carrot hair.

"Oh, where I was raised they didn't have anything but red hair and I would not take that," returned the man with the corruptitious cover. "Now let's see how we stand."

He had proceeded half through the car when the train entered the tunnel. He collected the returns from the rear counties under difficulties. Half of the time he was under the seats and the other half over the backs of them. When the train emerged into daylight he was lying across the stove endeavoring to pull his hat back over his ears.

After he had counted the votes he ascertained that he had two for Blaine, four for George Washington and one for John L. Sullivan. The rest of the votes were illegal, and consisted of cigar stumps, hanks of coal, a boot heel and four last year's quids of tobacco.

"It's no use to attempt to fight the crowd," he said as he left the train, "but if I ever attempt to canvass a drove of American hogs again you can call old England 'Jack' Bull right to my face."

CONVERSATIONALISTS.

Metternich once said: In my whole life I have only known ten or twelve persons with whom it is pleasant to speak—that is, who keep to the subject, do not repeat themselves and do not talk of themselves; men who do not listen to their own voice, who are cultivated enough not to lose themselves in commonplaces; and lastly, who possess tact and good sense enough not to elevate their own person above their subject.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER THIS WEEK.

THE OLD PIE STORY.

A party of young men went camping out in the Maine woods. One was selected to cook, and it was agreed that the first man who complained of the cuisine should assume the duties of cook himself. The fare was simply atrocious, but all held their peace with an effort. One day some pie was brought that was thought more villainous than anything that had gone before it. The men at the head of the table looked around upon the faces of his companions, and it occurred to him that a condition nearer akin to rebellion was pictured upon the face of his vis-a-vis than upon the countenance of any of the other unfortunates. Addressing him, sweetly, he said: "What do think of this pie?" With the utmost emphasis the reply came: "I think it is about the meanest, most infernal and contemptible pie that I ever——" And then the recollection of the agreement rushed across the speaker, and with a beaming countenance and tone of demoniac delight, he hastened to add: "But I like it."

AN UNTRUTHFUL SAYING.

"He's as crazy as a bedbug."

"You say he vas crazy like a petbug?"

"Yes."

"Vat make you dink dot a petbug vas crazy?"

"Oh, it's a saying."

"Yah, it vas yoost like dem sayings; it vouldn't work. Mein friend, if you dinks a petbug vas crazy, you yoost go efer by San Rafael and stop vou night mit der hotel. If dot petbug vas crazy vas he goin' to go up mit der ceiling and vatch ven you go to shleep and kick der govers off, so he drop down and caught you ven it is most gonvenient mid himself? Come aroundt mine upholstery shtore and I show you some petbug dricks dot make you dink he knows more as Chris Bugley."—San Francisco Post.

A WOMAN'S HEART.

Charles Augustus—"Is it true, ma, that love takes away the appetite?"

Ma—"It certainly does."

"My worst fears are realised. Oh! how can I bear up under it?"

"Why, my son, what is the matter?"

"You know how deeply I—that is—how much I think of Miss Blanck."

"A charming girl, and I am glad you like her."

"But she cannot have a particle of love for me."

"Why not?"

"Because her appetite is not affected in the least. Last evening she took four plates of ice cream at one sitting."

"Don't be alarmed, my son; ice cream don't count."—Philadelphia Evening Call.

THE TELEPHONE.

A Milwaukee man went into a saloon for a lunch, the other day, and while he was swallowing the feed, he heard the telephone bell ring, and the bartender went to the telephone and began to converse with somebody in a loud voice in the German language. The man opened his mouth wide, then turned to a gentleman at the same table, and said, "That's the first Dutch telephone I ever heard." The storekeeper told him he had one at his house that a Chinaman could talk through, and the Milwaukee man was paralyzed.—Peck's Sun.

HOW TO DISTINGUISH THEM.

Dauber—"Let me show you my latest picture."

Charles—"What do you call it?"

"It is Jonah and the whale."

"Very good; but don't you think it would have been more appropriate if you hadn't dressed Jonah in a swallow-tailed coat and an opera hat?"

"Yes. It might look a little more artistic, but there must be some way of distinguishing Jonah from the whale."—Graphic.

ICE LETTER AND BILLS.

Iceman—"Well, as to non-conductors of heat, wool cloth is very good, but paper does first-rate."

Consumer—"Paper?"

"Yes; wrap the ice up in it.

"Well, when you leave your lump, just, please, wrap it in the bill."—The Call.

DARWIN'S GREAT MISTAKE.

Minks—"I don't see why it is that if men originally had tails they didn't stay on."

Finks—"According to Darwin the tails dropped off when there was no further use for them."

"No further use for them! Good gracious! Did Darwin think that?"

"Certainly."

"Well, I guess he never saw a bald-headed printer setting type in fly-time."—Phila. Call.

THE MONEY POWER.

"The corrosive power of the stuff that is sold for whisky now-a-days must be terrible," remarked Mrs. Popinjay.

"Why, how so?" questioned her husband.

"Here is an instance," said Mrs. Popinjay, "of a young thief in Bangor, Maine, who dug his way out of a log jail with a tin dipper in which the [illegible] was accustomed to drink his whisky."

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., AUG. 14, 1884.

The election in Shelby county on last Monday went the way of Ward's ducks.—Sentinel.

Hon. Thomas Seay, of Greensboro, has announced himself a candidate for Governor next time.

Gen. Pope Walker, of Huntsville, Ala., and Gen. Toomba, of Georgia, are the only survivors of President Jeff. Davis's first cabinet.

The Independents elected their ticket in Jackson county, except for the legislature, on account of no Democratic nominations.

The Selma Times says, on the authority of those who know, that green pea vines are as good food for stock and sells for about the same price as good hay.

The people from Wilmington, Delaware, as far East as Portland, Maine, and as far West as Cleveland, Ohio, experienced the shock of an earthquake about 2 o'clock on Sunday afternoon last. No property injured nor lives lost.

Mrs. Louis Chandler Moulton writes from London that, at a ball there, among many pretty women the very prettiest was Oscar Wilde's young wife. She wore a wreath of white lilies round her lovely dark hair, her dark eyes were bright, her cheeks glowed, and she looked "as happy as love and wealth and beauty, all three could make a girl." She had a fan to which were attached masses of lilies.

The zoological garden in connection with the World's Exposition promises to be something fine. Professor Langhammer, of New Mexico, writes to the managers that he has formed a collection of bears, deer, wild cats, red foxes, antelopes, beavers, mountain lions and numerous small animals, and means to send them to New Orleans to be given the citizen's zoological garden when the exposition closes. All the wild animals common to the South and Central American states will be exhibited thereby forming an interesting feature of the great show.

Falling in favor of Cleveland The ... ks among the members and Hendr... k Produce Exbers of the New Y... Tuesday change is very strong. the first steps were taken toward the formation of a Cleveland and Hendricks battery. In a short time about fifty volunteers were secured, and it is predicted that within a few days a membership of several hundred will be obtained. A number of Republicans who have repudiated the Blaine nomination will join the ranks. The Club will wear a neat uniform and be ready to take part in the first large parade of the campaign.

We publish this week an article from the New York Evening Post on the Cleveland scandal. We have refrained from publishing anything on the subject, heretofore, in the interest of justice and decency, and because we believed the story a fiction originating amidst the filth of Republican campaign workers. So far as the story is true it will undoubtably lower the Democratic nominee in the esteem of the decent citizens of the country; but the Evening Post, which has taken pains to investigate the matter thoroughly, thinks there is no stain upon Cleveland sufficient to offset the many that have tattooed the Republican candidate both before and since he entered public life.

Congress has voted $300,000 in order to make a fine display of the government exhibits at the World's Exposition next winter. Some of the departments had only a rudimentary collection at the time of the Centennial at Philadelphia. Those collections have been increased tenfold since then, and will be opened at New Orleans in fine order. The United States Geological Survey will furnish a fine exhibition of minerals, ores and rocks from all the States and Territories. It has a collection of interesting fossil animals and fossils exhibiting the characteristics of animals and plants now extinct. It has models of extinct volcanoes, the Grand Cannon of Colorado, Yosemite Valley and the National Park. It has plans of Comstock and other great mines of the country. To describe the specimens representing the life of former ages, fishes, reptiles, gigantic quadrupeds, now extinct, shell fish that have lived in ancient geological periods, would require a large volume.

THE CLEVELAND SCANDAL.

Full Investigation Satisfies the New York "Evening Post"

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—In an editorial this afternoon on the Cleveland scandal, The Evening Post says:

There has been from the beginning but little to investigate, and the little we have investigated to our own satisfaction. It is admitted by Governor Cleveland's friends that twelve years ago he formed an irregular connection with a widow with two children, the elder fourteen years old; that she was a person of intemperate habits, and that the paternity of a child born subsequently was doubtful, but he accepted it, and made provision for the child; that, after suffering much annoyance from her—one of the natural and common penalties of such errors—and after satisfying her brother-in-law, who appeared on the scene as her protector, that he had behaved fairly toward her, he laid the whole matter before Mr. Burroughes, a lawyer of high standing in Buffalo; the Mr. Burroughes advised him to leave it to him, and therefore took charge of it; that he (Mr. Burroughes), conceiving the mother, for reasons given above, unfit to have the custody of the child, placed it in an orphan asylum, the mother consenting thereto, and making, as we understand it, a legal surrender of the child for that purpose, and occasionally visiting it at the asylum afterward; that she subsequently stole and carried it off from the asylum; that Mr. Burroughes was notified of the fact by the authorities of the asylum, whereupon acting on his own responsibility and without Mr. Cleveland's knowledge, he employed a detective to discover and look after the child; that in one of the detective's visits he found the mother suffering from delerium tremens, and threatening to kill the child, which lay on the floor; that he carried her off then to the Inebriate Asylum for treatment, and she stayed there until she was cured, and no longer, and that the child was restored to its previous guardians.

The lawyer who acted for the woman in one stage of the affair has formally repudiated any charge of seduction or breach of promise of any kind. The family acknowledged that Mr. Cleveland treated her generously. So much for the charge of seduction and kidnaping which many newspapers have been spreading.

"Well, but," we shall be asked, "does not the charge against Cleveland, as you yourself state and admit it, disqualify him in your estimation for the Presidency of the United States?" We answer frankly: "Yes, if his opponent be as good a man in other ways." We should like to see candidates for the Presidency models for all the virtues, pure as the snow and stealth as the eternal hills. But when the alternative is a man of whom the Buffalo Express, a political opponent, said immediately after his nomination, "that the people of Buffalo had known him as one of their worthiest citizens, one of their manliest men and faithful to his clients, faithful to his friends and faithful to every public trust," and of whom The Buffalo Commercial, another political opponent, said that in opposing him "it would not detract one jot or tittle from the well-earned fame of the distinguished gentlemen who honored the opposition by bearing its standard, a good son and good brother, and unmarried that he might be the better son and brother, against whom nothing can be said except that he has not been proof against one of the most powerful temptations by which human nature is assailed," or a man convicted out of his own mouth of having publicly lied in order to hide his jobbery in office, or having offered his judicial decisions as a sign of his possible usefulness to railroad speculators in case they paid him his price, of trading in charters which had been benefitted by legislation in which he took part, and of having broken his word of honor in order to destroy documentary evidence of his corruption—a man who has accumulated a fortune in a few years on the salary of a Congressman—then we say emphatically no, a thousand times no.

We should be ashamed of ourselves if we had any other answer to make, and are shocked and amazed to hear that there are clergymen all over the country advising people who care for morality to choose the trickster and jobber, because he is chaste, before the honest man, faithful to every public trust, because he has been weak before a passion of which everybody knows the force. The standard by which some ministers now propose to exclude Cleveland from high place would have prevented Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, Hamilton, not to go any further, from taking any prominent part in the foundation of the American Republic. It would have excluded from office in England nearly every great statesman and reformer of the last hundred years. It would have visited nearly every prominent politician in the Republican party since 1860 with popular odium. It would, had the Democrats chosen to apply it, have defeated one Republican candidate for the Presidency by charges worse by far than Cleveland's, in that they added the sin of broken vows to the sin of incontinence.

We are not defending Incontinence. Chastity is a great virtue, but every man knows in his heart that it is not the greatest of virtues; that offences against it have often been consistent with the possession of all the qualities which ennoble human life and make human progress possible. We will not, for our part, help the Republican party at this crisis in an attempt to capture the Presidency for a trickster as Joshua captured Jericho, by the aid of a harlot.

It Will be Done.

The CHILTON VIEW approves our position on the convict policy of the state, but thinks that the legislature will do nothing. The VIEW should feel encouraged rather than despondent over the outlook. A public opinion is being formed that will so imperatively demand a change that the legislature will be compelled to listen. If the change be not made this session it will be next. The system is not in accord with the view that the people of the state should take of their future. It stands as a stumbling block in the path of our progress and we promise that it shall be removed whatever power or influence may sustain it. Alabama must be for white people, and it cannot be for white people until this system is reformed. We have given the reason for the change and shall place them before the people and the legislature again and again as early as we can, until we are heard for our much speaking if not for our cause.

We cannot believe that the legislature just elected will refuse so important an opportunity to do so great a work. The members from this county will be prepared to urge the measure and we believe we can trust them to accomplish it.

We have put our hand to this work and have no idea of seeing it fail.—Birmingham Chronicle.

Verbena Views.

Mr. and Mrs. Cobb, of Edgefield, S. C., are here visiting the parents of Mrs. Cobb, Capt. and Mrs. Clisby.

Mrs. Holt, of Prattville, is visiting her daughters, Mrs. Davis and Mrs. Haralson.

Miss Fannie Wainwright, of Prattville, is visiting her aunt Mrs. Davis.

Miss Nellie Jackson, of Montgomery, on her way to Shelby Springs, stopped over and spent Friday and Friday night with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Jackson.

Mr. R. S. Watt, the popular and renowned proprietor of the Windsor Hotel, Montgomery, spent Saturday night and Sunday in our village, the guest of Maj. J. C. Gibson.

Capt. Robt. Lanier and wife, of Macon, Ga., are visiting their daughter, Mrs. J. C. Gibson.

A protracted meeting was commenced at the Baptist church last Monday night. It will be continued through this week and perhaps longer.

The young ladies gave a leap year party at the Clifton House last Monday night. Some of "us boys" learned the true meaning of the word "wall flower."

C. L. R., from the time he entered the ball room until he departed, was the center of attraction, and was decidedly the "belle of the ball." Everything was managed exclusively by the young ladies, and they made a grand success. MAX.

The delegates from Chilton to the Congressional Convention which meets at Verbena, September 3d, are: Oliver Mullins, John Boyd, D. A. White, H. J. Callen, A. J. Brooks, W. I. Mullins, D. J. Waterworth and T. E. Callier.

The Southern Exposition At Louisville, Ky.

The enterprise, energy, and liberality of the city of Louisville have been wonderfully exhibited in the Southern Exposition. This is the largest enterprise ever organized and maintained in this country by individual efforts.

This year its attractions are amazing. It has Cappa's and Gilmore's Bands from New York, thus assuring the most beautiful music in the world.

The Art Gallery will comprise the choicest selections of American pictures ever gathered together in America.

The buildings cover 15 acres.

The Live Stock exhibition will eclipse anything the world ever saw. London's Royal Stock Show led anything of the kind previously made, but Louisville's Southern Exposition will hereafter head the list of Stock Exhibits.

One million dollars worth of horses will stand in a line, no less than an eighth of a mile in length. It is a sight worth many miles of travel to see.

The fireworks will be in charge of James Paine, of London, with whom, at great expense, an arrangement has been made to produce in Louisville, pyrotechnic displays daily equal to those given at the royal exhibitions in Europe, and at Coney Island where hundreds of thousands witnessed them nightly. The grandure of Paine's exhibitions can not be described. They must be seen to be appreciated. Each evening's exhibition is closed with some splendid scene, like the Bombardment of Alexandria, Battle of Yorktown, Pyramids of Egypt, etc.

There is to be a great Competitive Military Drill, and other features of no less merit.

The Exposition will open August 16, close October 25, and railroad tickets from all points to Louisville and return may be had for one fare.

Of the members of the last house of representatives the following will be in the next house: Messrs. Shorter, Hawkins and Lang, of Barbour; Powell, of Bullock; Grant, of Clarke; Burnett, of Conecuh; Dowling, of Dale; John, of Dallas; McAdory, of Jefferson; Nesmith, of Lamar; Walker, of Marengo; Hogue, of Perry; Willett, of Pickens, and Brown, of Tuscaloosa; fourteen in all. All of them posess ability of a high order, and are safe and conservative legislators. Messrs. Brown, John, Powell and Shorter are candidates for the speakership.—Tuskegee News.

THE Bookwalter Engine IS THE BEST MADE

It is the best engine for cotton gins, wood-working, planing, grist mills, planing and cider mills, threshing machines.

Burch, Logan Co., W. Va., 1882.

The 4½ horse power Bookwalter Engine bought March 31, 1882, is complete. We are well pleased with it. It drives a 24-inch grist mill, and grinds eighty bushels a day. It is easily run; any one can run one of them. It gives entire satisfactions; it is the thing for farmers to have. A. D. FERREL & CO.

I have the exclusive right to sell this engine in Chilton, Shelby and Coosa counties, and will sell to farmers and others on easy terms. I mean business. Will put the engine up and guarantee satisfactory work.

THE RING.

A band of burnished gold,
My fingers gently hold,
And through the magic circle of its rim
Before my dreaming eyes,
A thousand memories rise,
And fill my soul with longing, vague and dim.

I seem to see the gate,
At which I used to wait
For her who gave to me this token sweet.
I feel a tender thrill,
That calls to mind the hill
Where hours, like moments, fled on pinions fleet.

The form of youthful grace,
The smiling, tender face,
Is near me still, in spirit, though the years
Have slowly come and fled,
And cherished hopes lie dead,
Along my way too thickly strewn for tears.

Oh, little band of gold!
A wealth of joy untold
Your shining circle conjures to my mind,
And will—until my breath
Shall meet the kiss of death,
And all the pain of earth be left behind.

JAMES C. HARVEY.

MARRYING AN HEIRESS.

The twilight, stealing softly through the heavy silk window draperies of the library at Abbott Court, became transformed into a sort of crimson duskiness—the clear, low-burning fire glimmered, like coral, all aglow—and the two ruddy sparks that betokened the whereabouts of the two gentlemen and their cigars, shone steadily from the cushions and chairs on either side of the hearth. Dinner was just over—the clock in the hall had chimed seven—and Mr. Abbott and his distant cousin, and adopted son were alone together.

"My dear Gerald, you must be crazy," said the elder gentleman, in a tone of great, though repressed irritation.

"My dear Mr. Abbott, I never was more sane in my life."

"But just look at the advantages of the thing! I tell you she is young and pretty, with an independent fortune in her own right——"

"May I never sink so low as to become a fortune-hunter!" ejaculated Gerald, fervently.

"Pshaw—nousense! and Berkeley and I have both set our hearts upon it!"

"Mr. Abbott, I would rather walk up to a cannon's mouth than have a wife thrust at me in that sort of way—it is repellent to every manly feeling of my nature."

"I only ask you to see her, Gerald—she is coming to New York in a week, and——"

"And I shall take particular pains to leave town in a week!"

The elder gentleman fired up instantaneously.

"Gerald, I forbid you taking any such foolish step, at the peril of being turned out of my house!"

Gerald colored high. "Mr. Abbott, you have been very kind to me for years, I feel that I owe you almost a son's duty and allegiance—but in this matter I cannot be dictated to."

"Take your choice, sir," ejaculated Mr. Abbott, who had now wrought himself into a towering passion; "either leave my house and protection, or comply with my wishes about this young lady; and I give you until to-morrow morning to think it over."

Gerald was silent; he could not trust himself to speak—and it was a relief to him when Mr. Abbott rose, and left the room.

The next morning, when the coffee and newspaper were brought in, no Gerald made his appearance, only a note instead, thanking his benefactor for the uninterrupted kindness of years, and announcing his intention, for the future, to depend on his own exertions for a livelihood, rather than to contract a marriage, so opposed to all his wishes and predilections!

Mr. Abbott read the note through, with a contemptuous "hump!" then tore it in little pieces.

"The young scamp!" he muttered; "he'll be back fast enough, I warrant me. Earning one's own living isn't such an easy affair to a man who has been brought up as he has, and so he'll find it. I never knew such obstinacy in my life—the ungrateful, reckless young vagabond!"

Nevertheless, the old house seemed very sad and lonely without the light footsteps and cheerful voice of the adopted son.

"I didn't know I was so fond of him, the more fool I!" grumbled Mr. Abbott. "But he may go his own gait for all me."

Meanwhile, Gerald, full of spirit and ambition, was sitting in a dismal hotel parlor, where the chimney smoked, and the paper was peeling off the wall in mildewed spots, taking down various memoranda from the advertising columns of the newspaper.

"Among all those 'wants' I should think I might manage to satisfy one or two at least," he exclaimed gayly to himself as he rose, buttoned his overcoat and drew on his gloves. "At all events, I am ready and willing to work."

"Jones & Cobb," the first placard looked dubiously over the four spectacle glasses at the young applicant; "they could not think of employing a young man who could not bring solid references from his last place."

"Solomon & Co.," the next on the list, "wanted no raw hides," and politely motioned Gerald to the door.

"Parker & Swift," a gilt enterprise establishment, required a deposit of one hundred dollars—an item Gerald did not happen to possess.

"Markham & Markham's," light and easy place, turned out to be that of a heavy porter; and the "Splendid opportunity to realize a fortune," in which Gerald had unconsciously built many hopes, was to peddle from door to door a newly-invented variety of blacking.

Footsore and weary, the young man returned to his hotel, late at night, with thoughts and ideas by no means so sanguine as when he had sallied forth, and serious cogitations on the subject of taking cheap lodgings.

It was not so easy to obtain a money-making situation in New York as he had supposed.

So passed away a week—ten days—a fortnight, and he was as far as ever from obtaining a place where he could earn his daily bread, while his slender stock of funds was fast decreasing, and his spirits beginning to sink in proportion.

Vague thoughts of enlisting or working his passage across seas in some great American vessel—of seeking employment in the country as a farm-hand—were passing through his mind, when one morning his eye caught the following advertisement:

"Wanted—A private tutor to instruct three boys in French, German and Latin, three hours a day. Apply at —— street."

It was a straw, but Gerald clung to it, and half an hour afterward he was sitting in a snug library in a handsome brown-stone house, nervously awaiting an interview, having sent up his name as "Mr. Selwyn."

"For I feel that I ought no longer to bear the name of Abbott, even though it is justly mine," he thought.

Presently a plump matron in blue silk and flowing cap-ribbons, sailed into the room—Mrs. Audley, the mother of the three boys in question, rosy varlets of nine, ten and eleven, who followed her with eyes eager of curiosity.

Tommy, Raymond and Harold were duly introduced, and their mother at once explained the difficulty of obtaining sufficient attention at the school they had been attending, and her many perplexities as to the best mode of teaching their young ideas how to shoot.

"They are such sad rebels that the governess can do nothing with them, and, really, Mr. Selwyn, I sometimes think they will grow up as ignorant as three young savages! Adele advised me to advertise for a tutor, an excellent idea, I'm sure—and—and as for terms—"

She hesitated and looked piteously at the tutor, unaware that Master Raymond was surreptitiously drawing all the hairpins out of her chignon.

"Having never taught before, I am unable to name any precise sum," said Gerald, almost as much embarrassed as was she, herself.

"Dear me, how awkward—but Adele thought—my sister fancied that if you would come three times a week, perhaps five dollars a lesson would be about right!"

"I shall be quite satisfied with that arrangement," replied Gerald, to whom it seemed as if a mine of gold were suddenly opening.

Fifteen dollars a week! He thought of the solitary dollar in his purse, and rejoiced in spirit!

The lessons commenced the very next day—but at about the third one, Mrs. Audley's blue ribbons and plump face once more made their appearance.

"Now I'm going to be politely dismissed," thought our hero, with a cold chill at his heart! But no such ill-fortune awaited him.

"To tell you the truth, Mr. Selwyn," said the rosy matron, "my sister, Adele, is anxious to perfect herself in German, and I told her I was sure you wouldn't object to her joining the class—"

"Hurrah! won't it be jolly for Aunt Adele to study with us!" bawled Harold.

"Harold, be still!" said his mother, despairingly. "Tom, if that chair should slip, you would fall headlong into the fire!"

"I shall be happy to have the lady join our class," said Mr. Selwyn, picturing to himself a spectacled old maid devoted to inky fingers and "belles-lettres."

"Thank you; and would two dollars a lesson—"

"It would be quite satisfactory, madam," said Gerald, bowing.

"Very well—I'll call Adele."

And Adele came—no spectacled maiden lady, but a beautiful little damsel of eighteen, with golden brown curls, eyes of the most limpid hazel and lips like twin cherries.

"Dear me, are you the tutor?" said Miss Warren, frankly. "Why, I thought you were a fussy old fellow of fifty!"

Gerald laughed, he could not help it; and thus melted away all the formality of their first meeting!

Adele was the most charming pupil in the world—ready to learn, quick to comprehend; and invaluable in repressing the noisy spirits of the three boys, who one and all thralled "Aunt Adele," and would even commit the sacrifice of keeping still for five consecutive minutes to oblige her!

So the lessons went on, for two or three weeks, and one night, Gerald Selwyn, walking home by the dusky glimmer of the winter twilight, checked himself suddenly in the middle of the street.

"It's dangerous," he muttered between his set teeth. "By Jove, it's as dangerous as playing with a powder magazine! I'm in love with her now—desperately, madly in love—I, the poor tutor. Well, good-by to the lessons. I had better starve than forget my manly honor and honesty."

So, the next day, when lessons were over and done, Tom, Harold and Raymond had considerately taken themselves off to base-ball; Gerald spoke to Miss Warren.

"Miss Adele," he said, faltering a little, in spite of himself, "I am afraid this must be our last lesson."

"Our last lesson!" She turned as white as the mantle-piece. "Why? Have we said or done anything to offend you?"

"By no means; our intercourse has been pleasant beyond my fondest hopes; in fact, too pleasant!"

Adele's cheek crimsoned again—she looked earnestly at the young man.

"You mean—"

"I mean," he broke forth, passionately, "that I have been mad fool enough not to see you without losing my heart! I mean that I love you—that I cannot longer remain here, without expressing my love—that you are a favorite of fortune, and I only a poor, half-starved tutor! Good-by, Adele—let me call you Adele just once!"

"I am a favorite of fortune, indeed," she said, gently, "if I have been able to win the affection of so true and noble a heart. Gerald—I love you, too—stay!"

And she hid her blushing face upon his shoulder.

Half an hour afterward, she insisted upon leading him into the parlor, to confide in Mrs. Audley.

"For I want Susie to know all about it," she said, with a pretty, coaxing smile, which it was impossible to resist; "Susie always liked you so much."

Mrs. Audley was in the parlor, but Mrs. Audley was not alone, two elderly gentlemen were sitting with her.

"This is my Uncle Berkeley, Mr. Selwyn," Adele said, introducing Gerald to the older, "and this is Mr. Abbott."

"Gerald!" cried his adopted father, seizing both his hands with a grip that made them ache.

"Sir!" echoed the astonished young man.

"How is this?" exclaimed Mr. Abbott looking from Adele to Gerald, and back again. "Surely you have never——"

"But I have, sir," said Gerald, resolutely. "I love this young lady, and I would marry her if forty heiresses stood in the way."

"It's the very one!—it's Berkeley's niece, and my little pet, Adele Warren!" roared Mr. Abbott, in an ecstasy of delight. "To say that you should have gone and picked her out, and fallen in love with her yourself, after all your protestations! Adele, this young villain whose arm you're leaning on is my adopted son, Gerald Abbott! Berkeley, Fate has declared in our favor most signally."

Yes, it was true. Gerald had walked into the very complication he had schemed so desperately to avoid, and Adele's blue eyes had been the lode-stars to attract him thither. But she had been as unconscious as himself, that she was stealing away the heart of Gerald Abbott instead of Mr. Selwyn the obscure tutor.

Great was the rejoicing of Mr. Abbott when his adopted son, once more received into the highest favor, was married to the very heiress he had selected for him!

"Never mind her money, old fellow," said he, gently, "you will have all mine, one day, and that will make you even!"

Money! as if Gerald could think of money when he looked into Adele's blue eyes!

COL. MALCOMEWKI, who died lately at his home in Prussian Poland, was 100. While serving in the Prussian army he was taken prisoner, and forthwith entered the French army and took part in many of Napoleon's campaigns. After Waterloo he went home, but in the rising of 1830 entered the Polish army and, being taken prisoner, passed forty-seven years in Siberia. He was only released in 1879.

Wine vs. Dress.

A Spanish writer goes into a calculation of the cost of visiting a Paris dressmaker's establishment. His wife must have a modest ball dress, not over garnished with hand-woven felicities, either; but this gown will cost $400. Now the husband is the owner of a vineyard. Wine sells in the crude at fifty cents the six gallons, and 4,800 gallons will be necessary to purchase the garment. Each acre will produce in moderate seasons 600 gallons a year; therefore eight acres of grapes will be required. But then consider the digging, hoeing, pruning of the vine stock, the sulphurizing of the grapes, the salary of the superintendent, the cost of grape picking, the endless pruning, and the nurturing of the vine sprouts. All this will cost perhaps $800, so that the liquid product of the eight acres will not, after all, be more than $100. It is indispensible, consequently, that one should be the proprietor of thirty-two acres of excellent vines if one would give to his wife that dress.

TALKS WITH THE BOYS.

SOME GOOD ADVICE TO THE RISING GENERATION.

A Lesson in Life—What You Do, Do It Well and Receive Your Reward.

If you have arrived at the age of 15 or 16 it is time you looked matters square in the face and had some idea of your future. If you were to answer at once you would say that you would take a profession in preference to a trade. A profession means several years of hard study, quite a large cash outlay and then trials and rebuffs to get a start in business. It is one thing to graduate as a lawyer or a doctor, and quite another to pick up clients and patients. If you have fully decided on a profession be careful of your first move. If you have a large head your grandmother has doubtless many times exclaimed: "What a great lawyer this boy would make." Don't try to make one on the size of your head. We've got any number of that class in the country now, and they can't pay their grocers' bills. If you can pull a sliver out of your finger without winking it may be a sign that you would make a good surgeon. It may also be a sign that you are born to be a butcher. How will you know what to pursue? Your own feelings are the safest guide. If left to your parents and to circumstances you may be forced into a trade or profession which you can never make a success. When you come to realize that you must make your own way in life your particular forte will be apt to reveal itself. One of the best lawyers in Detroit was intended for the ministry; another served three years as a journalist, but all the time feeling that he was out of his element; another was forced by his father to learn the trade of harness maker. I know a machinist who at first studied medicine; of a watchmaker who tried to become a lawyer; of a carpenter who threw away three years of his life trying to become a dentist.

After you have selected your profession or trade, what then? Strive to master it in all its details and to excel. If you become a carpenter, don't be satisfied when you can saw and plane and match. Don't be satisfied with $2 per day. Make yourself worth $3. Master details, and push yourself from carpenter to builder. Don't imagine that a man in search of a lawyer walks down the street and drops in at the first sign hanging out. It is the lawyer who has climbed above his fellows that he seeks out. If our friends are ill we want the best doctor. We want the man who has made himself the best by study and energy. The blacksmith who is content to mend old wagons will never iron a new one. The machinist who stands at the lathe to do about so much work in ten hours need not hope to be better off. It is the men who put their heart into what they do who succeed.

I can name you twenty instances in Detroit where skilled workmen have been taken as partners in large factories. The clerk who is capable, honest and persevering is bound to win a higher position. The joiner who does his work to last for years instead of months is never out of work. There are house painters who are satisfied to stand on a ladder or scaffold at $2.50 per day. There are other house painters whose energy and enthusiasm have made them sign-writers and decorators, and raised their wages to $40 per week. It is not so much what you do, but how you do it, that brings prosperity.

M. QUAD.

Down on Enterprise.

A Detroiter who moved to Southern Indiana and went into business a few months ago will return next week. He settled in a town where they did not appreciate his enterprise. He invented a self-rising pancake, and they fined him $50 for advertising it on the side of the meeting house. He dropped the price of codfish to three cents, and boarders at that, and three butchers in the town waylaid and pounded him. He refused to make his grocery the headquarters of old baldheads who wanted to talk horse and jaw about hard times, and someone bored holes in his kerosene barrels and started the story that he poisoned his first wife. A month ago he brought out a new baking powder, advertised it on the fence around the graveyard, and hired a boy to follow a funeral procession and distribute bills. That night they tried to blow him up with dynamite, and a shingle on which was written "You are too previous for this locality," was nailed on his house. The grocer will come back to Detroit. Here he can make the fur fly and the hair stand on end and the blood of the public grow cold with his flyblocks in Bibles, and there is no one to make him afraid.—Detroit Free Press.

A young man who was addicted to the opium habit in a California city, stole a coat from a room in his boarding house, so that he would be sent to jail for a few weeks, where he could not obtain the drug. But to his dismay he found that his crime was a burglary instead of petit larceny, and he was sentenced to the State prison for a term of years. Efforts are now being made to secure his pardon.

How to Cool a Room.

The following method of cooling a room could be used to advantage at small expense: The composing room of the New Orleans Picayune is situated in the upper story of its publication house, just under the roof, and in summer is extremely hot. An inspiration seemed to have come to one of the oppressed occupants, and in accordance with it a vertical wooden box was constructed in the corner of the room, with openings at the floor and ceiling, and furnished with a pipe for supplying water at the top, and a pan and drain at the bottom for receiving the flow and carrying it safely away. The supply pipe was bent over the upper end of the shaft, and fitted with a rose like that of a watering-pot, so as to deliver a shower of spray instead of a solid stream. On connecting it with the service pipe the movement of the water was found to cause an active circulation of the air in that part of the room, which was drawn in at the upper opening of the shaft and issued again, cool and fresh, at the floor level. The most surprising thing about the experiment seems to have been the effect of the water in cooling the air to a degree much below its own temperature. With Mississippi water, which when drawn from the service pipe indicated a temperature of eighty-four degrees, the air of the room in which the thermometer at the beginning of the trial stood at ninety-six, was cooled in passing through the length of the shaft to seventy-four degrees, or about twenty degrees below the temperature at which it entered, and ten degrees below that of the water which was used to cool it. Of course the absorption of heat by the evaporation of a portion of the water accounts for its refrigerating effect, but the result seems to have been so easily and inexpensively attained that the experiment would be well worth repeating in other cases.

Perils of The Ice Cream Habit.

The compound known as ice cream consists, according to the fancy of the manufacturer and the market price of the several possible ingredients, of milk mixed with corn starch, farina, calves' brains, eggs, glue, etc., etc., and is cleanly or the reverse as the circumstances may determine. Its wholesomeness is questioned in any case, but the actual risk involved in its consumption is not dependent upon the ingredients used—for they are at worst only unwholesome—but upon other conditions. The freezers are commonly of metal, either iron or copper, tin lined; and there is always danger where such freezers are used that poisonous metallic salts may be present in the frozen mass, however innocent the maker may be of intent to do harm, or even of carelessness. The danger increases with the length of time during which the ice cream remains in the freezer, and where the time is at all considerable it becomes very serious. The cases of severe poisoning which occurred in Brooklyn may well direct attention to the constantly present danger, and it would not be amiss if our Boards of Health would take measures to prevent the keeping of ice cream in freezers. It is now the practice of dealers to buy their supplies in the metallic freezers, and to serve their customers thence until the cans are emptied. The last dishes served in such cases may very easily contain fatal doses of poisonous metallic salts.—Commercial Advertiser.

The "Sun" Cholera Mixture.

Now that it has been ascertained that the cholera has appeared in Europe prescriptions are in great demand by correspondents, who write to the editor as if he were a personal friend and the family physician. For more than forty years what is known as "The Sun cholera medicine" has stood the test of experience as the best remedy for looseness of the bowels ever yet devised. As was once vouched for by the New York Journal of Commerce, "no one who has this by him and takes it in time will ever have the cholera." Even when no cholera is anticipated it is an excellent thing for the ordinary summer complaints, colic, diarrhœa, dysentery, etc., and we have no hesitation in commending it. Here it is: Take equal parts of the tincture of cayenne, tincture of opium, tincture of rhubarb, essence of peppermint and spirits of camphor. Mix well. Dose, fifteen to thirty drops in a wineglass of water, according to age and violence of the attack. Repeat every fifteen or twenty minutes until relief is obtained.

A SMART DOG.

"Speaking of animal sagacity," so marked Jones, "I have a dog that takes the cake."

"In what way?" asked Smith, languidly.

"Well, you see," was the reply, "I can't bear organ-grinders and got in the habit of setting the dog on them."

"A good idea."

"Yes, but it seems that the dog got a notion it the was not organ-grinder, but the monkey I objected to."

"Not at all strange."

"Well, the other day a regular young Jacob called to see my daughter, and would you believe it that dog actually knew the difference and never touched him."

BUYING THE BABY CLOTHES.

Pathetic Episode in Every Young Mother's Life.

For real poetry and pathos, watch that young wife and her mother at the baby linen counter. The wife of 6 year, probably; the girlish face looks a little sad, and motherhood is faintly shadowed there. She is purchasing garments for one who is as dear to her as her life. As each tiny article of the numerous trousseau is shown to her a flood of feeling wells up and leaves a rosy stain upon her cheeks. That snowy mass of muslin and lace, which is called a robe, has a terrible fascination for her. Enveloped in that robe she sees a tiny form, the little nestling head, the wee restless hands; she almost feels the clinging fingers.

"Isn't it beautiful?" she sighs, and turns to her mother, who looks on not unsympathisingly, but with an eye to the practical and a present appreciation of the exact amount her son-in-law can afford to spend.

"I must have this lovely robe, mamma."

"We will see, dear," says mamma. "I'm afraid it is too expensive."

"Oh, dear, yes; $18. We will look at some others."

But the daughter is not satisfied. They begin to count up the cost of all that they need. The items grow space. The amount is still too much. It is no use; they cannot spare $18 for one dress. Again she goes over the whole catalogue. She leaves out some things altogether, and says:

"I can make all the plain things you know, mamma."

Then they count up again. No, it is no use; it cannot be done, and the disappointed one has to leave the counter without the wished-for robe.

If her husband could only see her, but he cannot. Besides, he has given her all the money he thinks she needs, in fact, he believes she cannot possibly spend all he gave her on such little bits of things. When his wife shows him her purchases she will doubtless do it almost tremblingly. She knows he expects to see a great deal more for the money. He will certainly think she has been extravagant. She cannot ask him for more money. It would not be just. He works so hard for all he has. And so the matter rests. Not a word about the costly robe. Did he but know what passed at that counter, the chances are that he would find some way of gratifying the tender, loving ambition which thinks nothing too good for the little somebody she has not yet seen.—Albany Express.

A Collision of Icebergs.

Lieut. Ray says that notwithstanding all he suffered in the polar regions he would not hesitate to go again. In an interview with a Pittsburg Dispatch reporter he attempts to give some idea of what a northern sea of ice looks like:

"In the summer time you can occasionally hear the piping of seagulls, the chatter of ducks, and the growl of walrus, but you only meet these occasionally. If you can describe a vast sea of ice and snow, which is as irregular as anything you can imagine, you know what an appearance that country has. The nearest comparison I can make to the appearance of one of those icebergs is looking down on a city from the top of a mountain. The high and low houses, with an occasional church steeple, resemble very much one of those floating icebergs. The wind has no effect on them whatever. It is not an uncommon thing to see the 'floe' or soft ice going in one direction, driven by the wind, and the iceberg moving in an opposite direction, being carried along by the current. There is always seven times the bulk of ice under water that is seen above, and one acquainted with the Polar region can always tell by the color, rigidity and appearance of an iceberg whether it comes from the North Sea or not. You will sometimes see a boulder three or four times as high out of the water as this hotel, and probably ten times as large, carried along by the current, and when two of them come together the force is sufficient to crush the less rigid one. You can judge what a steamer would be like when caught between two such icebergs. No boat can ever be built that could withstand the pressure. Although they seem to move slowly they have a terrific force and are often crushed by their own weight.

The Newspaper Field.

Some one interested in statistical work makes the following statement:

"New daily newspapers were established in the United States last year at the rate of one newspaper every three days. The increase of 348 daily newspapers carried the total for the United States and Territories up to 1,178. During the same period the number of periodicals of all sorts—daily, semi-weekly, weekly, monthly and quarterly—grew from 11,136 to 12,661. About five-sevenths of all the periodicals published in the country are weekly papers. The number of monthlies exceed the number of dailies by nearly 300. The number of periodicals of all sorts published in New York city is not less than 656; Chicago is next, with 240; Philadelphia third, with 230, and Boston fourth, with [illegible]

QUAKER CITY WIT.

A BATCH OF STRAY JOKES FROM THE "EVENING CALL."

HARD TO SUIT.

Little Jack—"Tell me a story, auntie."

Old Maid Aunt—"What kind of a story?"

"Oh, just a story without any moral to it, and without any instruction either. I don't like the kind my governess tells."

"Well, let me see. Oh, yes, when I was a girl—"

"Oh, I don't like that kind."

"What kind?"

"Stories about ancient history."

TWO CHAMPIONS.

Friend—"Ah! glad to see you, Blank. How did your great boat race with Swift, the champion sculler, come off?"

Blank (champion caraman)—"I won."

"Glad of it; glad of it. I was afraid he would beat you. What time did you make?"

"An hour and a half."

"Great Leonidas! An hour and a half. Why it's a ten-minute course, and I have seen you do it in eight."

"Well, you see that villain Swift sold out the race and was bound I should beat him and he rowed as slow as he could."

"But why should that effect your time? Why didn't you spin over the course in eight minutes?"

"Well, you see I had sold out too, and wanted him to beat me."

A HARD-WORKING MYTH.

A beautiful Promise stood in the hotel entresol mopping his brow.

"You seem exhausted," said a Settee.

"Exhausted! I guess you don't know me. Not much! I'm just getting warmed up to my work. I'm willing to bet I can do more hard work between now and election day than anybody."

"Do you never rest?"

"Oh, yes; right after election I'll go to sleep, and you won't see me again for four years."

WORTHY OF ITS NAME.

Irate Customer—"See here, sir, I bought one of those lightning ice-cream freezers of you last week."

Dealer—"Well, it proved worthy of its name, didn't it?"

Irate Customer—"Worthy of its name! Why it turned the cream sour."

Dealer—"Yes, that's what lightning does."

TERRORS OF GOTHAM LAW.

Warden—"Ah, ha! Got nabbed at last, did you? Guess a week in the dark cell will do you good. What did you do? Steal a coat?"

Newly Arrived Prisoner—"Coat! coat! I have not had any coat but my own in my possession."

Warden—"Robbed a till, perhaps?"

Prisoner—"Certainly not, sir. I ran away with $5,000,000, but did not run far enough, that is all."

Warden—"Ah, beg pardon. Would you like your apartments single or en suite? Here, Mike, take the gentleman's hat and put the champagne on ice."

A PERFECT BRICK.

Jones—"I don't see how you can call that idle, dissolute fellow a 'brick.'"

Smith—"And why not a brick?"

"A brick is of very great use in the world. As a part of a wall or chimney each one is valuable, but that fellow is absolutely worthless."

"But I was not referring to a brick in a wall or chimney, when I used the term."

"To what, then?"

"I meant a loose brick."

A HEAD HEAD HINT.

Maud—"Why do they put wax on champagne corks, Mr. Shyman?"

Mr. Shyman—"To keep it."

"To keep it?"

"Yes; unless perfectly air-tight the stuff becomes spoiled, and won't pop."

"Oh! was it your mother's failure to wax you when you were young that spoiled you?"

"Spoiled me?"

"Yes; you won't pop, either."

ARRIVED IN RUSSIA.

Princess Beatrice—"Ma, there's a man at the door says he wants to buy Windsor Castle."

Queen Vic.—"Mercy on us! Call the police. He must be a lunatic. There is not a man in England rich enough to buy Windsor Castle."

Princess Beatrice—"But he is an American."

Queen Vic.—"What is his business?"

Princess Beatrice—"He is a plumber."

Queen Vic.—"Ask him in."

HER TROUBLED PAPA.

"Do you know, Miss Smithers," remarked young Featherly, "that there is something very peculiar about your father?"

"Something very peculiar about my papa?" repeated the Smithers girl, followed Featherly [illegible] "Yes," the young man went on, "very peculiar."

"And what is it, pray?"

"It has on the [illegible] and a grandfather, [illegible] daughter."—Drake's [illegible]

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., AUG. 21, 1884.

Cleveland's letter of acceptance is an admirable exposition of a government by the people, and it stamps him as our next President.

Hon. C. C. Shorter has withdrawn from the contest for the speakership of the lower house of the Alabama legislature. Mr. Shorter gave as his main reason for retiring that Representatives Powell, of Bullock, and Armstrong, of Lee, both in his district, and both much older than himself, are candidates for the position.

Gen. Roger A. Pryor denies that he is booming Butler, and says: "In a personal sense I am Gen. Butler's friend. If he were the nominee of the Democratic party I would support him with enthusiasm, but Cleveland is the Democratic candidate, and for him I must vote. I shall not bolt my party. I consider allegiance to it paramount to personal considerations."

Since the election everything has settled down quietly. The opposition have submitted gracefully to the inevitable, and the victors are disposed to treat their late opponent with the generosity a conqueror does a fallen foe. This is right; the battle is over the victory is won, and let there be peace in the camp. We can afford to be magnanimous, and if any are disposed to come aboard the 'old ship of zion' why stick out your hand and pull them in, and all will be well.—Ex.

A nice contrast is drawn between Cleveland and Blaine in their conduct under similar circumstances. Blaine, when about to be exposed in his public villainy by Mulligan, lied the latter out of the possession of letters proving the crime, and then defied his accuser and denied guilt. When the scandal about Cleveland's private moral character was published by the Buffalo traducers, the Governor's friends telegraphed for instructions as how to meet the embarrassing situation. Cleveland, conscious of the color of basis for the libel, with characteristic firmness and fearlessness replied simply, "Tell the truth." The truth has been told, and it will not hurt him. Blaine has persistently tried to lie out of his public crime; Cleveland acknowledged to the truth and orders the facts freely circulated. This difference must strike voters very forcibly.

It seems that the next Legislature will contain a liberal sprinkle of independent members. While most of these have been in the past as good Democrats as the nominees they have beaten, it is probable that they are not likely to be allowed voice in the party caucuses, and hence might as well be voiceless entirely. In the past the party has been very lenient with independent democratic representatives, but if we mistake not, there is a tendency developing to end this laxness. The independent movement is a dangerous one, notwithstanding the good motives prompting many of its leaders and its candidates. Its success in strong Democratic counties is going to work towards its too ready adoption in weaker counties. Defeated candidates and their disappointed partisans are likely to break away on unwarranted provocation. This feature of the recent election is particularly alarming to the Black Belt. Our party here cannot suffer any sort of disorganization. Complete unity and enthusiasm is absolutely indispensable to secure success. Therefore independentism in any form is intolerable in the counties of this section. With this view, it appears likely that Black Belt leaders will insist upon the ruling-out of the Democratic caucus every representative who defeated a nominee. It may seem a severe rule, but can its justice be questioned? Most of the independent nominees will be found to have succeeded by the support of Republican votes, and how, therefore, can they be called true representatives of Democratic constituencies? The question bids fair to attract considerable discussion and interest in the coming Assembly.—Selma Times.

The above explains how it is that one Democrat will be able to do more in the next Legislature than half a dozen Independents. Legislation is shaped and discussed in the Democratic caucus. This is the custom of parties, and the party that is in the majority will of course control and shape the legislation. The Independents being shut out of the caucus can have no voice in the discussion of measures, and will be able to do nothing for themselves or their constituencies unless the Democratic majority may condescend to listen to them and approve their work.

The Official Vote of the State.

The official vote for State Superintendent of Education as counted on last Saturday by the Governor, Secretary of State and Attorney-General amounted in the aggregate to 133,569. No returns were made from Cullman, Dekalb, Madison, Tallapoosa and Winston. The vote in these counties will increase the total vote of the State to about 145,000. The vote for the other officers is not counted until the meeting of the General Assembly in November, when it is counted by the Speaker in the presence of the two houses.

Louisville Exposition.

One of the new features of the Southern Exposition, at Louisville, Ky., will be a grand competitive military drill to take place August 26th, 27th and 28th. A level space, around which is a circle of seats capable of seating 15,000 persons, has been especially prepared for the drills. It is known that half a dozen of the crack companies of America will participate, and localities, merit, and friendly rivalry will lend unusual interest to the occasion. The first prize is $3,000, second $1,000, third $500, certainly sums worth contending for. The entire state guard of Kentucky will go into encampment in honor of these great drills, and it is estimated fully 100,000 persons will witness them.

Another new feature is the introduction of European fire works furnished expressly for the Southern Exposition by James Paine, of London, the recognized peer of all other manufacturers of fine fire works. The concluding device of the fire works display on the night of August 21st will be Arc' de Triomphe and Bois' de Boulogne (one hundred and fifty feet in length) as exhibited during fetes of the Emperor, and is said to be the most successful device ever displayed in Europe.

The famous device of the sacred white elephant will be produced on the same night on a grand scale. The huge beast will walk with natural and life like movements across the grounds.

Among the many other devices selected for the same night are the Falls of Niagara (thirty feet long) and the fiery dragons, which move along the ground. After the grand final device will be a flight of two hundred and fifty of the largest size rockets made. Each of the ten displays to be given by Paine will terminate with a final device equal to the Arc' de Triomphe, and among the devices already in preparation are collossal fire portraits (size fifty by thirty feet) of the presidential candidates and of local celebrities. A grand naval combat (size of vessels one hundred and thirty feet), the Temple of Fame, at Athens, changing to the abode of Pluto, taken from designs in the British Museum, the bombardment of Alexandria, etc., will be shown.

The display will be given at the south end of the building on the space formerly occupied by the cotton field, and seats are in position capable of seating 15,000 people. A large iron mast is now being erected in the centre of the field, and will illuminate all the surrounding country. The lights on the same are so arranged that they can be immediately extinguished by a switch in the building, thus securing instant and perfect darkness for the fire works displays.

General Logan And The Negroes.

Chicago News.]

To dav John A. Logan plumes himself as the chosen leader of the Grand Army of the Republic, the devoted friend of the negro and a fit standard bearer of the republican party. Before the war he was a rabid Democrat, and a negro hater, and persecutor, and aided and abetted secession. Turning back the pages of the journals of the Illinois Legislature, it is found that he was the originator of the black laws which prevented the imigration of free negroes into this State. This law was passed February 12, 1853. The first section of this barbarous law provided for the indictment of any person or persons who should bring or cause to be brought into this State any negro or mulatto slave, whether said slave is set free or not. The true spirit of the law is best shown in the following section:

"Sec. 3. If any negro or mulatto, bond or free shall hereafter come into this state and remain ten days, with the evident intention of residing in the same, such negro or mulatto shall be deemed guilty of a big misdemeanor, and for the first offence shall be fined the sum of $50, to be recovered before any justice of the peace in the county where said negro or mulatto may by found. Said proceedings shall be in the name of the people of the State of Illinois and shall be tried by a jury of twelve men."

Succeeding sections provide that the fine shall be increased $50, over the last penalty inflicted for every successive conviction, and also that the negro or mulatto, bound or free, shall be sold at public auction "to any person or persons who will pay said fine or costs, for the shortest time." Informers were encouraged on the blood bound work by the promise of half the fine.

Address to the Democratic Party of Chilton County.

The general State and county election of the 4th is past, and our success is a matter of pride to the entire Democratic party of this county, as so nearly complete a success under such circumstances, shows indisputably to the Democracy of the State that we are in line for the general contest, soon to begin that will be national in its results.

For some years past, the idea or suggestion of a nominating convention has been received with a feeling of distrust and the movement has met with the opposition of so large a portion of the voters of the county, that it was for a while abandoned; and, indeed, it seemed for a time unnecessary as this was strictly a Democratic county, but by the influx within the past few years of a population so different in their political views, and becoming so formidable in numbers, and controlled as they are by a few whose interests are not in harmony with ours, there has of late arisen a necessity and an imperative one that demanded in the most urgent and unmistakable way, the holding of a county nominating convention.

Such a convention was held, and that it was conducted on principles unimpeachable, and for the welfare of the county, the result of the contest clearly proves, and we think no one will deny. That our success was so nearly complete in all its results encourages us to hope that all bickerings against such measures will be laid aside, and if such have been well founded in the past, adjustments and understandings may be reached that will conduce to perfect harmony.

We have now approaching the election for our immediate congressman and the national ticket, and it certainly behooves the Democratic party to keep thoroughly organized, follow up the recent victory and make more aggressive the fight in the coming contest.

Our success the past week should show the importance of unity and the power of concerted action, and with proper effort, we will continue to show to the Democracy of the State, that Chilton is and shall be a Democratic county.

Your executive committee heartily congratulates you on the success of so large a portion of the convention nominees and appeals to each and every member of the party to give his aid in the coming election.

For the county executive committee. S. T. BRITTLE, August 15, 1884. Chairman.

Baptist State Convention.

The proceedings have been received of the sixty-first annual session of the Baptist State Convention, recently in session, at Tuskaloosa. The next session will be held at Tuskegee in July, 1885.

There were delegates present from 54 associations; 69 churches; and 10 societies.

In the State missions work 70 men have been employed; and there have been received $9,517.09 for the year 1883-4; $1,769 for home missions, $8,299.63 for foreign missions.

A resolution was adopted that the pastor and deacon of the First Baptist Church at Montgomery appoint a committee, to be located there, of three ladies, who shall organize women's missionary societies in every church in the State as nearly as possible.

In the 59 associations represented there are 454 Sabbath schools, with 7,581 scholars and teachers.

The report on Home Missions shows 4,190 additions to the churches as the result of missionary labor for the year. The total received by the Board is $61,724.75.

The ordained ministers in connection with the Baptist State convention number 987.

His Contribution.

Tuskaloosa Gazette.]

Our friend, M. C. Thomas, has the contract for carrying the mail from the city to the depot. B. F. Jones has sent him a letter with a request to contribute something toward the election of Blaine and Logan. This is his reply:

Mr. B. F. JONES—Chairman Republican National Committee, No. 342 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Your letter of the 23d, soliciting contribution to campaign fund to aid in the election of Blaine and Logan to the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States fully noted. I regret to state that I am short of campaign currency just now, but hope to be able to do something for them in November next. The grave which, under the management of Cleveland and Hendricks, is being dug by the Democratic party, for the Blaine and Logan faction of the Republican party will be wide and deep, and I hope to contribute my mite to the filling up of that grave. I hope to mingle with the millions of honest Republicans and Democrats in that funeral, and cover up the old hulk so deep that no resurrection will ever reach it.

So mote it be.

M. C. THOMAS.

The Orphan's Home, located at Tuskegee, is in need of money and provisions to meet current expenses and to subsist thirty little children now under its roof. The Southern express company will forward all contributions free of charge.

Cullierville Dots.

Two U. S. Deputy Marshals came out and arrested several persons for getting timber off of public land.

Mr. Thomas DuBose, of Maplesville, with his interesting little family, paid Mrs. Crum a visit, the 16th inst. We surely enjoyed his visit to Cullierville.

Miss Ellen Crum has returned to Uniontown.

Miss Loula King has returned from Anniston.

Mr. Green, the Methodist preacher will not fill his next appointment at the Academy, until the evening of the 5th Sabbath.

Mrs. Crum has been sending new corn to mill for several weeks.
